STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY

PRAXIS INVESTIGATION

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I want to inform members of the Legislature of the results of an investigation relating to the theft of documents from the office of Praxis Corporation.

Members will recall that on June 24, 1977, I received a letter from the Solicitor General of Canada conveying information he had just received regarding the theft in December 1970 from the Praxis office on Huron Street. The information included suggestions that there were police officers in Toronto who had knowledge of the theft.

Earlier in 1977 the Metropolitan Toronto Police had concluded an investigation into allegations that members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police may have committed criminal offences in relation to Praxis Corporation. In a statement issued May 27 of last year the Metropolitan Toronto Police said: "The Metropolitan Toronto Police have investigated the allegations that the RCMP may have been involved in the fire and theft of documents at the Praxis Corporation, 373 Huron Street, December 18, 1970."

The report goes on: "As the result of the investigation, the Metropolitan Toronto Police are satisfied that no member of the RCMP or any agent of theirs was involved in the offence. With respect to the retention by the RCMP of the Praxis documents that were given to them, this aspect was investigated to see if it warranted the laying of possession charges or obstruction of justice.

"We are satisfied as a result of the investigation that there was sufficient justification on their part for not notifying our force. The documents were not retained by them for criminal purposes and there was no intention on their part to obstruct us in our investigations.

"Mr. Rickaby, York crown attorney, was consulted in this matter and kept posted and fully informed of our investigations. He has advised us that when all the circumstances were considered, it was his opinion that charges are not warranted and we agree with his findings.

"The RCMP has co-operated fully with us in this investigation."

Mr. Speaker, upon receipt of the letter from the Solicitor General of Canada, I wrote the same day to the chairman of the Ontario Police Commission asking him to review the letter. Shortly thereafter, following consultation involving the chairman of the Ontario Police Commission and senior officials in my ministry, it was decided, in light of the information contained in the letter from the Solicitor General of Canada, that there should be a further investigation to determine if there was any evidence to warrant the laying of any charge against any police officer or officers or any other person.

An investigator from the police commission and two senior criminal investigators from the Ontario Provincial Police were appointed to conduct that investigation. I received an interim report of that investigation in October and advised the Legislature on October 31 that it revealed no evidence of any involvement by any police officer in the break-in or arson. I informed the Legislature that I was awaiting the results of further investigation and a final report with respect to other aspects of the matter.

In December I received a further report from the OPP. After the receipt of each of these reports senior officials in my ministry met and reviewed the matter with the investigators in some considerable detail. A final report was received April 18, 1978.

Its conclusion is that there is no evidence that any police officer or person acting as an agent of any police officer or police force had anything to do with the break-in, arson or theft of documents belonging to Praxis Corporation at 373 Huron Street on December 18, 1970. The report also concluded that there are no grounds to lay charges against any person, arising out of the subsequent receipt and possession of Praxis documents by the RCMP.

The senior law officers of my ministry who have been consulted by the investigators during the course of this investigation agree with these conclusions. I am satisfied that there has been a full and proper investigation into the matters which were referred to me by the Solicitor General of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I have been advised that the OPP has turned over its file relating to this investigation to the investigative staff of the McDonald commission for whatever assistance it may be to them in carrying out their duties.

ORAL QUESTIONS

ARTS COUNCIL GRANTS

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question of the Minister of Culture and Recreation. Can the minister now answer the question which I put to him on May 11, as to whether or not a $25,000 grant for the Centre for Experimental Art and Communication, approved in April by the Ontario Arts Council, has in fact been sent to the Centre for Experimental Art and Communication? What is the minister's intention in this regard? He has been away, as we know, since then and I thought he might have a statement today about that.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, the grant to which reference is made has not been paid to the applicant. It is my understanding that the arts council has made it clear to the applicant that the entire council wants the opportunity to review that particular matter at its June meeting.

Mr. S. Smith: I am glad to hear that. A rather different tune today, isn't it?

Mr. Deans: Had time for reflection?

Mr. S. Smith: May I ask the minister, by way of supplementary, if he is prepared to make his own opinion known to the arts council or whether he prefers to wait for the arts council to decide this matter, or does he not feel that in a matter of this importance the opinion of the government should be very clear?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, there is no question that I have every intention to share my views with the officials of the arts council.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: The minister has been asked several times about this matter; both in relation to Strike and also in relation to the centre, but has not made his views or the government's views clear. Is the government prepared to assure the House that it will not see funds given to organizations which are advocating terrorist ends or supporting them?

Hon. Mr. Welch: There is no question in my mind. I have made that point quite clear. However, I do respect the fact that we have an independent agency which itself is now seized with this particular matter. I would be very surprised if they didn't share the same views, but I will at least give them the opportunity to meet in June to review that matter with the applicant.

Actually, they have been having some preliminary meetings with the applicant, and I certainly would not want to leave any confusion in anyone's mind as to where the minister or the government stands with respect to any group that advocates this type of behaviour. It is absolutely unacceptable to the minister or to the government.

Mr. S. Smith: What a difference a week makes.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I said that the last time I had my very friendly exchange with the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Peterson: What about that speech on censorship you made a week ago?

Mr. S. Smith: For my final supplementary, may I ask the minister whether he has now changed his mind since May 11 when he lectured me saying: "There is absolutely no connection between the application and that grant that is being discussed by the Leader of the Opposition"—which was the grant we were just talking about—"and the tabloid"? He said there was absolutely no connection at all. I take it the minister now has second thoughts on this matter.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think the Leader of the Opposition, in fairness, would recall that in the exchange I indicated the Ontario Arts Council had treated the application separately. There was one for the tabloid Strike, which had been submitted about a year ago. Then there was the annual review of what one might call the maintenance grant for the organization itself, that is, the Kensington Art Association.

Certainly on the information I had from the arts council, the arts council had made it quite clear to me they were treating those two applications quite separately. The Leader of the Opposition, in fairness, did point out, as has been pointed out since, that there was some similarity in some of the names of those who were seen as the members of boards of directors of the organizations, and certainly that hasn't gone unnoticed.

Mr. S. Smith: I can read it again.

HEALTH RECORDS

Mr. S. Smith: I'll ask a question of the Attorney General. What happened to him? He was here a second ago. Oh, there he is. He is not the sort of guy you lose track of.

Mr. Peterson: Are you getting legal advice from the member for Stormont-Dundas-Glen-garry (Mr. Villeneuve)?

Mr. Roy: He is telling you he likes the Judicature Act.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I was consulting with one of my very distinguished colleagues.

Mr. S. Smith: He's helping you with your backhand.

Interjection.

Mr. S. Smith: A question of the Attorney General: Going back now to the item of confidentiality of health records, the action of Centurion Investigations and the matters that have come to light in the Krever commission, the Attorney General will recall that during the Krever commission inquiry a certain person in St. Catharines had drawn to the attention of his office the practice, on at least one occasion, of trying to obtain information under false pretenses. I take it that what happened then was that a certain private investigation firm lost its licence as a consequence of the inquiry having been made to his office. Could the Attorney General explain to us why the firm to whose number the call was actually traced did not lose its licence but some other firm did? Could he explain the circumstances of this matter?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I'll attempt to explain the circumstances as best as I recall them at this moment. It came to my attention again when I read in one of the local newspapers that this information had apparently been communicated from St. Catharines to the Ministry of the Attorney General. Certainly some inference at least could be drawn from that story that the matter died there and nothing happened. On getting the report, I recalled at the time that we had turned it over to the OPP. That brought it back to my memory because, quite frankly, I had forgotten about it.

As a result of their investigation, charges were actually laid and a conviction was obtained against the principal of this particular investigating firm. I could give the member this information in greater detail later. I don't even recall the name now of the investigator or his firm, but I do know that he was successfully prosecuted and convicted. As a result of that prosecution, he lost his licence. As to the relationship between that firm and Centurion, there was a working relationship with them, but my recollection of the facts is that the information that we had and that the OPP were able to uncover didn't justify any action in addition to what did take place.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary—accepting that in matters of this complexity the minister might wish to provide the details a little later, which I would look forward to—apart from the question of why Centurion itself appears not to have been prosecuted, but rather the company which allegedly hired it, what else did the minister's office do when this came to light?

We now know that there were some hundreds of examples of this kind. Did the minister do anything to inform the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) that this practice was in place so that they might improve their own standards of confidentiality? Did the minister do anything to find out whether there were other examples, that this wasn't just an isolated case that just happened to occur in St. Catharines? Was there an inquiry made any more broadly than the one case?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: As I recall—the details are not totally clear in my mind now—it appeared at that time to be an isolated case and there was nothing from that investigation that would indicate that this was in fact a widespread practice. I just remind the members of the Legislature that it was the Minister of Health and myself who acceded to Mr. Justice Krever's request to broaden the terms of the inquiry so as to allow them to investigate as broadly as they have, which has obviously been done in the public interest.

My recollection of that particular set of circumstances is that there was nothing from the OPP investigation; and, of course, we are dealing with experienced police officers who would, on their own, be in a position to make a judgement as to whether or not further investigation was warranted. My recollection of the report that we have is that there was no such evidence to warrant a broader investigation at that time.

Mr. Cassidy: Since it will be some time before the commission's report is in fact delivered up to the Legislature and to the government, what steps is the Attorney General taking with the Ministry of Health and other ministries in order to ensure that some of the practices being revealed before that commission can be curbed and confidentiality can be improved over the period of time until the commission report is delivered?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think the Minister of Health has made it very clear as to efforts that he has taken to ensure that the confidentiality of these medical records will be secured—will be maintained; and certainly as these revelations occur, through the course of the Krever inquiry, it will alert the Minister of Health or, indeed, any other ministries that may be involved as to the care that must be taken.

But certainly I think the Ministry of Health, to my knowledge, has done everything that is humanly possible, as far as the minister is concerned, to secure the confidentiality of this information pending the outcome of the Krever commission.

CHAIN STORE DISCOUNTS

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Attorney General. In view of the fact that the standing resources development committee begins its hearing tomorrow on the two per cent kickback in the food industry, will the minister today table the information which my colleague from Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) requested last week and on which the minister based his judgement that there was no illegality in connection with those kickbacks?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't have the information to table today, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Will the minister tell us if he has any information, and if he will table the information or not, and when?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: We will be tabling the facts, upon which our opinion was based, before the end of the week.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question, surely the Attorney General could co-operate with the committee of the House and table the statement of facts promptly so that it will be available to the committee. Doesn't he think that is his obligation, or is he in fact saying that he didn't have any written statement of facts on the basis of which he prepared his opinion?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I have nothing to add to my answers, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, will the Attorney General undertake to table all of the information which he received from the Ministry of Agriculture and Food in connection with his decision and will he also undertake to get it before the committee before it begins its hearings tomorrow so that it can do an effective job and have that information which governs a major area of this inquiry?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I have nothing further to add that would be anything other than pure repetition of what I have responded to earlier, Mr. Speaker.

PHYSICIANS OPTING OUT OF OHIP

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health which arises from the announcement by the president of the Ontario Medical Association that he intends to withdraw from OHIP and raise his fees by the equivalent of $4 for an office visit and goodness knows how much for more high-priced items. Can the Minister of Health tell the House how many doctors have opted out of OHIP since the announcement of the separate OHIP and OMA schedule of fees?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, first of all it was not, to the best of my knowledge, an announcement as such from Dr. Vaill. He was phoned and asked a question. He wasn't making a grandstand of it.

Ms. Gigantes: He didn't say that?

Mr. McClellan: Very cute.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Secondly, the figures on the numbers serving notice—they have to give three months' notice—are being compiled. I have initial reports that they're being compiled and in an answer to a question from the member's colleague, the member for Oshawa (Mr. Breaugh) of a week or two ago, I said once they are compiled I'll report them.

Mr. Swart: It's one of those things where the minister has to keep a running total.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Can the minister assure the House that the ministry is monitoring those doctors leaving in order to ensure that no situations exist like the one that was described by my colleague, the member for Windsor-Riverside (Mr. Cooke), last week in which whole communities are being exposed to doctors who will only charge the OMA fees and will not be prepared to accept OHIP? If that monitoring is taking place, what action is the minister taking in those communities to ensure that patients have access to medical care at a price they can afford?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, yes, we are monitoring. If the member would look at my remarks of April 14 in answer to a question from my colleague, the member for York East (Mr. Elgie), I think, I indicated that we are in a position to monitor this mainly through OHIP, which is the body to which doctors must give notice of their intention either to opt into or opt out of the plan and to my own ministry's central office. I may say there is no evidence to date in these isolated incidents to indicate these moves are in any way deterring people unnecessarily from the health care system, that they are, in any way, suffering a lack of medical care because of it.

Mr. Cunningham: Supplementary: I'd like to ask the honourable minister if he's aware of a survey conducted by the Hamilton Academy of Medicine wherein it was revealed that 450 of their 834 members had made inquiries via letter or the telephone about leaving the province?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I seem to recall seeing a press report of that. It may, in fact, have been a statement made at the recent annual convention of the Ontario Medical Association. Inquiries are one thing; actually doing something about it is quite another.

Mr. Breugh: Supplementary: I'd like to ask the minister why it is taking so long to get the information before the House on the number of doctors who have served notice? What is the problem there? Secondly, he made reference in a couple of speeches as to what he might do if the majority, or a large number of doctors, opted out. Can he share his thoughts with us on that matter?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I never pegged my comments to a number of doctors. What I talked about was the basic principle of the universality of the system and whether there was any indication that that was being threatened. To date, and in the nine years that we've had the present system, during which time all doctors have had the right to opt out—

Mr. Cassidy: It is under threat now.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I'd like to finish, please—and they haven't. That is not the threat. As far as the number is concerned, I got the rough figures at the end of last week. It's being compiled into an answer and I will get them to the member.

Ms. Gigantes: What are they, roughly?

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, the minister has indicated he doesn't have the complete figures for the province of Ontario. Does he have them for Windsor and/or Essex county?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I said I have the initial report, the rough figures for the province. I don't have them broken down by county, region or district. It's being worked into an answer through the ministry.

Mr. Martel: Give us a ball-park figure.

Mr. Warner: The minister is totally inept.

Mr. Duksza: Supplementary: Does the minister intend allowing these insidious actions by the doctors—allowing a deterrent fee in our health system in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker, I didn't hear the question.

Mr. Duksza: Does the minister intend, by allowing physicians to opt out from the system by very insidious actions of this sort, to introduce a deterrent fee into the health system without taking action himself?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, as the honourable member knows, and if he will refer back to the budget of March 7, the principle of a province-wide profession-wide deterrent fee was considered by the government, by the Treasury in particular, and rejected. It is still a fact that since the beginning of the plan, any physician, himself included, has had the right to opt in or opt out of the plan. That has worked very well and I have no reason to believe at this point that it won't work in the future.

Mr. Warner: The system crumbles around you and you do nothing.

Mr. Foulds: I wonder if the minister could do two things for us: one, share with us the rough figures that he already has before him; and two, give us his definition of universality? Is that 75 per cent, 60 per cent or 100 per cent? In other words, at what point does he think the system will be threatened?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am not sure what the honourable member is referring to—75 per cent, 60 per cent of what, but—

Mr. Foulds: Of doctors, in.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell:—again, going back over a month to the exchanges in this chamber, I think it is far too premature and would be the height of speculation to try to pin what may be a problem to a specific number. We haven't had a problem in nine years. I am sure that as the anti-inflation controls come off we will see some aberrations in the pattern, but looking ahead to the longer term, I have no reason to believe that the basic principles of the system will be threatened, although I have made it clear repeatedly in this House and outside of this House that if we find that people are being deprived of services because of the whole system being changed beyond the authority of this House and this government, then we would step in, and the intervention would be tailored to the degree of the problem.

Mr. Cassidy: You ought to table the figures. Why don't you bring in the figures?

SCARBOROUGH CENTENARY HOSPITAL

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, on April 25, the hon. member for Scarborough-Ellesmere asked my colleague the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson) that Scarborough Centenary Hospital co-operate with the Metropolitan Toronto Police force in the investigation of the beating of a hospital employee by a patient and two visitors so that charges could be laid in this matter. I have spoken with the Minister of Labour on the subject and I would like to reply on our mutual behalf.

I understand that this question was precipitated by a letter written by a Mr. Edwards of the Canadian Union of Public Employees to Mr. Glover, administrator of the hospital, alleging that a number of serious incidents have occurred in the hospital psychiatric ward with regard to patients abusing the staff.

I have been advised that there was one incident recently on April 12 and one incident about six months ago. Such incidents are, however, very rare. All such incidents are brought to the attention of the hospital's administration for information and followup. The hospital does, of course, co-operate with the police in such investigations and I understand that the hospital's administration has not been contacted by the police in this case.

I would also like to point out to the honourable member that hospitals are required under regulation 729 of the Public Hospitals Act to have an accident prevention policy. This is to ensure the establishment of procedures designed to encourage a safe work environment, safe work practices and the prevention of accidents to patients, employees, professional staff and visitors.

The hospital must also provide for an accident prevention committee with a composition representing the administrative staff, the medical staff, the nursing staff and employees to whom the Labour Relations Act applies. This committee, under the regulation, must meet at least once every three months, report to the hospital board of governors on each meeting and make recommendations to the board concerning implementation of the accident prevention policy. Scarborough Centenary Hospital has such a committee, which it calls the occupation health and safety committee.

Mr. Warner: Supplementary: While I take it that the minister is exonerating the actions of the hospital, is he aware of a letter of April 26 in which the hospital administration says it doesn't wish to meet any longer with the union with respect to the health and safety committee? What leadership will the minister show to make sure that the health and safety committee will be set up properly and do its job properly so that Mr. Allan and other employees won't be the subject of attacks because they are understaffed?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The first thing I will do is have a look at the whole letter rather than listening to something taken out of context perhaps. To the best of my knowledge I am advised that the committee does exist—

Mr. Warner: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the minister is accusing me of taking this out of context.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am casting no aspersions. I am just saying the member has quoted one small part. I will take a look at the whole letter and I will confirm what I have been told; namely that the committee does exist, it does meet regularly and does consist of the people I referred to.

NATIVE PEOPLE'S CENTRE

Mrs. Campbell: I have a question of the Minister of Culture and Recreation. Can the minister confirm his intention to continue funding the unique Ahbenooyegug native people's centre for this year; and will he allow the youth workers' program at the centre to be supported by grants from his ministry?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes.

Mrs. Campbell: I wonder when we could have an indication of that, in view of the fact that this centre, which serves over 400 children and their families, has been closed down for three weeks because of lack of funding. Could he speak to his colleague, the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton), to try to get some permanent funding for it?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would be glad to look into that right away.

IMMUNIZATION

Mr. Breaugh: I have a new question for the Minister of Health. Recently the minister sent letters to all the private physicians and public health units indicating a shortage of vaccines in this province. Could he tell us how he rationalizes this indication to stop using the vaccines with his public information program asking that there be further, larger and better immunization programs?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am not sure of the letter the honourable member refers to, but I suspect it is one that refers to temporary shortages of certain vaccines and that was written in order to draw this to their attention.

Mr. Breaugh: Supplementary: Can the minister assure the House then that his ministry will have sufficient vaccines available to cover what is normally a rather increased usage, particularly in polio and tetanus shots, during the summer?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: To the best of our ability and dependent upon our suppliers, we always make sure of that.

HARWICH LANDFILL SITE

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of the Environment has the answer to a question asked previously.

Mr. Kerrio: It is about time.

Hon. Mr. McCague: The member for Kent-Elgin (Mr. McGuigan) asked me last week about the disposal site in Harwich township. His question related to why we issued a certificate to a new owner. I will explain that a little.

The Gore landfill site was previously licensed and owned by Mr. Vogler. After Mr. Gore purchased the site and prior to the renewal of a provisional certificate of approval, Mr. Gore fulfilled the following requirements: All motor vehicles on the site were moved to one area remote from public view to be either stored or removed. The entire site was cleaned up. A building was removed and proper berming was either constructed or is under construction. A series of ground-water monitoring wells was established around the site after consultation between Mr. Gore's consultants and the technical support section.

Mr. Gore provided a site operation plan which was acceptable to our ministry. This plan outlines the location of the garbage and the type of site development. In conjunction with the landfilling operation on this site, Mr. Gore is undertaking recycling operations for metals, glass and cardboard and is attempting to establish a subsurface, long-term compost operation.

Mr. McGuigan: Supplementary: The minister mentioned that they had been issued a provisional certificate of approval. Would he care to expand upon the meaning of "provisional" and just what it involves?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Gore would receive a certificate as soon as he lives up to the requirements. One thing that was mentioned was that the berm hasn't been completely constructed as yet.

LEGAL AID PLAN

Mr. Lawlor: A question to the Attorney General: Would the Attorney General care to comment upon that statement made fairly recently by Simcoe county Crown Attorney John Murphy under two counts: (a) with respect to Mr. Murphy's contention that legal aid as such is a licence to steal; and (b) that the public defender system would mean the end of the legal aid setup in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I was asked a similar question on Thursday by the member for Ottawa East.

Mr. Roy: The very same question.

Mr. Deans: Is the minister afraid of the bar? Is he afraid of the law society?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I certainly dissociated myself from the statement attributed to the local crown attorney, where it was reported that he was referring to the legal aid plan and lawyers who participated in it in the very uncomplimentary manner which you have just referred to.

Certainly, in so far as the public defender concept is being reviewed, the public defender concept is being reviewed. A proposal has not even been suggested, but it has been reviewed with a view to opening up such an office in Metropolitan Toronto because of the fact that Metro Toronto is a very large urban centre and people charged with criminal offences do have difficulties in knowing which lawyers have particular qualifications with respect to the undertaking of criminal defences.

The concept is being reviewed in that context—not to replace the legal aid plan but only to supplement it; not to interfere with the freedom of choice that accrues to each individual charged with a criminal offence to select a lawyer of his or her choice, but simply to give that citizen an additional alternative.

BAN ON ALCOHOL

Mr. Bradley: My question is for the Minister of Natural Resources.

In the light of the apparent success of the policy prohibiting alcohol in certain provincial parks during the past weekend and until June 19—successful in terms of less rowdiness and vandalism taking place—does the minister intend to extend that ban throughout the summer, because it's been so successful in stemming the tide, or does he intend to terminate it on the prescribed date of June 19?

While the minister is answering the question, would he share with the House the points of view brought forward in the reports made to him by his parks' superintendents on activities that took place this weekend?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The original date of June 18 was not arbitrarily chosen but because we don't normally have much trouble in the parks past that point in the summer, there appeared to be no reason to prohibit the use of alcohol in campsites past that point.

Whether I am prepared to extend it to another year, will depend on a couple of factors. An analysis of the real results of the weekend shows that everything seems to have gone well. Since I take the blame when things don't, I might as well take the credit when they do go well. Obviously, then, it was because of my decision.

Mr. T. P. Reid: You weren't in the park, were you?

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, you weren't in the park. That's the difference. It's the single ones we worry about, not us married fellows.

Mr. S. Smith: Thanks for the good weather anyway, Frank.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That, of course, is another thing I legislated.

Mr. Breithaupt: The weather is federal. Don't take credit for that.

Mr. Speaker: Just ignore the interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would think we really did add to the pleasure of the experience for many campers this weekend and, thank goodness, many people obeyed the law without confrontation, for which I thank them. It has shown what I have always believed, that enforcement, while important, isn't as important as a population willing to obey a law. That was done this weekend and as a result, the enjoyment for the people in this province in our parks was increased.

I would think our experiment appears to be successful and if it's successful we should extend it to another spring and let the summers continue as they always have. We can always adjust the policy if we have trouble.

Mr. Bradley: A supplementary question. Looking at it on a permanent basis, over the next several years, would the minister be prepared to look at classifying parks, for among other reasons, to allow alcoholic beverages to be used on a permanent basis and those which would not, so that the people of Ontario would have a choice when they're entering provincial parks as to whether those parks are going to allow alcohol or not?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I think that would be reasonable and would be something we could do if a final disposition were made. I suspect we'll have to watch though because the use of parks can shift pretty quickly. One year one park may have a problem and we may transfer it to another. This year that did not appear to happen. It could easily happen again. In so far as we're able to do so, I think we should give potential campers that information in advance.

Mr. di Santo: Is the minister aware that on the weekend of June 9 and 10 there is a very big gathering of divers in Brighton, Ontario? There is real concern because that is an occasion where many, many tourists are attracted, not only from Canada but from the United States. Is the minister willing to consider whether to lift the ban for that date?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I have already been asked to do so by a member of my own party and I can assure the member that's been given serious consideration. The purpose of the ban was to prevent those who did not want to be disturbed from being disturbed. I am told that whole park—Presqu'île Park—is taken over by the diving group. As such they would only have themselves to bother and I have recommended to my staff that we withdraw the ban on that weekend for that park.

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware that the shift he spoke of may already be taking place towards conservation authority parks? I'm not sure if that's within his jurisdiction or not, but would he look at extending that same protection against rowdiness to the conservation authority parks?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The conservation authority regulations are approved by my ministry but they are prepared by the individual conservation authorities in the province. I would think that if a conservation authority felt it had a particular problem then we would gladly consider it with them.

I'm not anxious to make all the parks in Ontario dry. I'm only anxious to protect serious campers who, they tell me, are 60 per cent of the people normally visiting our campsites most days of the week—families. If some isolated conservation authority campgrounds need this kind of protection, we would consider it.

I'm also told we shifted it to the private sector. That's a little too early to tell, but I have a great faith in the private sector; they don't depend upon a written regulation to enforce rules of conduct. If they don't like the way someone is acting, they don't have to have a statute or regulation to back them up. They can simply evict the person on the basis that they don't want them.

STANTON PIPES PLANT

Mr. Mackenzie: Can the Minister of Labour tell us where her safety people have been in the case of the Stanton Pipes plant in Hamilton and how we can have 248 lost-time accidents, including one death, in less than four years? Does she realize that a major reason for the strike there is the approach to safety and health conditions in the plant? With a list of horrors than can be documented and a management attitude that completely rejects safety and health matters, can the minister tell us what her inspectors had to say about this situation and what role she is willing to play in this strike?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I'm interested to hear the honourable member's personal opinion of the attitude of the employers and of the description and history of accidents in that plant—

Mr. Deans: How could he come to any other conclusion?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I have asked the occupational health and safety division for a full report—

Mr. Warner: You are going to defend them now.

Hon. B. Stephenson:—on their investigations of that plant which I intend to present to this House as the—

Mr. Renwick: You will find that the facts are identical with his opinion.

Hon. B. Stephenson:—member for Hamilton East had requested earlier. That is being in the process of being drawn up and will be presented to the House when it is ready.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I had asked the minister if she would play an immediate role in the strike. It's pretty difficult when a plant superintendent refuses to let even the police in, even after there has been a death in the plant. The superintendent also tells the workers that the safety conditions they are complaining about in the plant are none of their business. We had another serious accident just a matter of weeks ago—

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. Mackenzie:—and still no safety facilities as recommended by a coroner's jury. Surely this is the major issue in the strike and surely the minister should have a role to play in that strike.

Mr. Speaker: No question was asked.

The Minister of Correctional Services has the answer to a question asked previously.

COMMUNITY RESOURCE CENTRES

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, on May 1 I undertook to answer a question from the member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. G. I. Miller) concerning the placement of inmates at the time of the closing of the Glendale Adult Training Centre.

Of the last 40 inmates, nine chose to go to detention centres near their homes to complete their sentences. Eleven other inmates went to community resource centres; 13 went to the Brampton Adult Training Centre; six to the House of Concord and the remainder to Maplehurst and Burtch correctional centres.

Four of the inmates were from the Haldimand-Norfolk region. One of these went to the Burtch correctional centre, the second to Maplehurst correctional centre, the third to the Brampton adult training centre and the fourth was transferred to the Elgin-Middlesex detention centre and subsequently to a community resource centre for employment purposes.

There are currently 25 community resource centres in the province, with plans for 19 more to be opened this year, depending upon the availability of suitable property. One of these facilities is located in Brantford. Negotiations are under way for the establishment of a community resource centre in Simcoe and an additional one in Hamilton.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Could I ask a supplementary, Mr. Speaker? Are these privately operated community resource centres and what is the cost per inmate per operation? Does the minister have those figures?

Hon. Mr. Drea: All community resource centres are privately operated, with the exception of two which are native where we had them set up their own boards. They are run by private social agencies under contract to us on a per diem. The per diems depend upon the locality. On a ball park figure, they range from about $19 a day to about $23. I'll send the member a note if he wants the exact per diems on the places.

Mr. Bradley: Supplementary: When the minister is determining whether or not there will be a resource centre set up, from whom does he receive a report on the potential backup services such as psychiatric services and other services that might be available to those who would be using the community resource centres?

Hon. Mr. Drea: The proposals initially come forward from the private social agencies. Included in their proposal is the program they intend to have, along with the fact that the municipality has approved the zoning, the health and the fire. In conjunction with the program proposal the agency makes, a list of the ancillary services available in the particular area is usually included.

The difficulty in St. Catharines is there is an all-encompassing local bylaw which prohibits the use of a residence for criminals or inebriates. That is our difficulty in that particular area of the Niagara region.

PORT DOVER EROSION

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Natural Resources. Given the fact that a serious erosion problem along the east end of the outer basin at Port Dover has now reached the critical point and this erosion has seriously affected the structural stability of many homes along the lake shore, would the minister consider immediately investigating the area in order that some emergency funding may be provided to the residents living along this part of the shoreline?

I would also like to present a petition signed by 106 residents at this time.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the honourable member has asked me questions about this a number of times before and he knows that there have been only, I think, two mechanisms by which moneys were made available—money through shoreline protection programs through TEIGA, which was on loan, I think, to municipalities, rather than gifted. He's also aware, I believe, the federal government has been looking at problems of this nature. Currently there is no provincial program

I won't reject out of hand, though, his suggestion that we should look at it. I'd be glad to do that in case there is something that can be done either by us, but more likely by his friends in Ottawa.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Supplementary: Would the minister consider supporting 80 per cent funding, a program similar to that provided to the municipalities at this time?

Mr. Kerrio: Darcy has decided they're our friends.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I can't answer that with an affirmative answer. I would have to look at it carefully. It is an area that to date has not been considered to be one the province should be funding.

FEDERAL HOUSING PROPOSALS

Mr. Duksza: I have a question for the Minister of Housing with reference to the minister's answer to my question on May 12, when he stated unequivocally that Ontario has used up virtually every program that the federal government has put in place. Since I am dead certain that the minister could not possibly have intended to mislead the House, and I am equally certain that he is in total command of his ministry, can he explain how it happened that last year Ontario did not use up $46 million of federal money for public housing projects and $15.5 million of federal dollars allocated for co-op housing?

Mr. McClellan: That was John Rhodes's position.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, first of all, one of the problems we always have in trying to track down how much money the provincial government uses in relation to the federal program is that we work on two different fiscal years.

Mr. Duksza: The minister means he didn't know when he answered last time.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: The fact remains that, if one takes the overall sums of money that are allocated to Ontario, we have made complete use of the funding given to us by the federal government.

Mr. Warner: Oh, come on.

Mr. Cassidy: That's not what Ottawa says.

Mr. Duksza: Can the minister then say that he has used up the $46 million for non-profit housing and the $15.5 million allocated for co-op housing which his own documents state have not been used up? Could he explain to me where the discrepancy arises—with the minister's knowledge of it or actually the document his ministry has produced?

Mr. Pope: He just explained it.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: As far as the actual dollars and cents are concerned, I will be glad to get for the member a breakdown of the funding used over the last 12 to 18 months for both co-op and non-profit housing.

Mr. Samis: That is a non-answer.

Mr. Duksza: With reference to Friday's question, has the minister come to a position on federal proposals or does he intend to discuss, with the representatives of co-op housing, the impact of those disruptive proposals on that sector of housing? Thirdly, will the ministry continue to make its share of provincial money available, with the 10 per cent capital grant, as well as the rent supplement program?

Finally, will the minister, if necessary, pick up in time the financial responsibilities so far held by the federal government since the responsibility for housing basically is a provincial responsibility?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: As I said some time ago, the province has been reviewing some of the proposals offered by the federal government, and while there are certain aspects of the program that might offer some advantages, we are not certain in the field of co-op housing or nonprofit housing that those advantages are as good as the previous programs. I fully understand the situation that the co-ops and nonprofits are in.

I would like to inform this House that, as the Minister of Housing for Ontario, I have invited my colleagues from the other nine provinces to meet in Toronto on June 14 with us and Mr. Ouellet to go over all his proposals, after our officials have met in Quebec City on June 1, to try and resolve some of the difficulties that exist.

Mr. Foulds: Why doesn't the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) do that about the auto pact?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I do not intend this afternoon, in any way, shape or form, to be dragged into trying to answer the problems or the programs any more explicitly than that until we have had a further review with the federal minister to find out exactly what he means by some of his programs and what the long-range benefits happen to be for Ontario and the other provinces across Canada.

NUCLEAR FUEL

Mr. J. Reed: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy. I wonder if the minister could tell us whether Ontario Hydro is participating with Atomic Energy of Canada Limited in the experimental reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel, at least to the extent of supplying spent fuel bundles to AECL? Could he also tell the House just how much material has been shipped and how much is planned to be shipped in the near future?

Is the minister aware that Canada's position officially has been that it would not engage in any approach towards reprocessing until receipt of the report called The International Nuclear Fuel Cycle Evaluation, which is not yet in the hands of the government of Canada?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker, I have a cold.

Mr. Cassidy: You were freezing in the dark, eh?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The whole question of irradiated fuel is not only an important question, it is the most important question facing Ontario Hydro, Atomic Energy of Canada and Canadians generally.

Mr. Deans: Are you going to reply or not?

Mr. Cassidy: How pompous can you get for a Tuesday afternoon?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It is a question that my ministry has very actively and systematically been exploring and discussing.

Mr. Deans: I think your cold has blocked up your brain.

Mr. Breaugh: Never saw Jim Taylor wandering around like that.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It is a question that we will be making an announcement on within the next two weeks. We are still hoping that at that time we will be making a joint announcement with the federal government. But if the federal government is not ready to make a joint announcement with the province of Ontario—and our position is clear on this one—we shall make the announcement on our own. But by June 5 we shall be making an announcement on irradiated fuel which will also deal with the question of reprocessing and so on.

Mr. J. Reed: Supplementary: Will the minister in that announcement tell the people of Ontario how much irradiated fuel has gone to AECL for trial reprocessing to this point and how much is planned to go in the future? In other words, will he let the people of Ontario know to just what degree of magnitude reprocessing is being carried on in Ontario now? Would the minister perhaps go one step further and reassure the people by telling them what safeguards are undertaken with this unprecedented kind of transportation to ensure that there is going to be no spillage of this very highly toxic product?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I can assure this House, and the honourable member opposite, that Atomic Energy of Canada, Ontario Hydro and our government are meeting completely the conditions laid down by the two-year moratorium that Canada agreed to enter, which expires in July of next year, on the whole question of reprocessing of fuel.

At this time I can assure the House that none of this is going on. As I said earlier in my previous comments, this is a very serious, important and crucial question for all Canadians and particularly the people of Ontario.

Mr. Peterson: That is why he asked it.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It is one that my ministry has been giving top priority to over the last few months and, as I said earlier, by June 5, no later, we shall be making an announcement either alone or jointly with the federal government and its agency, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: I wonder if the minister could tell us if this projected statement that he has now informed us of will include Ontario's attitude and position with regard to nuclear waste disposal and the whole question of storage, which is of course part of the question of the reprocessing; and particularly how that will affect the projected site, if any, that may be placed in northwestern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Yes. Our statement will deal very much with the whole question of irradiated fuel, its temporary storage and its eventual disposal.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Can the minister now give us an assurance that the storage of the irradiated fuel underground, in whatever geological formation, is a completely safe process and that there is no danger of escape into the atmosphere and environment where it is buried?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We have been advised by scientists that there are techniques available which are very definitely safe. However, again this is a matter that we will be discussing and reporting in more detail, following our statement on June 5.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary: I would like to ask the minister if he is aware of the report done in Britain by Sir Brian Flowers which discussed the question of waste disposal and determined that, in fact, the technology was not yet safe?

Mr. Foulds: Same thing happened in a meeting at Thunder Bay three weeks ago.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I am very well aware of that report. I am also aware of other reports by scientists of perhaps a higher stature that say there have been safe techniques developed for the safe and permanent storage of irradiated fuel.

Mr. Laughren: Like the Minister of Labour, you are always looking for a way out.

Mr. Peterson: To the minister: Is the minister also going to be dealing in his announcement of June 5 with the problem of mine tailings, which some people feel is even more serious than the question of irradiated fuel?

Is he going to be dealing with that waste disposal problem also?

[3:00]

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It is not the intention to deal with the question of mine tailings in that announcement. I believe this is a question which is more directly related to the Ministry of the Environment.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: Has the minister been made aware of an announcement by the member for Fort William (Mr. Hennessy) that he would be calling on the Premier (Mr. Davis) and presumably this present minister for a select committee to look into the waste disposal problem in northwestern Ontario? Has that been discussed at cabinet and has such a request gone forward?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The member will be getting some of the answers to that question.

Mr. Warner: When?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: All I can tell him is that by no later than June 5, this government will be making a detailed statement. We hope it will be a joint statement with the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to deal with the modus operandi and with the procedures of the four parties—

Mr. Kerrio: Consistent, that's one thing.

Hon. Mr. Baetz:—which have some responsibility in this whole question of irradiated fuel disposal, namely, the federal government and its agency, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, and the provincial government and our agency, Ontario Hydro. We will be setting forth what we regard as our position on a modus operandi as to how to deal with this very important subject.

Mr. Warner: Modus operandi! You should resign.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We are not trying to duck the issue. This is a responsibility and we are dealing with it.

Mr. Wildman: You are just trying to dispose of it.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Beaches-Woodbine with a new question.

Mr. J. Reed: Supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: We've had six supplementaries already, and the minister said he will be making a major announcement on June 5.

FLECK MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Ms. Bryden: I have a question of the Solicitor General. When I visited the Fleck plant last Friday along with two of my colleagues, I observed 15 or 20 OPP cars on the site with at least four officers in each car. Can the Solicitor General tell us exactly how many OPP men were assigned to the Fleck plant that day to handle about 90 women strikers and a number of other women who joined their legal picket line, a peaceful picket line, as a demonstration of support for what appears to be a very legitimate request for bargaining in good faith on a first contract? Can he also tell us what was the estimated cost of this policing overkill on that day?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: To answer the last question first, I haven't got the information as to that particular day. My information is that there were about 20 police officers in the area of the park that day.

Mr. Wildman: There were more like 70.

Mr. Warner: Make it 70.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: As the member knows, there was some notice of a large picket line that day and that there were going to be workers joining the picket line from other centres in Ontario. In order to keep the park open and to keep some semblance of order, that is why there was an increased number of police officers that day. I think the honourable member will agree that there was really no problem. One of the problems that exist in that area when there are picketers from outside—

Mr. Wildman: There were 70 men there.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —is that they are not picketing right directly in front of the plant but they are closing off the main road into the park, which means that workers at other plants cannot get to their jobs.

Mr. Laughren: The minister knows the problem. It's called Fleck.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: So it's a matter of traffic direction and keeping the road open, not intimidating the workers.

Mr. Cassidy: That is absolutely not a problem at all.

Ms. Gigantes: That wasn't happening at all.

Ms. Bryden: Supplementary: When the Solicitor General obtains the figures I requested, will he also obtain a cumulative total of the police costs in connection with this strike? Will he also obtain a report as to whether there was any closing off of the main entrances on that day last Friday?

Mr. Cassidy: Including their regular salaries.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes.

Mr. Warner: It could have been avoided if the Minister of Labour were doing her job. They could have settled it long ago.

Mr. M. Davidson: Supplementary: Can the minister confirm the story which appeared in the press that the estimated costs of policing that strike to this point is in excess of half a million dollars? Can he also tell us why it is necessary to provide accommodation in places like Holiday Inns for police officers being assigned to that strike, when there are far less expensive accommodations available in that area?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I think the honourable member has probably been influenced by some recent press summaries of the situation rather than what is going on on a day-to-day basis.

The question of accommodation at the Holiday Inn—this was in respect to the one incident, the one day, when Mr. McDermott attended at the plant when there was in the vicinity of 400 police officers in that area.

Mr. Renwick: A low ratio.

An hon. member: Isn't that dangerous?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: If the member will recall, it was expected that there would be about 1,500 workers from outside that area that day. The 400 police officers were not in the park. They were in the area only in case they were required.

Now, the member asked me for the total cost. I believe he used something over half a million dollars. That figure is in excess of what I have. I understand it is something under that. It is something closer to about $400,000.

Mr. Deans: That makes it okay?

Mr. Lupusella: The minister should be ashamed.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: That, in fact, I believe, includes the normal salaries and overtime pay which was paid to many of those police officers. However, I have up to date figures, figures which are given to me daily and I would be happy to share them with the honourable member.

Mr. Deans: How is the minister doing on his investigation of organized crime?

Mr. Breithaupt: Where these particular costs have been incurred, why would the Solicitor General not have investigated the possible use of Camp Ipperwash, for example, as a location for these police to be accommodated in order to have minimal expenses in this very difficult situation?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: We are using Camp Ipperwash.

Mr. Speaker: The oral question period has expired.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

ECONOMIC IMPACT DISCLOSURE ACT

Mr. Peterson moved first reading of Bill 93, An Act respecting the Economic and Fiscal Impact of Government Policies.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Peterson: Very briefly, the purpose of the bill is to require the preparation and disclosure of fiscal and economic studies for all legislative measures proposed by government.

ONTARIO WATER RESOURCES AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Germa moved first reading of Bill 94, An Act to amend the Ontario Water Resources Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Germa: The purpose of the bill is to prohibit mining activity in bodies of water that serve or are likely to serve as sources of community drinking water. The bill provides for the issue of permits to authorize mining activities that are in the public interest. Mining activity undertaken without the authority of a licence is constituted as an offence.

CHAIN STORE DISCOUNTS

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, just before the orders of the day I would like to refer to Hansard of May 18, Thursday afternoon. On page 2632 I used the word "continued" twice in answering a question or point of privilege by the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon). I meant to say, at that point in time, "the practice had been discontinued." So the reading is now correct and I'll read it to the members of the House.

"I was not aware of the letter written to the Honourable William Stewart in 1972, but I have been sent a note saying that the prompt payment discount was discontinued at that point in time . . ."

Further in my answer I used the same word "continued" and it should be the word "discontinued."

I was unable to have the changes made in Hansard but have requested the change be made or corrected.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

YORK MUNICIPAL HYDRO-ELECTRIC SERVICE ACT

Hon. Mr. Baetz moved second reading of Bill 66, An Act to provide for Municipal Hydro-Electric Service in the Regional Municipality of York.

Mr. Speaker: Does the honourable minister have a statement?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have a brief statement.

This bill establishes a new municipal hydro-electric commission for each of the eight area municipalities in the Regional Municipality of York. The nine existing commissions are to be dissolved. The bill is substantially similar to previous restructuring acts in Waterloo, Peel and Oxford regions.

No later than the first day of January 1979 all customers within the towns of Aurora, Markham, Newmarket, Richmond Hill and Vaughan will be supplied by the new commissions. Customers in the town of Whitechurch-Stouffville and the townships of East Gwillimbury, Georgina and King who are currently served directly by Ontario Hydro will continue to be served by Hydro. New hydro commissions will serve the remaining customers in Georgina, King and Whitechurch-Stouffville.

This legislation has been reviewed by the provincial steering committee, Ontario Hydro, TEIGA and the Ministry of Energy in consultation with the local study team, the Association of Major Power Consumers in Ontario, the Ontario Municipal Electric Association and the Provincial-Municipal Liaison Committee. The provisions of the bill, in general, have been agreed upon by these groups.

On behalf of this government, I wish to commend the York local study team, the steering committee, their staff and Ontario Hydro for their efforts during the past three years in helping to establish a more rational and responsive electrical power service for the people of York.

Mr. Stong: Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of Bill 66. It represents the accumulation of many years work by the steering committee set up in the regional municipality of York and headed by Mr. Sam Cook.

Basically, this bill provides for localized hydro commissions and, in that sense, it is a step in the right direction from what may have been termed as regional government, or regional hydro. With this bill, although there may be some argument with respect to efficiency, what we lose in efficiency by going to localized government we make up economically and in accountability. For this bill, Mr. Speaker, provides among other things for elected officials to the local hydro commissions, thereby ensuring accountability to the people, especially those who are paying the bills.

The bill likewise covers several other issues. It covers the makeup of commissions and how the commissions are going to come forward and what's going to happen in the transition and interim period. It likewise provides for an arbitration process whereby, in the event of disagreement between a local municipality and Ontario Hydro, or one municipality and another, arbitration provisions are provided.

I must say that in this particular aspect of the bill, when this matter gets into committee I will be moving an amendment to the arbitration clause of this bill. The arbitration, as it is set up, provides that the arbitration committee is the final recourse, and there is no recourse of appeal. Some of the municipalities have expressed concern about the fact that there is no appeal of the decision of the arbitrator.

The bill also covers transfer of personnel, and all its ramifications, including the pensions, sick leave and the life insurance, and there are no difficulties with respect to that part of the bill. But the bill does get into an area of transfer of assets and in that area the way the bill is written constitutes a very inequitable and unfair position with respect to those commissions or those communities that must transfer assets one from the other. The same is true as between Ontario Hydro and some of the commissions.

This bill sets up localized commissions to conform to the boundaries of the towns and municipalities as they were constituted with the institution of regional government. This is a good thing as far as having local commissions is concerned, but in extending the commissions that are already in existence to the boundaries as they were set by regional government, there are difficulties that arise. There is a particular difficulty between the towns of Richmond Hill and Vaughan and more particularly with respect to commissions of those respective towns. There are assets that must be transferred from one town to the other in terms of the commission and ownership by those commissions.

But the biggest problem, arises out of the fact that in the cases of Richmond Hill, Markham and I believe Newmarket, arrangements and agreements and contracts were entered into between these towns and developers. Before they were permitted to develop a tract of land the developers had to agree to supply all of the services and plants and they paid for those services and plants. In so far as they paid for them, the money was collected by the town. For instance in the case of Richmond Hill, the town, pursuant to a subdivision agreement, collected payments from the developer. Those payments were then transferred to the town of Vaughan and Vaughan then initiated and constituted plants and services.

The wording of this bill as it has been offered by the minister provides for the transfer of certain assets. It refers to original cost. It refers to the fact that, for instance in the case of the town of Richmond Hill, where the commission would have to purchase assets from the hydro commission of Vaughan, those assets would be purchased at the original cost less some of the accumulated depreciation as well as equity.

But the real problem is that the town of Vaughan or the commission of Vaughan did not pay for those assets in the first place. The developer paid for them. In so far as the developer paid for those assets, why should those users or consumers in the town of Richmond Hill have to pay again for the assets with this takeover? This takeover works an unfair advantage to the town of Vaughan in this particular case.

Those ratepayers in the Baif subdivision particularly have paid for those assets, for the physical plant, when they purchased their home. The bill was added by the developer to the purchase price of the home. Now if Richmond Hill has to buy those assets from the town of Vaughan because Richmond Hill has taken over that area pursuant to regional government and pursuant to this bill, Richmond Hill would be required by this bill to purchase those assets from the town of Vaughan.

The same problem arises with respect to Markham and Newmarket in so far as Ontario Hydro also is selling those physical plants and services to the individual commissions. Again, subdividers could not subdivide without having paid for the assets. Arrangements were entered into between the town of Markham, for instance, and subdividers, in a subdivision contract or agreement, whereby those physical assets and plants and services be paid for. In so far as they were paid for, Ontario Hydro is now, in turning those assets over to the commission for the town of Markham, charging the town of Markham for what it did not have to pay initially.

So when this matter gets to committee, I will be offering an amendment to section 4(8) and likewise to section 4(10) dealing with the unfair and inequitous situation that arises thereunder.

Mr. J. Reed: Did you say inequitous or iniquitous?

Mr. Stong: Iniquitous. I must say that in principle, in so far as this bill sets up localized commissions I can support it and it will receive support from this side of the House, with the exception that no town, no commission ought to pay twice for assets and no consumer or ratepayer should have to undergo the cost of purchasing something for which he has already paid. With those exceptions, we will be supporting this bill.

Mr. Swart: We too in this party support this bill, and subject to some of the reservations mentioned by the member for York Centre we support this bill with some enthusiasm. I think this system which has evolved in determining the type of structure for a region is desirable and is a good system. The results are good.

I would have to point out, though, that we have almost come a full cycle in the last six years with regard to the whole principle of restructuring, and at considerable cost to the people of Ontario. The minister and other members of this House will know that Task Force Hydro in its December 14, 1972, report recommended in all the restructured areas that Hydro be at the regional or at the upper tier level. This was confirmed by the Hogg report some two or three years later, and then modified by a statement of the minister in February 11, 1975, so that it could either be at the upper tier or at the lower tier.

This was further modified by the member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. J. A. Taylor)—am I correct in that?—in July 1977. At that time I went after him and his government rather hard, not so much for what the end result was but the fact of all this money spent for all these studies which had been done over this period of time. Now we have come back to almost exactly the same type of structure and a slightly different method of accomplishing it as we had prior to 1969 or 1970. However, because it does provide the optimum in local decision making, I am very much prepared to support this bill.

I suppose it is possible that there would have been some restructuring done at the regional level, or at the upper tier, if the government had not put in regional governments which are so thoroughly discredited that now wherever the study teams are going around in the areas and talk about the upper tier, all the members of the public who attend those meetings, and usually the members of the local council, invariably say, "Look what regional government has done to this area; look at the cost of regional government. We don't want that to happen with our hydro."

As a result, when it might have worked at the upper tier level, because it would be a single tier level, regional government has so discredited the principle that no longer are the public or the local councils willing to accept or even consider Hydro at the upper tier level.

This bill provides considerable flexibility for the local councils. You can have an appointed or elected commission, Mr. Speaker, that's really left to the council after the first term is up. I guess the desire on the part of the drafters of the legislation is that it should be an elected commission because the council has to take some action if they want to make it an appointed commission. They have to pass the necessary bylaw, at least that flexibility is left there with the local council. They have the flexibility of determining whether it shall be a three or a five-man commission after that first interim period.

The town of Whitchurch-Stouffville and the townships of Georgina and King have the option to go all the way in at a later date or back out and turn it over to Hydro. There is considerable flexibility there.

It seems to me that this bill, like the bills for the restructuring in the other counties and regions which have been dealt with, provides security for the employees so they won't find themselves out of a job or find themselves with the loss of fringe benefits to which they have been entitled.

The member for York Centre raised a point with regard to the bill—perhaps we don't want to discuss it here at great length—but I understand there may be some difference of opinion between him and the member for York North (Mr. Hodgson) on parts of his proposals for amendments.

I want to listen to the arguments put forth by both because the member for York Centre seems to make a lot of sense in his argument that Richmond Hill should not have to pay Vaughan or anyone else for certain facilities, or assets that were provided by developers. That makes sense. If these were provided in lieu of the lot payments which are sometimes made to a municipality, and the township of Vaughan didn't charge those assets, then we have to take a rather close look at that too, if it was in lieu of something else.

In the end I suppose I will be the arbitrator of this dispute in this party so I'll listen very closely to the arguments put forth by both sides and by the minister to determine whether the amendment should be supported or not.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: That's right, Mel. Common sense will prevail.

Mr. Stong: The minister's been shafted.

Mr. Swart: Subject to those qualifications which are minor with regard to the bill, we will be supporting the bill in principle and reserving the decision on the amendments until we hear the full arguments on both sides of the House.

Mr. Hodgson: I would like to rise in support of Bill 66. Just so there's no misunderstanding—and I get rambling on—forget what the last member said about the difference between me and the member for York Centre. I look at a much broader picture as far as restructuring Hydro in the region of York. I'm looking at the whole region, not just at Richmond Hill and Vaughan.

Mr. Stong: How about Markham and Newmarket?

Mr. Roy: That's not your usual style, Bill.

Mr. Hodgson: The member for York Centre and I have discussed it and he knows where I stand. I hope he'll concede that we look at a bill that is in the interest of all the people and all the users in the region of York. There are certain—

Mr. Roy: Maybe we can get the former minister to talk about that.

Mr. Swart: You got to answer his argument though.

Mr. Stong: At one time everybody had to purchase from Ontario Hydro.

Mr. Hodgson: —aspects of the proposal the member for York Centre alluded to, not the localised part but the overall view of the region of York. I can give very serious consideration to supporting it.

Wherever there has been assets paid for by a developer I don't think Ontario Hydro is entitled to charge them back to the local municipality. I can't perceive myself supporting anything that would cause a home owner to pay twice for the same service. If these were forgotten in former bills, as the old saying goes, two wrongs never make a right. This may be a good time to correct that. I'm sure that if the home owners in the other areas knew that they had paid for it twice, there would be—

[3:30]

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Hell to pay.

Mr. Hodgson: Right.

Mr. Roy: The member can't go wrong; he should just support the member for York Centre.

Mr. Hodgson: I would like to thank at this time the former Minister of Energy, the member for Prince Edward-Lennox, for the work that he had done on the restructuring of Hydro in the region of York prior to our present minister coming in.

Mr. Samis: Don't forget some of the other things he said about Hydro.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Stong: Just stick to the issue here, Bill.

Mr. J. Reed: He was right, too.

Mr. Hodgson: But I would just like to review for a moment what has gone into York restructuring, what local input. The local study committee formed in 1972 put in long hours and a lot of days in restructuring. They went to every municipality, explained what they would like to see in the bill and they got approval from eight municipalities out of the nine to go ahead with restructuring.

After the bill was printed I sent out a copy to the five municipalities that I represent and asked for comments. I got comments from one municipality—the township of King. They would like to see—and I can see the reasoning behind it—the present commission they have now in King City extended over the whole of King township. King township is the third largest rural municipality in the province. It would break the township to extend it over the whole of the area at once, they they have asked if they could enlarge on the King City commission some time in the future. But they haven't outlined how much they would like it enlarged in the first year or the second year—or an outline at all; I don't think they're ready for this.

Although I have sympathy for King in this regard, I couldn't support at this present time taking on a four-mile square area around King City, and then two or three years later taking on another four-mile square area. You have to be fair with suppliers of hydro; you have to put your transformers in place for a certain size area of certain expected population, it would be very difficult otherwise. However, some of those things may be overcome when this bill is reviewed. It can be reviewed two or three years from now.

This is the major point I want to bring out. I would ask for the support of this House and ask for your very sincere consideration of any amendment which is going to delay this bill for any length of time. It has been seven and a half years since the region of York was formed. Taking Newmarket alone—north of Davis Drive was all brought in from East Gwillimbury township—there are 3,000 homes north of Davis Drive paying the same taxes as everybody else in the whole town of Newmarket and here they have been paying a different rate for hydro. They wanted it three or four years ago. I brought it to the attention of the Ministry of Energy at that time, but this is the first indication that it's going to be something that everyone in Newmarket—paying municipal taxes or anything else—is going to be treated the same as the old consumers prior to regional government.

Again, I would ask every member to support this bill. I hope we would be able to clean it up. The minister indicated he was not going into committee today, but maybe we can get into committee next Tuesday and clean this thing up once and for all. Thank you very much.

Mr. J. Reed: Mr. Speaker, I think there are a couple of observations that one must make here. First of all, the member for York Centre (Mr. Stong) has done it again. He has established himself very quickly as being one of the great legislative men in the whole Legislature, and certainly in our caucus. We've come to depend on his astute observation of bills. This is no exception, because I think in perusing this bill he has made a discovery that heretofore had not been made. It shows that legislators, like anybody else, are fallible. But the one thing we do have is the advantage of having this forum, certainly in this time of minority government, where we can actually take a very objective look at a bill to see if there is something wrong with it. It doesn't necessarily affect the principle of the bill but it helps to improve it.

I would request at this time that the Minister of Energy peruse the previous bills to find out if the same condition, the same foible that exists in this bill now, does not exist in the others. Maybe we should undertake to review those and to correct them.

I have supported this thrust since I have been Energy critic, because I feel that one of the accomplishments of this kind of legislation is that, in its own small way, it is gradually getting Ontario Hydro out of the retail business. I think that's a very laudable move.

When Ontario Hydro was first created, one of the good things that happened was that it was able to provide electric power to rural Ontario; and because it was a crown corporation it was able to provide the service probably as a matter of public policy and probably at least more quickly than could have been done in other ways. But now I believe, having had a chance to look at the price we are paying for rural electrification, that it is becoming more obvious, at least in many areas, that the rural consumer under the old system is perhaps paying more than he needs to be paying for his electric power service. The contract shows up when you come to a street and on one side you have a municipal service and on the other side you have a rural service. Watch out for the tremendous disparity between the two.

We do know that in a rural area, of course, it takes a longer connection between one service entrance and another, it takes a little more to maintain the wires and so on, but I do think that the minister would do well to review the whole process of rural electrification and perhaps this kind of bill or the intent of this bill might well apply to other areas of Ontario.

I think also that this bill, by the increase in size and probably the improved ability of the municipality to grasp its utility, may well give incentive for more municipalities to undertake generation of their own electric power.

We have some municipalities in Ontario that have hydraulic facilities and are doing this now. The city of Orillia, I believe, is now installing its third generating plant, and the municipality of Parry Sound just recently has upgraded a plant it has been operating for many years.

But there are other municipalities that had their own generating facilities which they let go as the price of power went down. I don't know if many of us can remember far enough back that as the years went by the price of power was decreasing in Ontario. But now the whole picture has changed and it would seem relevant to at least some municipalities if they seriously considered generating their own power again.

One of the wonderful things about having a power facility within a municipality is that it provides a levelling device going over that wonderful peak at 5:50 p.m., which is a very costly thing for the consumer. I see that as another plus factor as the principles of these bills start to apply in the larger sense to Ontario.

Certainly it's with enthusiasm that I support the principle of this bill and I look forward to the amendment of my colleague from York Centre.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: Just very briefly, I wish, of course, to rise in support of the principle of this bill. It was some years, as the member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart) mentioned, before there ever was a first bill introduced in this House for the restructuring of public utilities commissions in this province.

I think it was the need for flexibility and the confidence in the good judgement of the local people, the need for self-determination and local autonomy at the basic municipal level that had to be acknowledged and recognized before we could be flexible enough and see a bill brought forward in this House that gave that jurisdiction to the local utilities commission.

There has been a growing gap, I think a growing inequity, throughout Ontario in regard to the rural users and the urban users of electricity. As I support this bill and thank my colleague, the member for York North (Mr. Hodgson), for his kind remarks, I also express concern that as more customers of Ontario Hydro become customers of the local utilities there are fewer rural customers to take up the ever increasing financial burden to be borne by the rural customers.

I think that was maybe the concern alluded to by the member for Halton-Burlington (Mr. J. Reed), because with every increase in hydro rates—and an increase of nearly 10 per cent has been indicated again for this year—we see that gap widen. The gap presently is probably 36 per cent higher for rural customers than urban customers on an average in Ontario. We can see that gap widen.

I think probably the urge on the part of many communities to get on with restructuring is to get into a category of consumption that would lessen their financial load. With their own utilities commissions they can accomplish that, get out of the rural structure into the urban structure and, therefore, the rates will be lower.

I think we must never forget the burden of the rural ratepayer. I think that implicit in this bill is an obligation on the part of government to ensure that the cost to the rural customer be reviewed as well and to make sure that that problem is addressed squarely, as an issue and as an ever increasing financial burden on the rural people of Ontario. Again, I urge flexibility in the approach of restructuring across the province. I think the various parts of Ontario, the varying geography and the peoples, the municipalities, all invite differences. I think we must accommodate those differences and I think we must be flexible in our approach to ensure that the best interests of the local people are served.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there any other member wishing to participate? If not, the honourable minister.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, as we have indicated, we do not wish to pass this on to committee today and, therefore, my remarks will be very brief. I would only like to say that I was delighted to hear the honourable member for Welland-Thorold tell us that he is going to be listening to the debate with an open mind and heart.

We are sure that wisdom and good judgement will prevail in this particular subject matter as it so often does.

[3:45]

Mr. J. Reed: Does the minister have any particular bias as to which way?

Mr. Swart: Any other bias?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We are on the side of truth, so we are rather confident as we go into the debate, when we get to committee.

I must say that I found it rather interesting that I believe the four speakers who addressed themselves to this subject all touched on this question of greater equity between the rural Ontario hydro subscribers and those in the structured municipalities. Of course, one of the results of the proposed amendment would be to further exacerbate the difference that now exists between the rural subscriber and the municipality.

Mr. Stong: Nonsense, nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We will be able to demonstrate that when we get to debate, but that certainly would be one of the by-products. Of course, also, I was glad that the member for Halton-Burlington did recognize his colleague had a great deal of wisdom in this and paid tribute to him. I would do the same thing.

I would, of course, remind both of them that there are other distinguished members of the Liberal caucus from Kitchener-Waterloo, from the city of Waterloo, from Kitchener, from Kitchener-Wilmot, who have supported the principle of this kind of legislation without the amendment, so I would hope that in the party of the loyal opposition over there—

Mr. J. Reed: I pointed out I missed it too.

Hon. Mr. Baetz:—that there too good judgement and wisdom will prevail.

Mr. Stong: Are you afraid of it?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I do hope, as I know all of us here do, that we will be able to sort out what differences exist, and that we will enact this piece of legislation which I know all members here have been fighting for and striving for for so very long, including my good colleague from York North.

We will look forward to a very well informed debate when we get into committee.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

CROSSROADS CHRISTIAN COMMUNICATIONS INCORPORATED ACT

Mr. Lawlor moved second reading of Bill Pr3, An Act respecting Crossroads Christian Communications Incorporated.

Motion agreed to.

The bill was also given third reading on motion.

HILLPORT MOTORS LIMITED

Mr. J. A. Taylor, on behalf of Mr. Hennessy, moved second reading of Bill Pr16, an Act to revive Hillport Motors Limited.

Motion agreed to.

The bill was also given third reading on motion.

TOWNSHIP OF TILBURY WEST

Mr. Ruston moved second reading of Bill Pr20, an Act respecting the Township of Tilbury West.

Motion agreed to.

The bill was also given third reading on motion.

House in committee of the whole.

JUDICATURE ACT

House in committee on Bill 71, An Act to amend the Judicature Act.

Mr. Chairman: Honourable Mr. McMurtry moves that the reprinted version of Bill 71 be the one that is considered by the committee.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Very briefly, following the last discussion of this bill in the House, I have had the benefit of the views of the Justice critics of the two parties opposite. I would like to say for the record I appreciate very much their very constructive and helpful involvement in bringing about a bill which is going to be the best possible bill at this point in time in the province's history, particularly as this is such important landmark legislation. I think their participation again reflects the spirit of co-operation that has prevailed during the whole debate in relation to this legislation. I would like to express my appreciation for their assistance and co-operation and indicate that I will be moving, at the appropriate time, an amendment to the bill as reprinted, which has been fully discussed with the Justice critics opposite.

Mr. Roy: My colleague, the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell), who is the justice critic, and I have worked together on proposing certain amendments; I have had the benefit of her counsel in these suggestions. Some of the suggestions were made on second reading. If I may, I will address myself to the reprinted version which has some of the amendments that were suggested earlier.

In response to the comments of the Attorney General about having presented the original Bill 71 and our having brought forward certain suggestions and having had some amendments prepared and accepted by the Attorney General, I would like to say that the exercise has been one of co-operation between the three parties involved and the Attorney General. I would like to say to my colleagues who were involved in that process, including the Justice critic for the NDP, that we have had occasion to sit together and review some of the proposed amendments.

For instance, the original bill had suggested that the Lieutenant Governor in Council would designate the counties. We felt that some of these counties should be designated in the legislation right now and that there was no reason these counties not be designated in view of the fact that experiments in our criminal courts and some in our family courts had been under way and had been working out well.

I had suggested, and I will put it on the record, that possibly what we should have, in all these counties, is all the courts in those counties covered. The matter was discussed with the Attorney General, with my colleague the Justice critic of our party and the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor), the critic for the NDP party. There are practical problems. This is why we have arrived at a compromise.

Mr. Foulds: It's either NDP or ND Party. P stands for party.

Mr. Roy: I'm sorry.

Mr. Renwick: It's PC Party.

Mr. Roy: In any event, hopefully I will not be more nasty when I describe the party to my left than I have been in just mixing up one particular letter.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Be natural.

Mr. Roy: I just want to be conciliatory.

Mr. Haggerty: You are never nasty.

Mr. Roy: As the Premier (Mr. Davis) often says, I don't want in any way to be provocative.

In any event, in a spirit of co-operation and with the realization there are practical problems in enacting this legislation, we agreed we must proceed cautiously and practically. Hopefully, when we proceed in those areas in a spirit of co-operation and in a non-partisan fashion, I think we advance the whole situation for Franco-Ontarians in this province. I think that is the most effective way of doing it.

There is no use in three parties taking hard lines and then sitting on their high horses, debating which has the best position. In the meantime, the Franco-Ontarians don't obtain any services.

We have full knowledge of the fact we would like to go further, but we understand there are practical problems. In view of the fact the Attorney General has shown his good faith, first of all by presenting the legislation, and secondly by acceding to some of our amendments, we give him full marks and we are saying to him, "Okay, we have faith in the process, let's proceed in designating these courts as expeditiously as we can."

Hopefully that is the way we will proceed, because surely the good faith must be there in view of the fact the bill has been presented and he has accepted some of the amendments.

That is the spirit of co-operation that exists in attempting to have this legislation work. The counties are designated under the bill and we are in full agreement with this. Hopefully, the Attorney General will proceed in designating the courts involved.

We are cognizant there is a federal bill implicated here, Bill C-42 which is presently before the federal House.

Possibly, Mr. Chairman, before I get into this—

Mr. Foulds: You gave this guy a QC; no wonder he is so chummy.

Mr. Roy: I like to call the shots as I see them; I can get involved in the partisan jabs as well as anyone, but when credit is due credit is due. We acted in a spirit of co-operation and we have arrived at what I consider to be good legislation, so why not put in on the record? I am not afraid that somebody might say I got too cosy or I was too compromising. That is the spirit we should have in this House in minority government and I am not afraid that somebody might say I got too cosy or I was too compromising. That is the spirit we should have in this House in minority government and I am not apologizing for anything.

Mr. Chairman, I just wonder if you want to proceed? I have other comments involved with section 1, but do you want to proceed with subsections because I have some other comments to make?

These are actually the only comments I have to make in relation to subsection 2. I have other comments, but I am ready to accede to the directions of the chair and limit my comments to subsection 2.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The member for Lakeshore? Before you start, is subsection 1 acceptable? Is subsection 1 carried? Are you dealing with the bill in general or with one of the subsections?

Mr. Lawlor: The Attorney General made a brief preliminary statement arising out of certain negotiations or conversations we had, and my friend from the Liberal Party did likewise.

I would like to make such a brief statement.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I will allow that.

Mr. Lawlor: I won't prolong it. Again, it is a rather novel thing for some of us in the House to go into a back room and sit down and thrash over the various possibilities of amending legislation. Certainly in this instance it saves a great deal of the time of this House.

As things stood when we started, it would have taken two or two and a half hours, and now the Attorney General has accepted those matters which were most urgent and most commendable at this time and has embodied them in this legislation. We all should give ourselves a little credit for that in saving the time of this House.

It is defective, still, in two areas. In the geographical scope there are certain areas of the province where a fairly substantial French-speaking population is extant and whose needs cannot be presently met for very obvious and practical reasons.

Secondly, with respect to a range of legal matters—including motions which, again, impracticality would supervene—there aren't enough lawyers who speak both languages, there are not enough judges to handle both languages. I would trust that this legislation, like other matters that come before this House, would fructify and bloom, and that in time to come the scope of this particular kind of act will broaden out. It will be the job of the opposition, in any event, to continue to press in these areas. But, as I see it, we've done pretty much the best we can do, subject to some small changes that will be forthcoming.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Can we now deal with subsection 1 of the bill?

On section 1:

Subsection 1 agreed to.

On subsection 2:

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I always leave it to my colleague the member for Lakeshore, and my friend the member for Ottawa East to deal with substantial matters. I would commend, however, the following amendment to the consideration of the committee.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Renwick moves that the figure "4," where it appears in subsection 2 of section 127, as amended in subsection 2 of section 1 of Bill 71, be changed to "3."

Motion agreed to.

Subsection 2, as amended, agreed to.

On subsection 3:

Mr. Roy: In relation to subsection 3, I'd like to say this: We would have liked to see in the legislation the designation of certain parts of counties. As the member for Lake-shore has mentioned, there are certain areas of the province where there is still a substantial number of francophones who will not have the benefit of this legislation because they are located in just one part of the county.

I can think of the district of Renfrew, for instance, where in most of the county there are no francophones except in the city of—my God, my colleague from Renfrew North (Mr. Conway) will never forgive me for forgetting the name of Pembroke. As we progress with this legislation, we'll have to look seriously at certain parts of counties and at certain courts within those parts of counties.

As I said earlier, I would have liked to have seen the proclamation of all courts. But as has been mentioned by the member for Lakeshore, the problem is the practical one that we don't have staff available; we don't have lawyers; we don't have judges in many areas who are able to give the service that is intended under this bill. Hopefully, we'll proceed gradually in those areas.

One of the things mentioned by the member for Lakeshore is the lack of bilingual lawyers in this province. In the province of Quebec most everybody, including English-speaking counsel, can understand French, and those who are French-speaking can understand English. Unfortunately, that is not the case in Ontario. So, we have to proceed gradually in those areas.

One of the other things I was going to mention was that I was concerned, and I talked about it on second reading, that two things exist. One is when you have a situation where for all intents and purposes it would be feasible to either have the trial or hearing in French or bilingually and if that takes place in a county that is not designated that there be provisions whereby you bring in a French speaking judge. In some circumstances, that wouldn't be difficult because in some courts—for instance the Supreme Court and even in county and provincial courts—judges are travelling anyway. They are exchanging from one county to the next. That provision could be available. An alternative would be permission to have a change of venue; to change the site of the trial from that undesignated county into a designated area.

Of course, one of the things we discussed, as the Attorney General and my colleagues here know, is the fact, that first of all, in the criminal trial, there are provisions under Bill C-42 for a change of venue. There are provisions, Mr. Chairman, under that bill whereby counsel can make an application for a change of venue. That takes care of the criminal side of it. On the civil side, of course, the rules of practice now allow for application for a change of venue, but I don't think there has ever been any precedent or any application made for a change of venue on the basis of language. Although, I suppose overall when one looks at the balance of probabilities, or you look at where it will be in the best interest, where it will facilitate all the parties involved that may be the situation.

On that basis, I was quite prepared, having in mind again the practical difficulties involved, not to press that amendment any further at this time. I hope this is something we will see through the workings of the legislation. We will see how the process works and how we can, through practice, and through experience, see to it that from a practical point of view we can enhance the workings of this bill.

Although I personally would have liked to see the legislation go further, I realize the practical problems. I realize as well that in our discussions there are provisions available now, certainly in the criminal field, under Bill C-42 and there are similar provisions for a change of venue under the rules of practice. On that basis I feel, as agreed with the Attorney General, we would not press our amendment any further.

Mr. Lawlor: The area of venue has caused and will cause problems. That's one of the nub points to be worked out in future legislation.

Under section 462, subsection 2, of the federal legislation, it says that "the court shall order that the trial of an accused be held in a territorial division in the same province other than that in which the offence would otherwise be tried if an order has been made that the accused be tried before a justice of the peace, magistrate, judge, or judge and jury who speak the official language of Canada, that is the language of the accused or the official language of Canada in which the accused can best give testimony or both official languages and such order cannot be conveniently complied with in the territorial division in which the offence would otherwise be tried." That, as the member has said, covers the criminal aspect of the matter.

I think the civil aspect is likely to prove far more tricky, particularly in Ontario itself, as the provincial court judges are very often appointed on the basis of their capability with languages and particularly in and around the areas that are specifically mentioned in the previous subsection. Trials will have to be experimented with in a sense.

If the preliminary is taken partly in one language and partly in the other; and during the trial itself some witnesses speak one language and some witnesses speak another; and the documentation that has to be used is some in one language and some in another; the backward and forward movement in translation, and in the tenor and posing of the questions, et cetera, are, for a period of time, going to cause a very considerable adjustment or readjustment in the thinking of counsel and the court itself, as these numerous switches and problems work themselves out. That is why we are leaving that whole field fallow, in order to test its potentiality. All of us will be watching with great care and with high hopes, not just as an accommodation but as a heartfelt recognition of the needs in this province and as a gesture to the province of Quebec.

We have been castigated because of our stance and a certain obtuseness to this date. As we move into a greater largess, I suppose we ought to be given a little recognition and credit too.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Subsections 3 to 5, inclusive, carried? Carried.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moves that subsection 6, as contained in section 1 of the bill, be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"(6) Where an application is made under subsection 4 and in addition to a direction made thereunder, the court may direct

"(a) that the hearing or any part of the hearing be in the French language if in the opinion of the court the hearing or part can be so conducted effectually and

"(b) that subsection 7 apply to oral evidence given in examinations for discovery or in any other pre-hearing stage of the proceeding."

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I would like to comment again on what has been said earlier. We very much appreciate the co-operation of the Attorney General in bringing forward this amendment. We could not understand why any oral evidence of a pre-trial nature could not be dealt with in the same way as oral evidence at a trial. The Attorney General was very quick to accept that position.

I personally hope the day may come when depositions and pleadings may be dealt with in the same way. However, we accept the fact that there are very real and practical problems at this point in time and we commend the Attorney General for bringing this amendment forward. We support it.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, at an earlier time we had some misgivings as to language but they were clarified in the revised version. The application to the court, whether by one route or another under subsection 5, designates a trial either before a judge touching the language issue or before a judge and jury, was to speak both the English and French languages; this is a broadening out of that basic principle in a double way. It recognizes that the hearing may be in French only if, as the wording here goes, it "can be so conducted effectually," and then goes on to pre-trial matters to the extent, as we said previously, that these can be accommodated at this time.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, if I may, I would like to make a few very brief comments on this amendment as moved by the Attorney General.

On second reading of the bill we originally had two misgivings about the section. The first one was that there was far too much discretion given under the original subsection in that it allowed the judge to have discretion. First of all, the bill read that court "may" allow a hearing if the court felt the hearing or part of it could "be so conducted effectually." The Attorney General has responded to that original concern by making an amendment in the reprinted version. We readily accept that and we feel it clarifies a serious concern we had about the provisions of subsection 6.

The other one was that we felt the bill did not go far enough in the sense that it limited itself, basically, to a hearing. Our concern is that the Judicature Act talks about writs, pleadings and proceedings and in this case, we're only talking about proceedings. We understand that again there is a practical problem involved.

My original idea on this was to suggest to the Attorney General that he allow pleadings, parts of proceedings and proceedings themselves to be in French or bilingually. But on further reflection and in discussions with members of the bar, because I know something of how the law operates, doing a bit on the side here and there, there was a realization there are indeed practical problems in having pleadings in French. To give you an example, if you have a French-speaking litigant who drafts his statement of claim in French and sends it off to the defendant in English, and he wants to be represented by English-speaking counsel, there may be a problem in them understanding exactly what the claim is all about. In that sense, it would be unfair.

I asked members of the bar in the province of Quebec how they solved that problem, and of course, they have no problem because most everybody understands both languages, including the English-speaking counsel. In Ontario, 95 per cent of the counsel, I would think, do not understand the French language so there is that practical problem.

The reverse side of the coin is that you have a litigant who has his pleadings in English being examined in the French language on his pleadings, and that can cause a problem. But in discussing it with my colleagues and the Attorney General, we felt that what we are trying to accomplish is to give services to the litigant himself, and this is where we opted again for the practical, efficient side of having a piece of legislation which is workable, which is flexible and a piece of legislation which doesn't cause undue hardship on one side.

Of course if it does cause hardship, that's when we get into trouble. We get a lot of headlines in newspapers, we get a lot of people saying their rights are being jeopardized in this province and in attempting to right one wrong, you may be causing others. So we were extremely careful in that area and we opted for the fact that we should put emphasis on all evidence given by a litigant.

This is where the Attorney General has moved the amendment which we fully support, the fact that in certain pre-trial discoveries or other types of pre-trial motions or proceedings where the litigant is asked to give oral evidence, he should be afforded an opportunity, if the trial is going to be in French in the first place, to be able to speak in French. If you have the transcript of a discovery which has taken place in English and you are cross-examining the individual at trial in French, there can be communication problems.

The way the amendment is drafted, where it reads that it will apply to oral evidence given in an examination for discovery or in a pre-hearing stage of the proceedings, under the circumstances at this time, is about the most practical way of proceeding. Certainly it is a step forward. It's a practical approach, because in some counties like Prescott and Russell where counsel are mostly French, and 85 per cent of the people speak French, you get involved in a discovery and again, you've got to go through an interpreter. That can be annoying, not only to the litigant involved, but to counsel. In those circumstances the amendment as proposed by the Attorney General is a good one and we fully support it.

I would hate to leave comments on this legislation without saying a few words in French to the francophones in this province for whom this bill is intended.

Alors si je pouvais, Monsieur le président, mes collègues veulent que j'aille lentement, pour qu'ils puissent me comprendre un peu. Je voudrais dire tout simplement, Monsieur le président, que, comme de raison, j'avais des amendements qui allaient plus loin que les amendements qui ont été adoptés. Mais nous ne sommes pas sans comprendre que dans ce genre de législation il y a certainement des difficultés pratiques quand on s'embarque surtout dans les questions de loi et que les Franco-Ontariens sont dispersés ici et là.

Certainement on a des difficultés premièrement d'avoir des avocats qui parlent français, d'avoir des juges, d'avoir du personnel de Cour, et cetera. Alors, dans ces conditions, on a accepté le bill et les amendements dans un esprit de coopération. Les trois partis ont travaillé ensemble pour essayer d'avoir un bill qui soit aussi pratique que possible dans les circonstances. Alors, Monsieur le président, nous avons ici une situation où, premièrement, le Procureur Général a accepté nos amendements au sous-article 2, où il a accepté de désigner immédiatement les comtés en question; deuxièmement, il a accepté un autre amendement qui clarifiait une situation dans le sous-article 6 où la loi n'était pas très claire, ou encore, il y avait peut-être trop de flexibilité laissée aux juges qui président dans un procès.

Cette situation a été clarifiée pour que ce soit très clair qu'une fois que le juge décide qu'un procès, ou qu'une procédure peut se faire en français, que ce soit tout simplement la seule décision. Une fois qu'il décide que c'est pratique de le faire, qu'il le fasse et qu'il n'y ait pas plus de discrétion que cela.

Finalement, Monsieur le président, nous croyons que la discrétion du juge n'est pas limitée seulement au procès comme tel, mais que cela aurait dû aller aux procédures préliminaires et, dans ces conditions, nous croyons que pour l'enquête, l'examen au préalable et toute autre procédure, un individu qui se présente devant la plus haute Cour, que ce soit la Civile ou la Criminelle, doit avoir la possibilité, si son procès est en français, d'avoir les procédures préliminaires également en français.

Comme j'ai dit plus tôt, Monsieur le président, nous aurions aimé aller plus loin mais nous nous rendons compte que nous nous heurtons à des difficultés pratiques. Nous sommes convaincus de toute façon qu'il faut s'entendre, et que Monsieur le Procureur de la Couronne va suivre cette situation de très près.

Nous avons travaillé, les trois partis ensemble, de bonne foi, et nous faisons confiance au Procureur Général. Nous allons suivre la situation de très près et, à mesure qu'on verra du progrès, on pourra, premièrement, élargir la législation pour couvrir le plus grand nombre possible de Franco-Ontariens, et, deuxièmement, avoir aussi une législation qui pourra couvrir le plus grand nombre possible de procédures. Alors vraiment, Monsieur le président, je crois que dans les circonstances, le Bill 71 va aussi loin qu'il est pratiquement possible pour le moment.

On subsection 7:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. McMurtry moves that subsection 7 as contained in section 1 of the bill be amended by striking out "for the purposes of appeal" at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof "for all purposes."

Mr. Sargent: Say it in French.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: One of these days I will.

Subsection 7, as amended, agreed to.

Subsections 8 and 9 agreed to.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. Roy: Could I just make one comment on section 2? Under Bill C-42 full jurisdiction is left to the courts as to application of the provisions. I only refer to this because originally, back in 1968 when the Official Languages Act was brought into force by the then Attorney General, John Turner, certain concessions had been made to the provinces, and they would not move to enforce any of the provisions of the Official Languages Act to apply. I take it that that is what is meant by section 462.3 of Bill C-42, the federal bill.

So again, this is evidence of co-operation between the province and the federal government. Hopefully, even the provisions of Bill C-42 will be dependent upon the initiatives taken in this province. I have the assurance of the Attorney General that we are going to look at this very closely as we proceed. In fact, he can take credit for having presented his legislation before they did at the federal level. I'll even go further and say that we will give you marks for initiating—in fact, prodding the federal government to bring in the provisions of Bill C-42.

So, I just make these comments, Mr. Chairman, again as a reflection of the importance of co-operation between parties not only at one level but at both levels. All of us can take pride in the fact that in spite of some radicals who may be moving one way, the leadership of this country is moving in the right direction to give true meaning to the spirit of partnership of this country.

Bill 71, as amended, reported.

CORONERS ACT

Hon. Mr. Kerr moved second reading of Bill 86, An Act to amend the Coroners Act, 1972.

Mr. Stong: In rising in support of Bill 86, I would like to say to the minister that we are, on this side of the House, prepared to accept the recommendations as set out in the amendment to the Coroners Act.

However, I am wondering if the Solicitor General could answer at least two inquiries arising out of this act.

One of them involves the principle contained in section 3 of the act which limits the operation of that section and the calling of an inquest into the death of a worker as a result of an accident occurring in the course of his employment at or in a mine. I am wondering why the Solicitor General limited these accidents to those occasioned in a mine? Why not in an excavation such as a ditch where the walls cave in, or in the excavation of a building where the walls in the basement cave in, or any other type of excavation? Why is it limited to work in a mine rather than in other places where accidents can be occasioned by walls caving in and crushing the worker?

I assume the intent of this section is to cause an inquiry where death results as a result of a cave-in. Surely a cave-in or any type of accident such as that can occur, not only in a mine but in a pit or quarry, for instance, or in an excavation. Why has the Solicitor General limited it to a mine?

With respect to the other sections of the act, they are an improvement and I have no hesitation supporting them in principle. I would refer to section 11, however.

I know that section 11 of the bill is intended to clarify the words "criminal offence." It limits the coroner being able to call a person charged with a criminal offence at an inquest. However, it does go on to say that a person charged with a criminal offence under the Criminal Code is a competent witness, but not a compellable witness.

There are two stages, as I envisage it. There could be criminal charges arising out of an incident which call for an inquiry under this act as well. Should that criminal charge be completed, I see no reason why a person cannot be not only competent but compellable at such an inquiry, providing the criminal charges have been completed. We know that the purport of this section is to protect the rights of an individual who is charged with a criminal offence before the courts and is subject to our judicial system. However, if the criminal charge has been disposed of, why is it not possible to call that individual, convicted or acquitted, at an inquest, providing his position at the trial would not be prejudiced?

Perhaps there could be problems with appeal. However, if there are no appeals in progress and the criminal charges have been disposed of, for instance, by way of plea of guilty or something of that nature, why isn't that witness not only a competent witness but a compellable witness?

The other sections deal with notifying the crown and substitution of barristers or solicitors for the crown attorney in hearing an inquest. There is no problem with them. The bill in principle, as it has been offered, does improve the Coroners Act and to that extent I have no problem supporting it. But I do ask the Solicitor General to clarify those two areas that I have alluded to.

Mr. Lupusella: I am going to be brief in my remarks. I welcome those particular amendments introduced by the Solicitor General. As has been stated in the compendium of background material sent to us by the Solicitor General, there are a number of housekeeping amendments proposed to update the legislation.

As I stated before, those amendments are welcome, even though I am not quite pleased about particular amendments because I share the concern raised by the member for York Centre in relation to section 3 (4a). I have to complain and raise this particular criticism because in previous estimates of the Solicitor General I raised the point that all work places in the province of Ontario, defined through the statutory legislation presently existing in the province of Ontario, should have been included in that particular bill. It seems the Solicitor General didn't pay attention to that.

I also raise the concern that in those amendments the Solicitor General was supposed to include a particular clause in order that the coroner's office would present an annual report in the Legislature in order that all MPPs of the province of Ontario would have an opportunity to study the recommendations and find out the cause of problems based on the fact that the inquest was called in the first place. It seems that the Solicitor General had a lot of time to incorporate those particular concerns raised by me during the previous estimates.

By the way, in relation to section 3 4(a), I raised this particular concern just 10 days ago before the Solicitor General presented those amendments to the Coroners Act in the Legislature. Again, he didn't pay attention. I would like to compliment the member for York Centre who raised this concern because on the job accidents are quite a serious problem in this province. To give you an overview of the particular situation, in 1977 we had 226 on the job fatalities in Ontario.

The Solicitor General might reply to this criticism by stating it is not in his jurisdiction to solve problems involving work places in the province of Ontario. And I might agree with him. But if we are going to use the Coroners Act to find the causes of those fatalities I think we can also use other branches of this government to tackle seriously the problem of having a safe place to work.

In 1976 we had 297 fatalities here in Ontario. Nobody knows the causes. We know workers are dying but we don't really know who or what is responsible for their deaths. I think we can utilize those coroners' inquests to find out the causes of the workers' deaths. This government at least can act according to those particular recommendations if this government is really serious about fighting on the job fatalities in the province. I hope the Solicitor General and members of the official opposition party are going to accept the principles of these amendments.

I was pleased when I saw section 3 4(a) the clause that calls an inquest for those deaths taking place in the mining. Again, we have frightening figures. In 1977 we had 35 fatalities in the mines and in 1976 we had 54. The Solicitor General has an obligation, not just to those workers dying in the mines, but one which should be extended to all workers in the province. Even though in effect we are dealing with dead workers and that's not pleasant, we must have a commitment to find the origin of the problem that caused the deaths of those workers. At the very least government can act on the coroners' recommendations in order to plug loopholes in regulations so the fatality rate will decrease, instead of us receiving these frightening figures from one year to another.

Another concern of mine is those workers dying on farms. In 1977 there were seven fatalities and in 1976 there were 10. My particular concern is that if we incorporate in that section the principle that any work place defined by the statutory legislation presently existing in Ontario, at least we are going to have an opportunity to have an overall evaluation about those problems causing deaths in the province of Ontario. It is not a pleasant phenomenon and the government should make an effort. I do not buy any statement coming from the Solicitor General that this does not fall under his jurisdiction but is under the Minister of Labour's jurisdiction and he doesn't want to deal with this particular problem.

He has to show to workers in the province the obligation to study the causes in order that loopholes which exist in the work place will be covered once and for all. I hope the Liberal members will also support those amendments, so at least we will reduce those fatalities which take place from year to year.

The other point, which I raised before, is why isn't the coroner introducing an annual report to the Legislature? We are not concerned about a particular investigation which took place and which sometimes includes confidential material. We are interested in a report which emphasizes the recommendations coming out of those investigations.

I hope the Solicitor General is going to consider this item, which has been brought to his attention in previous estimates.

I am now talking about section 15(2). I will read it for your own information: "The coroner shall direct a constable to select from a list of names of persons provided under subsection 2 of section 28 five persons who in his opinion are suitable to serve as jurors at an inquest and the constable shall summons them to attend the inquest at a time and place appointed."

I am not convinced that it should be a constable who has the duty of appointing the jurors to be part of the coroner's inquest. It is against the principle of the judicial process which exists in Ontario. I would like to have a practical explanation from the Solicitor General why the person who has to appoint the jurors at an inquest should be a constable.

With this I am going to conclude my remarks. We will emphasize other principles on clause by clause discussion.

Mrs. Campbell: I just have a few brief remarks.

I am sorry the Solicitor General did not see fit to give some opening remarks in the introduction of this bill because there are some areas which give me some concern, although, as my colleague has said, generally we accept the bill as it is before us.

One of the things I do find very difficult to accept is that portion of the bill which relates specifically to those who die as a result of an accident in a mine. It may be that my experience in mining is very limited, but I do have experience in some of those areas in an urban setting where unfortunate deaths occur.

It does seem to me it is wrong to limit that section, as it is limited, unless there is some explanation for it of which I'm totally unaware. For instance, in an urban setting we have many work places where tragic deaths occur. Off the top of my head I'm thinking of underground or tunnel workers. To me, if a death occurs in any place of business which is the result of an accident at the work place, it does seem it goes without saying there should be an investigation as to the cause.

I've tried to understand why this limitation is here. I don't think the death of a workman can be parcelled out as of greater importance because it happens in one industry or another. The death of a workman is the death of a workman and has very tremendous repercussions in the community, not just for the family but right across the community. I for one am very anxious to hear the Solicitor General's explanation of this particular section in this bill.

I don't wish to labour my remarks beyond that point because I would hope this bill will indeed go to committee where it can have a very thorough discussion and where amendments can appropriately be made.

It seems so awful to say in any piece of legislation that, "where a worker dies as the result of an accident at or in a mine but not including a pit or quarry . . ." The death is the reality and the cause of it is a reality. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, as I said before, in the time I have been involved in public life some of the greatest difficulties of this nature have been for those engaged in tunnel work. I am sure there will be more of that kind of work.

I would invite the Solicitor General to explain the thinking of his ministry and of himself, in so far as this particular section is concerned. I would like to see that section embrace all of those who die as a result of an accident in their place of employment. That is my view of the situation.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Everywhere? Insurance offices, civil service, everywhere?

Mrs. Campbell: Let me say this, Mr. Speaker, if someone dies as a result of an accident, whether it's on the highway or whether it's at the place of business, the death is something which ought to be investigated because perhaps there is something badly wrong with the work place from which we could learn to prevent other such tragedies. That, surely, is what this is all about.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: You are talking about an inquest in every case?

Mrs. Campbell: I'm talking about an inquest where a worker dies as a result of an accident occurring in the course of his employment.

I presume the minister is going to say to me that if somebody unfortunately slips on a banana peel in a store, perhaps there shouldn't be an inquest. Perhaps there should be one to find out just what kind of negligence there may have been when somebody slipped on a banana peel.

You know, I am getting a little worried in this country that there seem to be people who can kill with impunity and others we can't kill at all with impunity. There are people who can die in an accident whose deaths automatically must be investigated. But the lives of those people have the same importance.

The lives of people in Toronto who are working in a tunnel and who die as a result of the collapse of a tunnel are just as important—and I say this with the greatest respect to my friends from the north—as a miner who dies as a result of an accident in a mine. I don't denigrate the miner, either, when I say that. I just don't understand the thinking, and I would like to have clarification of that particular point.

Mr. Bounsall: I rise to make the same points which the previous speaker and my colleague the member for Dovercourt have made with respect to that important point in an otherwise forward-looking bill. Whenever a worker dies as a result of an accident a coroner's inquest should automatically and immediately follow. In justice one cannot discriminate between accidents in the work place.

The minister now clearly knows, as a result of the short debate we have already had today, that both opposition parties have this point of view and no doubt will be supportive of an amendment in this regard. It is very reasonable that a bill dealing with coroners' inquests into accidental death, this narrow sense only of a worker in a mine should be extended to all accidental deaths of workers at any work place.

One would think that, having already sensed this, the minister would be looking for reasons to agree rather than, as he did in the course of the last speaker's remarks, become defensive about the whole matter and toss out comments such as, "Do you mean in an office building?" Well, sure. If there's been an accidental death of a worker in that office building that should be the subject of a coroner's inquest without any argument at all.

If I could refer to section 7 of this amendment bill, which deals with section 17, subsections (b) and (c) of the act, any coroner worth his or her salt, looking at subsection (b) would do an inquest anyway.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Is the word "salt" in the bill?

Mr. Bounsall: This is the section which deals with the coroner having regard to if and when he will order an inquest. Subsection (b) says, "the desirability of the public being fully informed of the circumstances of the death through an inquest." I can't conceive of the public not being, not only just interested but needing to be informed of—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: You leave that discretion with the coroner.

Mr. Bounsall: —not why the person died at his safe place of employment, whatever that may be, but the circumstances that gave rise to that death.

Any coroner in this province should automatically under subsection (b) of section 17 of the act order an inquest. Anything that turned up at that inquest would be very useful, when the reason is pinpointed, as it would be in an inquest in seeing that steps be taken to prevent further accidents of that kind. It would help ensure that measures are taken either by a health and safety committee of the work place, which didn't realize the danger in it, or by the company, which didn't pay sufficient attention perhaps to the dangers involved which gave rise to the accident. Any pressures such as having it made public would cause them to take notice and would definitely be worth while.

Certainly, under subsection (c) of section 17a of this amendment, it states the coroner shall have regard to "the likelihood that the jury on an inquest might make useful recommendations directed to the avoidance of death in similar circumstances." Surely that makes it virtually automatic that every coroner in this province, in every situation of a death in the work place, would surely have some suspicion that a jury may be able to make useful recommendations directed at the avoidance of death in a similar circumstance in that particular hospital, in that particular school, in that particular office building, or that particular farm, in that factory, in that shop, or on that construction site.

It's very straightforward to say, the worker fell off a scaffold and fell X many feet and that's the cause of death. The point is that inquest would indicate why that worker fell off that scaffold. It would be important to his fellow workers in the work place on that construction site to know fully the circumstances surrounding that particular death and to the construction company to also know whether they were or were not negligent. If they were negligent, they would know how they should be changing their safety environment on that site in order that may not occur again.

It seems to me so very obvious this should happen that I don't know why the minister sits there and, in some agitation now, fights the suggestion this should take place. It is inevitably going to turn up now, with both opposition parties favouring it in one form or another, as part of this bill.

I don't know why they picked out mining in particular and indicated that would be the only appropriate place in which an inquest should be held. Certainly last year there were 35 deaths in the mining industry out of a total of 226. That 15 per cent figure does represent mining as having a higher proportion of deaths of the number of workers involved in the work place. In 1976 there were 54 deaths in mining out of a total 297 deaths. That 18 per cent figure again indicates mining is a more hazardous operation than other occupations one could engage in, in the province of Ontario.

In 1976 there were 243 other work place deaths. Surely, a coroner's inquest and a coroner's jury would have interesting things to say about virtually every one of those deaths. Last year 191 deaths occurred in places other than the mining industry. One should definitely have an interest in determining the whys and the wherefores of those accidental deaths.

I say to the minister, when he and his staff decided they would only leave mining in this bill, did they go through the work places by occupation to see which were the other high hazard areas at all? How did they determine to choose only mines?

I know the figure for mining is high, but surely there are other areas which are demonstrably high. I would like the minister to reply to that. What figures in all of these other areas caused the minister to say those deaths aren't high enough in that particular area of work and therefore would be excluded from this section of the bill in terms of having an inquest and a coroner's jury? Even if there's only been one death in a particular area, I would say that was one too many, since useful suggestions can be made as to the avoidance of another fatality in the future by laying out clearly the details.

In farming in 1976, there were 10 deaths in the work place and in 1977, seven; that's certainly well and sufficient to ensure that farming should be looked at. An inquest in every case, without giving it a second thought. Even if there is a work place which has been virtually free from accidental deaths there is no reason why that should not be included.

Mr. Speaker: If I may interrupt the honourable member, perhaps this would be a good time for him to sort of recess his remarks. By mutual agreement, we had agreed to recess at 5 p.m.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, If I may just make some reference, I know you are going to call the supper break now as agreed. When we resume at 8 o'clock, we'll carry on with the second reading of this bill. Following it getting second reading we'll do the second order, which is budget debate, for the balance of the evening session.

The House recessed at 5 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, MAY 23, 1978

The House resumed at 8:02 p.m.

CORONERS AMENDMENT ACT (concluded)

Resumption of the debate on the amendment to the motion for second reading of Bill 86, An Act to amend the Coroners Act, 1972.

Mr. Speaker: Order. When we rose at the dinner hour the member for Windsor-Sandwich had the floor.

Mr. Bounsall: I'll just conclude my remarks very briefly.

Mr. Ziemba: Don't conclude so quickly.

Mr. Bounsall: I should repeat my speech from before supper again. Over the supper hour I've had a chance to talk to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kerr); and, as is his wont, he's always very convincing about why not all workers who are accidentally killed in the work place should have a coroner's inquest performed as a result. The argument was an economic one. I suggest that's a good way of creating employment in the province of Ontario, provided we increase the jurors' pay at the same time so that jurors can afford to be on coroners' juries.

I say to the Solicitor General, to justify what he has said to me about amounts of money it would require to have an inquest into every accidental death in the province of Ontario, come up with the figures, convince us. Bring in an amendment of his own to this section of the act to say, in effect, that there shall be an inquest into every accidental death in the province except—and that's where he should give whatever discretion and conditions he feels should be given to the coroner releasing him of the obligation to have an inquest into every accidental death.

I think the onus should clearly be on the coroner to have an inquest unless he or she has good reason not to. I would much prefer that we have a coroner's inquest into every case of an accidental death in the work place in the province of Ontario, for all the reasons outlined before the supper hour.

If the Solicitor General can outline clearly reasons as to why and where a coroner should consider not having one and build it into this section or a subsequent section, then I would say you have a few days in which to prepare that; but I would prefer to see our amendment, as we've stated it, carry; that there should be a coroner's inquest. Come forth with the areas of the work force which he feels do not really need this protection; come forth with the dollars involved and the exceptions, the way he would write them to let a coroner have an out if, in his opinion, it wasn't desirable to have that particular inquest. I would be quite interested in that amendment; but failing that, there is no justification for having a coroner's inquest just on those workers who are accidentally killed in mines, having the obligation to have a coroner's jury set up on those cases. There are too many cases of interest in the province of Ontario where a worker has been killed accidentally on the work place and the facts surrounding that case should be made known to the public in the interests of increasing occupational health and safety in the province.

Mr. Martel: I really hadn't intended to speak to this, but having looked at section 4(a) I'm afraid it leaves me no alternative. Because what 4(a) does is leave out the rest of mining. It only includes mining per se, leaving out pits and quarries. I am not sure how one can ignore those who work in pits and quarries and deal strictly with those in mining. These remarks have to be made against the fact that at least 35 men were killed in the mining industry last year. That is an indication of why we must expand and not reduce inquests into fatalities for miners as the government was wont to do. Let me make the point very clearly: Had the government had its way, it would have dropped totally that section calling for inquests into miners' fatalities. They attempted to drop it from section 9 of the Mining Act and did not want to introduce it anywhere else. That section of the Mining Act called for an inquest into all fatalities. This government was prepared, in fact, to drop it, until there was such an outcry from the unions representing those employees in the mining industry that the government felt it had to re-introduce it and saw fit to put it into the Coroners Act.

In fact that's a relatively new section in this act, on a matter formerly covered under the Mining Act. The government was prepared to drop it.

I want to relate a little of the experience I have encountered over the years in dealing with this section of the act. You would appreciate, Mr. Speaker, coming from northern Ontario, the types of difficulties we've had and the number of fatalities that have occurred in respect to the mining industry.

I can well recall the day—

Mr. Speaker: I want to remind the honourable member that although he is dealing with a very important principle, I hope he will address his remarks to a principle that is contained in the bill, not one that is omitted from the bill.

Mr. Makarchuk: Right on; he's right on, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Martel: With the greatest of respect, Mr. Speaker, I draw your attention to section 3(3) of the bill dealing with section 9(4)(a) of the act, which says, "Where a worker dies as a result of an accident occurring in the course of his employment at or in a mine, but not including a pit or quarry, the manager or other person in charge of the mine shall immediately give notice of the death to a coroner and the coroner shall issue his warrant to hold an inquest upon the body." I'm speaking directly to that section of the act, which is an addition to the Coroners Act, 1972, but which was formerly included under section 9 of the Mining Act. I want to relate for the House some of the problems that those involved in the mining industry, particularly the unions, have had over the years with respect to that particular section.

I can well recall shortly after being elected that when we had an inquest it was always held in Sudbury on a Wednesday afternoon. You never held it on a Tuesday or a Thursday or a Friday. You went to the business community and you brought five businessmen in who shut their stores down on Wednesday afternoon so that you could have an inquest; they weren't open for business.

You never allowed an experienced miner to be on a panel involving fatalities underground. You simply brought in businessmen—who of course knew a great deal about mining; someone selling clothing has some idea of what goes on underground in a shaft or a drift; certainly, someone selling clothes understands those problems.

We argued that with some vigour, again led by the United Steelworkers. The assistant deputy minister, Mr. Frank Wilson, to his credit, and H. B. Cotnam, to his credit, came to the conclusion that some of the people you should have on an inquest should be experienced miners. Lo and behold, we ultimately saw the thing change in the Sudbury district. We ultimately saw people who had experience in mining called as jurors in an inquest.

They also had another wrinkle: in an inquest the only people who could raise questions were legal counsel. It was not for the person who was representing someone who was killed in an accident, but I guess the crown attorney. The union used to submit questions to the crown attorney and the crown attorney, if he saw fit, would ask the question. If he didn't see fit, he didn't place the question. Of course, the crown attorney knows everything about mining too. So you never went to the people—that's right, they were undermining—you never allowed those people who knew something about mining to be involved.

The mining industry is fraught with fatalities. I think last year there were something like 35 miners killed in the province, and 54 the year before. In the Sudbury basin we wanted to allow the fellows who were representing the bereaved to ask the questions because they knew something about mining. They knew where you should look to determine how you might avert a fatality in the future.

What I am leading to is a declaration that this area in this bill is still deficient, because despite the fact we might learn how, when and where someone was killed, the recommendations which come forth from a coroner's inquest do not have to be adhered to. Some of the jurors might have had experience underground or in the smelter and they make recommendations which hopefully would eliminate similar fatalities from occurring in the future if the recommendations from the jury were followed.

But in Ontario you don't have to follow the recommendations. To me it is a farce to determine how, why, when and where someone was killed—and then not follow recommendations which ultimately, hopefully, would see the elimination of a dangerous practice leading to fewer fatalities occurring because of that sequence of events.

Despite repeated efforts over the years by the United Steelworkers and by those with whom I have been associated, and our insistence that the recommendations of a juror's inquest should be followed, the government has steadfastly said no.

[8:15]

Ms. Gigantes: The coroner's inquest.

Mr. Martel: The coroner's inquest, pardon me.

They continue to say no. It becomes an exercise in futility, really. Hopefully we would learn from our mistakes; hopefully we would learn that if a miner is killed because the proper procedures weren't adhered to underground and we determined who was responsible for that—and I'm not at this moment trying to lay blame on anyone—we would establish procedures based on the various recommendations that would prevent a fatality occurring in the future.

Members could talk to the United Steelworkers of America for hours and they can show where the same type of accidents, in the same place, has occurred on a number of occasions.

Think way back, Mr. Speaker, and you'll recall my raising this about six years ago, about the Edvedicus case. Mr. Edvedicus was killed by an overhead crane at Inco. Subsequently, the same problem arose two years later.

One of the recommendations of the Edvedicus case was to the effect that if the crane was improved and some modifications made, the same thing would not occur a second time, or it was very unlikely. But in fact it did occur. I well recall the union saying to the government in a series of communications that if only it had insisted the recommendations from the Edvedicus case be adhered to the second fatality, or near fatality, wouldn't have occurred.

I can well recall the Thompson case, in Sudbury, where a man was riding the side of a boxcar and he got pinned between the wall and a door. So help me, within a year, the same accident occurred in the same place. If a jury recommendation had been followed, and a practice had been altered, the second fatality might not have occurred.

Surely that is as important as finding out the how, why, when and where. We should be attempting to follow those recommendations so we could eliminate a reoccurrence in a very similar set of circumstances.

If one works underground, of course, the major number of fatalities occur as a result of loose falling on someone's head. These could be very small pieces of material falling from the ceiling, but in fact they can go to several hundred pounds, or several thousand pounds.

If you look at the statistics—and the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson) would be familiar with these—on underground fatalities, most of them occur from material falling from the roof of a mine. Surely if we know that, and surely if we started to follow some of the recommendations of various inquests—

Hon. B. Stephenson: But we do.

Mr. Martel: We do know it, but we're not doing anything about it.

Hon. B. Stephenson: We follow the recommendations.

Mr. Martel: You don't have to, it's not compulsory.

Hon. B. Stephenson: But we do.

Mr. Martel: I say to the minister that she might follow it.

Mr. Renwick: Why didn't you stay home? As far as workers' safety is involved we don't want you here; do you understand that?

Mr. Warner: You don't do anything.

Mr. Renwick: We don't want you here. We're talking about death, we're not talking about danger.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The only person who has the floor is the member for Sudbury East and he can address all his remarks to the chair.

Mr. Martel: I don't know that I'm not Mr. Speaker. I'm looking straight at you.

Mr. Warner: The Minister of Labour is about to resign.

Mr. Martel: I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that while I know that the ministry is looking at some of this—

Mr. Warner: She does nothing.

Hon. B. Stephenson: You are wrong.

Mr. Warner: When was the last time you ever followed a recommendation?

Mr. Speaker: Will the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere please come to order.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Please resign.

Mr. Makarchuk: Will the minister bring in Bill 70?

Mr. Martel: I say to my friend, the Minister of Labour—I was going to say mines—we know the various types of fatalities that occur underground—

Mr. Makarchuk: When are you bringing in Bill 70?

Mr. Martel: —and despite that there were 35 men killed underground last year in Ontario and 54 the year before, and most of those fatalities occurred under similar circumstances.

Mr. Lupusella: The Minister of Labour is giving a big fat zero to the injured workers.

Mr. Martel: What disturbs me is that we never move to a point where we can reduce it or minimize it. For example, one might start to look at scoop trams that would have something to protect a person operating one of those. I am told the real problem is cost. I don't know how you measure a human life against the cost of putting a proper protective barrier for someone operating a scoop tram. There has been more than one set of recommendations saying there should be that type of device or that there should be a roll bar on all equipment, but that hasn't been the case to this date. We will only overcome the problem when we insist that those recommendations are adhered to, and that has not occurred to this time.

To go back to the point I started with, I can't understand why we have excluded so many workers. In this section of the act we talk about people working in mines but, although pits and quarries have always been related to mining, we leave out those men—and women, if there are some—who work in pits and quarries, as we leave out everyone else. I can't understand it.

I know full well that the government's intentions at one time were to not make it mandatory that all inquests in mining be investigated by a coroner's inquest. That was crazy, and I agree with my friend from Windsor that, wherever an accident occurs, we need to look into the circumstances surrounding it. It's all well and good for us to sit in these surroundings. I don't think there's much danger of the chandeliers falling on our heads, although one can never tell.

Mr. Warner: You don't know what the bats are doing up there.

Mr. Martel: But it seems to me that we should be interested in trying to determine what causes every fatality. My friend who is not here this evening, the member for Yorkview (Mr. Young), could tell of a construction worker who was buried in a cave-in; certain regulations apparently weren't being followed and it cost a life. It's all well and good for us to stand here and prattle on, but in dangerous industries we should know what causes those accidents. And if the cost is so great, I suggest that the minister charge it to the industry, because they will clean up their act.

Mr. Warner: That's the only things those creeps understand. But the minister won't do it.

Mr. Martel: They will clean up their act in the same way, one hopes, as the day when the Minister of Labour brings back Bill 70. If one wants to see an occasion when we will reduce fatalities in the work place, it's going to be when Bill 70 is in its place.

Mr. Warner: Which the minister is not going to introduce this session.

Mr. Martel:—which we have had great difficulty trying to get back into the Legislature—

Mr. Warner: The minister is backpedalling.

Mr. Martel:—because the hope of all of us is to—

Mr. Speaker: Order. We are dealing with Bill 86.

Mr. Martel: Right on, Mr. Speaker. I am trying to reduce fatalities.

Ms. Gigantes: That's where it leads, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Martel: It leads ultimately from conducting an inquiry—surely our hope in this Legislature is not to conduct inquests into fatalities. Our aim should be to prevent them. I guess that's really what I am addressing myself to, Mr. Speaker, when I digress for a moment, with your indulgence, to allude to Bill 70. If we bring that bill into the Legislature and get it as law, we hope we will reduce or minimize the fatalities that occur in this province—

Mr. Warner: A bill that the Minister of Labour holds back—

Mr. Martel:—and we won't have to make use of Bill 86.

Mr. Warner:—a bill that she withdraws from the Legislature.

Mr. Stong: Elie, you are supposed to stop when he's interjecting.

Hon. Mr. Maec: You're getting a lot of help from your friends, Elie.

Mr. Warner: She has an obligation to bring the bill back into the House.

Mr. Martel: That's right.

Mr. Warner: It's as simple as that.

Mr. Martel: Despite repeated efforts to try to get Bill 70 back to the Legislature, it's with some difficulty we are getting this done. We're interested over here in preventing accidents and not having to utilize that, but surely if we're going to utilize it, then it should be meaningful. To simply learn how, why, when and where is a lot of garbage unless, as I say to the minister, he's prepared to put in here something to the effect that we will look at the recommendations very carefully and suggest to industry that those recommendations be adopted so that in the long run we will not have a second and third and fourth repeat of the accidents which led to a number of people losing their lives.

As I've indicated already, the most serious underground accident is something falling on your head. But there's a second one; people not wearing belts and falling down manways and other areas underground. If they had had their equipment on, they might not have been killed. That's what brings Bill 70 in. If the minister is not talking health and safety, he's going to have this occurring; if we had the other occurring, this would be used less frequently.

I know the minister understands it, I can see him nodding.

Ms. Gigantes: He does, he does.

Mr. Martel: It's just that he's on the horizontal instead of the vertical.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Vertically and horizontally.

Mr. Martel: I'm hopeful that the minister will look at recommendations very carefully and will start to bring something in which maybe monitors recommendations and then looks back when a report is tabled and says, "Aha, we see the same thing occurring on a number of occasions. Maybe we, as a government, should address this problem to the Minister of Labour; maybe we should address it to the Minister of Agriculture and Food if it's agricultural workers who are injured for some reason, and have them look at the problem." It's a recommendation my colleague, the member for Dovercourt (Mr. Lupusella), will move. It will address itself to that so maybe the government can start to pinpoint rather specifically where problems are occurring and go back to the Minister of Agriculture and say, look, you've got too many people being injured in this specific area, what can you do about it? Then go back to the Minister of Labour and say, we've had 10 or 15 or 20 fatalities and this has been the root cause of it.

What we want to do is to try and eliminate the root cause. As it now stands, without adhering to recommendations you'll not reduce fatalities. I beg the minister to start to look to that direction because in the long run, it will pay dividends to the residents of Ontario.

Mr. Mackenzie: I want to speak just briefly on this bill and ask that the minister seriously consider the recommendations, the tone of the arguments, being made on this side of the House and the necessity of broadening the reasons for a coroner's inquest into a fatality.

If we're going to deal with prevention, and in view of the fact that we have no idea whatsoever as to when we're going to get additional coverage enacted such as might be possible under Bill 70, there has to be some protection for workers, not only in a mine but in the industrial plants. It serves a very important role. If there is a fatality in the plant, a fatality that clearly raises questions in people's minds, there should be no question but that there is an automatic coroner's inquest into that fatality.

We're going to have to find ways and means of seeing that some of the recommendations made are carried out.

In my own town, and it was raised on the floor, we have a situation of an extremely bad safety record and an unsafe plant. I'm referring to the Stanton Pipes plant in Hamilton. I don't think 248 lost time accidents in four years, with about 190 employees, is a very good record.

We recently had a fatality in that plant, a rather tragic fatality that concerns me greatly. We had a coroner's jury look into that particular tragedy and they made a number of recommendations. Just looking through some of the significant ones, the first recommendation is that because of the nature of their business and materials, Stanton Pipes have first-aid equipment on their own premises for the treatment of burns. Second, that first-aid facilities shared with National Steel Car be open at all times when either plant is in operation with an unqualified attendant on duty.

With regard to the fatal accident in this plant to Robert Foldick last June, his work-mates who carried him from the scene, where he was engulfed in molten metal, not only had to crawl over obstructions to get into the next plant where first-aid facilities were available, but had to literally kick in the door, only to find that nobody was on duty. Now we find that one of the coroner's recommendations in this case was that first-aid facilities shared with National Steel Car be open at all times, when either plant is in operation, with a qualified attendant on duty. This coroner's report came out early in October.

I now bring to your attention a letter that I received just today from the safety and health chairman in that particular plant, dealing not only with this case but other accidents that also occurred in the plant, which says, "In the case of Mr. Foldick, the first-aid room was closed and he was unable to receive treatment."

In the letter are listed a number of cases that have occurred recently in the plant, including one where an iron stock block weighing approximately 200 pounds fell on the back of one Mr. W. MacDonald, just missing his spine. Fortunately, he was not that badly injured and was able to walk to the first-aid station approximately 250 yards away, which was shared by the adjoining company. On arrival, Mr. MacDonald found that the first-aid station was closed and locked—after the coroner's inquest and recommendations.

He then had to walk down to the secondary emergency first-aid station in the other company, where the powerhouse operator who was supposed to render first aid shrugged his shoulders and said to Mr. MacDonald, "What do you expect me to do?"

At Christmas in that same plant, and in spite of another recommendation of that coroner's inquest, the first-aid room was closed. Over the Christmas holidays, some 80 per cent of the plant was working. What was the attitude of the personnel officer when he was challenged on the fact that the facilities were closed? He said, "We only need the first-aid room open when we are casting." They do an awful lot of things in that plant that are pretty tough, apart from the mixing of molten iron and magnesium, which can be a very volatile and dangerous mixture.

It seems to me that, when we have a fatality in one of the plants where there is a real question of the procedures used for the responsibility involved, we simply have to have the right to a coroner's inquest to look into the circumstances and ascertain not only how the fatality occurred. They do that very well in this report, but one of my criticisms is that they don't assess blame. In this particular case there are some serious questions as to the management decision that resulted in an old pressure vessel being put back on for mixing after it had been allowed to cool out with the result that the bricks were not secure in the vessel. We also have to get the recommendations that are made, and we have to have some means of following up on those recommendations.

While I really hate to have to say it, probably that inquest's recommendations, which have not been totally carried out in that particular plan, plus the circumstances of a couple of the more recent accidents and the strike situation that exists there today, are going to give us the ammunition that's needed to point out just exactly how bad that situation was, with the support of the recommendations that are clearly listed by the coroner's jury in that case.

I think the minister would be well advised to consider a broadening of the bill he has got before us to give us this right in all work places, not just in the case of mines. I hope that when such amendments are moved, the House will consider them seriously.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to get involved in the debate?

Mr. Renwick: I don't know whether I want to get involved in the debate. I want to participate in the debate and I want to speak to the minister about the bill he's presented to us. I expressed across the floor sotto voce, I hope, my concern that the Minister of Labour was here tonight, because whenever the consequences of death in industrial or other industries in the province come into focus we find that she, as members of her class do, have great difficulty in understanding what we're trying to say about death and injuries in industry throughout the province of Ontario. I use industry in the broadest possible term.

Hon. B. Stephenson: What class, may I ask?

Ms. Gigantes: Upper class.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Oh, go soak your head!

Ms. Gigantes: The same to you.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Mackenzie: Does that bother you?

An hon. member: Would you stop that cat fight, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Scarcely upper class.

Mr. Renwick: If you ever speak about class, all of the—

Ms. Gigantes: The minister wouldn't speak about class, would she?

Mr. Renwick:—Conservatives are always in the lower economic class. They happen to represent those who have the great majority of the wealth in the country, but they're always in the lower class and they always associate themselves indirectly or otherwise with those questions.

I don't want to be provocative in one sense, but I want to be provocative in another sense.

Mr. Stong: Try it again.

Mr. Renwick: I want it clearly understood that my colleagues in this caucus have fought for a long time to try to persuade the Conservative Party to change its attitude about what happens in the work place.

Mr. Lupusella: We are wasting our time.

Mr. Renwick: We have had an immense amount of difficulty. Minuscule changes in attitude by the Conservative Party, we have come to believe, are great advances in relation to industrial health and welfare at the work place. I don't want to worry about that tonight. I want to talk to the minister who is responsible for something called public safety, the Solicitor General of the province, a not intractable man, a man with some humour, a man who told us some years ago that those who were damaging the environment would be behind bars by now, but of course they're not behind bars by now.

I want to say to him as a human being will he please stand back from the Coroners Act and say to himself: "This act is immensely restrictive in relation to the situations in which there are mandatory inquests required." For practical purposes at the present time, the act simply says there will be an inquest in very limited circumstances. I want the minister to say to himself, by introducing this particular amendment which is really by transposition simply a provision already required in the Mining Act, that he is not doing justice to the change in the social circumstances of the province of Ontario.

Let me refer, if I may, to the circumstances in which inquests are at present to be held in Ontario. First let me go back a step so that everyone will clearly understand what we're trying to talk about when we indicate that in committee we want to introduce certain amendments. The limitation presently on an inquest is that it shall inquire into and determine who the deceased was; how the deceased came to his death; when the deceased came to his death; where the deceased came to his death; and by what means the deceased came to his death.

Those are the very limitations which the minister has already imposed upon an inquest in Ontario. He has tried in this bill to perhaps broaden slightly the ambit of the inquest inquiry by saying that where an inquest is held it shall inquire into the circumstances of and determine who the deceased was.

But perhaps the minister will understand that even the most diligent jury inquiring into the death of a person in the province is severely limited about the nature and extent of the inquiry which can be held into the causes of the death. In other words, anyone will understand that the Coroners Act carefully avoids any reference to the cause of death.

It may be said, of course, that the wording of that section which says "by what means the deceased came to his death" may encompass the question of cause. But it does not do so because the language doesn't say so. Anyone can give a descriptive account of the death of any person but any in-depth inquiry as to the reasons or the circumstances surrounding the death would in modern language use the term "the cause of death."

I want to say to the minister first of all that the act nowhere says that the inquest is involved in the cause of death. That's the first elementary principle that I want to get across to the minister. The act should provide that the inquest would inquire into what is the cause of death.

Then when you come to the very lengthy section 9, which carefully enunciates all of the occasions on which an inquest will be required, then you find very carefully set out in the act in subsections 1, 2 and 3 very limiting occasions and procedures under which the coroner will act to determine whether or not an inquest will be held.

There is a mandatory requirement in the present Mining Act which reads: "Where a fatal accident occurs in or in connection with a mine or plant, an inquest shall be held." Apart from that the only mandatory requirement is in section 4 of the Coroners Act. I want to quote it so that the members will understand the very limited nature of the mandatory inquest presently required under the Coroners Act. Section 9(4) of the Coroners Act, 1972, which we are asked to amend, states:

"Where a person dies while detained by or in the actual custody of a peace officer or while an inmate on the premises of a correctional institution, lockup or training school, the peace officer or officer in charge of the institution, lockup or training school, as the case may be, shall immediately give notice of the death to a coroner and the coroner shall issue his warrant to hold an inquest upon the body."

What we are asking simply is that in a modern society we extend that obligation to hold a mandatory inquest to circumstances other than the mine or the plant.

I want to make a point which was made originally in this debate. It is proposed to amend section 9 by adding subsection 4(a), which says: "Where a worker dies as a result of an accident occurring in the course of his employment at or in a mine but not including a pit or quarry, the manager or other person in charge of the mine shall immediately give notice of the death to a coroner and the coroner shall issue a warrant to hold an inquest upon the body."

I am saying to the assembly, is it the intention of the minister to extend or restrict, as my colleague, the member for Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Bounsall), has drawn to my attention, provision 612 of the Mining Act? It is a rather cute method of limiting the scope of what is already contained. Or is it his intention, in fact, to do something other than merely amend by transposition the requirement as to when a mandatory inquest should be held because of an accidental death in a mine other than a pit or a quarry?

I don't know what the minister's intentions are. It is always difficult when the minister introduces a bill such as this and indicates all he is doing is making certain progressive changes in the act. It is always a question in our mind whether it is his intention to extend the scope of the operation of the act or merely to shuffle sections about. I want to say to the minister, if there is ever a situation which requires change in Ontario, it is the requirement that there be proper investigation of deaths in various areas of the industrial society in which we live.

Many of my colleagues believe it should be all-inclusive. I think it is fair to say our colleagues in the Liberal Party have indicated in the course of this debate they would seriously consider supporting appropriate amendments to extend the ambit of the section the minister has either transposed or introduced into this act with respect to the mining industry about the requirement for a mandatory inquest in the event of death.

Is the minister perhaps prepared at this point in time to say there are other specific instances in the province of Ontario where there must be an inquest, where it is mandatory? Are there other specific instances where it is not just up to the coroner, or where it is not up to the investigating officer to report to the coroner, who will then investigate, and if he decides, shall require that there be an inquest?

I don't know whether the minister, skilled lawyer that he may be, has any particular experience, in the field of deaths on construction sites. I doubt, for practical purposes, whether he has. I think anyone who has attended an inquest held in connection with a death on a construction site in Ontario in the last 10 or 15 years, must have come to the conclusion that, even if it is a mandatory requirement, there are very serious defects in the procedures which are followed at those inquests for the purpose of determining the cause of death and therefore the responsibility, ultimately, for the kind of lack of safety and other precautions at those sites which would have prevented that death.

I realize this is very protective legislation from the point of view of the establishment. All it wants to do is have inquests in those circumstances where it may be there is some concern about the death and the cause of the death. I think the minister has got to take a position, and our party thinks it must take a position that there are many occasions when there must be a mandatory inquest on which people who are representative of the public, as jury members, can give their views as to not only the circumstances surrounding the death, but the cause of the death, and to see whether or not there can be some kind of remedial step taken by government in order to reduce that kind of fatality.

I do not think it is possible in a multicultural society for us to rely any longer upon the investigative officers, operating as they may be in very good faith, or upon the coroners to decide whether or not those inquests should be held. My view is that there must be and, if my understanding is that the minister does not wish to proceed into committee tonight, I'm hopeful that there may be an opportunity for representatives of this party to discuss with his party and representatives of the Liberal Party to discuss with his party the question of whether or not it is possible to come to some reasonable acceptance of an amendment to this provision which would have some realism in the kind of society in which we presently live. I don't know whether that's possible.

Every now and then, when questions of the welfare of people at the work place are before the assembly, we find a great deal of resistance in the government to any significant changes which would impose any burden on government to take any responsibility for safety at the work place. Surely, it is possible in the case of death for the government to accept the responsibility of having the kind of investigation that will make certain that we get to the cause and the root of the hazardous conditions which exist in many of the construction sites and in many other areas of industry not known to the government and not known to us here in the assembly.

I need not recount the experiences which I've had at inquests on deaths at construction sites when I was in the private practice of law. All I can simply say is that I was upset and concerned about the overwhelming desire to get the inquest over, to get the matter closed and to get on with one's everyday work without any further concern about the havoc that was wrought by the particular death.

I think my colleague, the member for Dovercourt (Mr. Lupusella), has indicated to the minister in his proposed amendment that he at least wants to see an annual report where the recommendations of the various coroners' juries across the country are published, because by that very act of publication we can be certain that the government will want to indicate those of the recommendations which they have implemented and those which they have not implemented.

Apart from crime and death on the highway, the major source of hazard to life is death in the industrial plants of the province. It is in our view that at this point in time we should be able to work intelligently in a co-operative and minority government the kind of extension of the mandatory requirement for inquest which is inherent in the amendment which the minister has introduced.

I don't know whether that's possible. The Tories get quite recalcitrant when one suggests to them that they don't know all of the steps which are required in order to protect the basic establishment of the society of which they are the elected government for the purpose of protecting. I'm hoping it may be possible, and in an enlightened way, for them to say that the protection of their establishment requires them to be somewhat reasonable about the extension of the provision as set forth in the proposed amendment to section 9 of the Coroners Act.

I don't know whether that's possible, but I say to the minister that there is at least, in our judgement, some area in which we might possibly be prepared to negotiate with the minister and with our colleagues on the right in order to achieve a reasonable solution to the circumstances of Ontario which require that there be mandatory coroners' inquests in the event of certain deaths on industrial, commercial, mining, construction and other sites in the province. I don't know whether that's possible. I don't know whether the minister has given it any thought.

Mr. Martel: One would think the Minister of Labour would be leading the fight.

Mr. Renwick: I want to say to the minister that we in this caucus are very much concerned about the casual change in the method of the selection of the coroner's jury. We think it is an inadequate recognition of the importance of the coroner's jury in the province that he would introduce the proposed amendment to section 27 of the Coroners Act. That provision is so informal it almost takes you back into the last century.

It says the coroner shall direct a constable to select, from the list of names of persons provided under subsection 2 of section 28, five persons who in his opinion, that is in the opinion of the constable, are suitable to serve as jurors at an inquest and the constable shall summon them to attend the inquest at the time and the place appointed. I really don't believe for one single moment that it can be left to a constable, singled out by the coroner, to determine the five persons who will form the jury for a coroner's inquest.

Surely the coroner's inquest deserves the recognition, at least, of the procedures used through the sheriffs of the various judicial districts to establish juries for criminal trials in the county courts.

There must be some way in which even the minister would agree it is not sufficient for a coroner to say to Constable So-and-so, "Please go out and find five people who are on this list and they will be the jury for the purpose of investigating a death of a person in the province of Ontario." The minister is quite aware of the major areas of concern expressed about the bill. I would hope he would seriously consider some of the representations that have been made by ourselves, by the members of the Liberal Party, about the amendment to section 9 of the Coroners Act and I would hope he would at some point make a further comment about the method of appointing the juries for coroners' inquests in Ontario.

But my last plea is for some openness by the government about this vexed question of deaths in the industrial sites that it be considered in a broad sense to include construction and mining sites in Ontario. That is a matter about which I know the minister is upset. He was upset before dinner. He's upset tonight about it. He's obviously equally upset because his colleague, the Minister of Labour, has difficulty in understanding the importance of accidents and deaths at the construction sites.

Hon. B. Stephenson: You really don't know what you are talking about. That's specious and spurious.

Mr. Renwick: But perhaps we can get it to the government, through the Solicitor General tonight, that if the ultimate result is death, maybe the consequences are such that we should inquire into them and maybe because of some kind of back pressure, we could then become concerned about the living persons at the work sites who suffer disability of one kind or another. I appeal to the minister, because of his interest in people, to seriously concern himself about our worries about this bill in the hope that he will not withdraw the bill but that, as we say these days, in the spirit of minority government, he will meet with us and members of the Liberal Party to resolve these problems.

[9:00]

Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak very briefly on this bill, if I might, particularly in regard to the amendment. I haven't seen the amendment but I understand it would make it mandatory that an inquest be held whenever there is a death in the work place.

It may be narrower than that; I haven't seen it.

Mr. McClellan: You know what you don't like.

Mr. MacBeth: If that were to happen, it would make a sham of the many important inquests that are held across this province. Inquests are there to serve a purpose; they're there to find the cause of death or to make suitable recommendations.

Mr. Renwick: It doesn't say "cost," John.

Mr. MacBeth: When they're there to make suitable recommendations—

Mr. Martel: But no one follows them.

Mr. MacBeth: —and I think that is the point the member for Riverdale is trying to make—if there can be any value and any good recommendations come forward from it, by all means, let's have an inquest. But to have an inquest simply because a death took place on the job would make a sham of inquests. Remember that inquests cost dollars.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacBeth: Just listen. I'm not putting dollars first, but it costs thousands of dollars to have an inquest. You must supply the room for it; you must supply the coroner—and they don't come without some expense—you must pay the witnesses, because it takes the time of the witnesses to be there; and you must pay the jurors.

Mr. Martel: Ten bucks a day.

Mr. MacBeth: There is expense involved, but there is also the time of the citizens involved. All the honourable members opposite are concerned about the fact that jurors are not paid the kind of fee that we would like to pay them—

Mr. Renwick: Raise their pay.

Mr. MacBeth: All right, but that's more dollars. More important than the pay, however, is the time that it takes for the jurors to come and sit on one of these inquests.

Mr. Martel: Just try to get rid of fatalities.

Ms. Gigantes: You weren't elected by dollars. Are you speaking on behalf of dollars?

Mr. MacBeth: If we know the cause of death—the person may even die of a heart attack on the job; what is the purpose of having an inquest in a situation like that? If we don't want to turn inquests into some kind of a game or a sham, we must hold them in high repute.

Ms. Gigantes: Were you elected by dollars?

Mr. Martel: Yes.

Mr. MacBeth: If we had an inquest automatically on every death, they would not serve the valuable purpose they are currently serving.

Ms. Gigantes: Were you elected by dollars?

Mr. MacBeth: Inquests today do serve a valuable purpose and, contrary to what some of the members opposite are saying, a good percentage of the recommendations that arise out of inquests are put into effect.

If we just have the inquest automatically, we'll be causing people to come in to hear these inquests, and they will be annoyed at the system. We're always worried about costs on these things—not that I want to put costs above saving human lives; I certainly don't—

Ms. Gigantes: Don't do it then.

Mr. MacBeth: —but, on the other hand, I don't want to see money spent needlessly.

Mr. Martel: Talk to the 10 widows in Sudbury last year.

Mr. MacBeth: If we're not going to accomplish anything by holding an inquest, what is the purpose in holding the inquest?

Ms. Gigantes: To change things.

Mr. MacBeth: I say, let's make sure that there is something going to be gained before we decide to have an inquest automatically on every case.

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I want to speak very briefly to the legislation.

Mr. Stong: Hurray.

Mr. McClellan: —I find it difficult to understand how the Tories can talk about an inquest into a fatality, for example, on a construction site as though it would be some kind of a game or some kind of a sham, to quote the member for Humber, who just spoke. I don't understand that. My colleagues on his side don't understand that.

... Hon. B. Stephenson: That isn't what he said.

Mr. McClellan: I represent a riding where most of the people work in construction. We have suffered very heavily from accidents and fatalities in the construction industry in this province and in this city—

Mr. MacBeth: And generally there were inquests for them too.

Ms. Gigantes: So what are you fighting?

Mr. MacBeth: I'm fighting needless inquests—inquests that won't accomplish anything.

Ms. Gigantes: What about the inquests—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Mackenzie: Let's negotiate a little.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The member for Bellwoods has the floor.

Mr. McClellan: The construction industry is not a very pretty industry. There are not too many industries which operate on the basis of the pushman system, as the construction industry does in this province and in this city. The people in my riding who work in construction are subjected to the pushman—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The what?

Mr. McClellan: The pushman, the pusher.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The pusher?

Mr. McClellan: It's a joke to you, perhaps, but to the guys who work in construction it's no joke.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No, I'm not saying it's a joke.

Hon. B. Stephenson: He was asking a question.

Mr. McClellan: The pushman system is the institution of speedup on the construction site. Every single construction site in this city has the pushman, whose job it is to push the workers, to flog them verbally—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: To horse-whip them—throw that in too.

Mr. Mackenzie: He didn't say that.

Mr. McClellan: No, I didn't say that, I said to flog them verbally, to push them by whatever means he can to work faster and faster and faster.

Mr. Sterling: I have worked on a construction site.

Mr. McClellan: The function of the pusher is institutionalized in the construction industry in this province.

Ms. Gigantes: Fear of unemployment—do you understand that?

Mr. McClellan: The Ministry of Labour has refused to deal with the problem for years and years and years and the construction industry is as dangerous as it is in Ontario because of the institution of the pushman. We have been unable to deal with it. We have not been able to come to grips with this system.

Hon. B. Stephenson: We have the best record of any jurisdiction in North America and you know it.

Mr. Martel: So what.

Mr. McClellan: The Minister of Labour once again, sotto voce, apologizes for the pushman system but, Mr. Speaker, you don't have to run construction trades, you don't have to run the construction industry on this system.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I'm not apologizing for anything.

Mr. McClellan: It is not a foreman system. I heard one of my colleagues from the Liberal Party say, "Is it the same as a foreman?" It's not the same as a foreman.

Mr. Sterling: What alternatives do you have, what alternatives?

Ms. Gigantes: Norm, shame on you, shame on you. Have you seen the injured workers on those sites?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Have you? What construction site did you work on?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Martel: We could put some of you lawyers to work for a change.

Mr. McClellan: The interjections, Mr. Speaker, validate the point that was made by my colleague from Riverdale when he said the Conservatives are incapable, by virtue of their class bias, of understanding the problems of the construction workers in this province.

Mr. Sterling: You're unrealistic.

Mr. McClellan: As you make your interjections right now, you validate what my colleague said.

Ms. Gigantes: You don't know those people.

Mr. Martel: You're pushing the subject.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order. I just wanted to see whether you could remain silent for a moment or two. I would like to remind the members that we are on the Coroners Act and I would ask the member for Bellwoods to continue in reference to the bill before the House.

Mr. McClellan: We're talking about measures that would bring about safe working conditions in the industry in which my constituents work and if I'm not to speak to that kind of an issue, I don't know why I'm here. I can't think of a more important subject to raise and to speak on as forcefully as I can. Otherwise, why the hell am I here?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order.

An hon. member: Why are you here?

Mr. McClellan: My constituents know why I'm here, if you don't, and I think it is useful, useful in the extreme—

Mr. Sterling: Talk in real terms.

Mr. Renwick: One doctor and I don't know what the other fellow does up there. He's certainly not a construction worker.

Hon. B. Stephenson: When did you do construction work, Jim?

Mr. McClellan: —to establish the principle of mandatory inquest into every single fatality in the construction industry in this province.

Any single measure, any measure at all, that will serve to focus attention on the—

Mr. Mackenzie: You're being offensive when you're so slow to move.

Mr. McClellan: —tragic and chronic unsafe conditions in the construction industry in this province is useful. I would hope my colleagues in the Liberal Party will support the amendment, and I mean this very sincerely. I hope they will support the amendment to bring about a mandatory inquest in a situation of any fatality on a construction site—indeed on any work site.

Mr. Martel: Nobody's talking about heart attacks.

Mr. McClellan: We hope, as well, that they will support the amendment that provides for a report to the assembly on the results of the work of the coroner's office. We should have every year a record of what's happening in the coroner's office and in each of the sectors of industry that he's dealing with.

Ms. Gigantes: A decent description of death—that's the least you can ask.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: There is nothing decent about death.

Mr. McClellan: There is indeed nothing decent about death, as the minister said. I would think that this minister would welcome amendments that would provide for mandatory inquests. I cannot comprehend opposition to that notion, when we have in this province an industrial accident rate that stands out in the western industrial world.

Hon. B. Stephenson: You're wrong.

Mr. McClellan: I am not wrong.

Mr. Lupusella: Why are we wrong? Where did you get your statistics?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. B. Stephenson: It stands out because it is lower. That's right. Just wait until I get to the figures, because you are wrong.

Ms. Gigantes: Throw her out. Throw her out.

Mr. McClellan: The minister is unable to contain herself in her enthusiasm to oppose measures which would serve—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, could you bring these people to order?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I'm not opposing anything. I'm trying to keep you on the straight and narrow facts and you don't like it.

Mr. McClellan: —to improve work safety in Ontario work places. That is her record and she can have it. She is welcome to it. I am not talking to the Minister of Labour. I have given up trying to talk to the Minister of Labour. As my colleague from Riverdale said earlier, we don't care whether the Minister of Labour is here or not.

Hon. B. Stephenson: But he is saying he'd rather I wasn't here.

Mr. McClellan: We would prefer in fact that she were not here, because she serves only to obfuscate debate on matters of industrial safety.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I would prefer you weren't here either.

Mr. McClellan: She does not comprehend industrial safety. She does not understand the importance of these matters. Perhaps it is her class bias. I don't know what the problem is. Perhaps it's her medical bias. I just know that there's a problem with respect to the ability of the Minister of Labour to comprehend matters of work safety.

Mr. Lupusella: You should resign as Minister of Labour.

Mr. McClellan: We're not addressing her tonight. I'm trying to make an appeal to the Solicitor General to accept the will of the majority, to accept the reality that I was elected here by a group of people to speak from a particular perspective, which I am doing right now. My colleagues as well were sent here to express a particular point of view, which we are doing right now. If there is a majority in this House who express that point of view I'm asking that he accept it. That's all we're saying. It is not unreasonable. It is simply an expression of parliamentary democracy. I ask the minister simply to live with parliamentary democracy, to respect the fact—

Mr. Martel: Do like the Minister of Labour. Don't bring it back. She respects the will of the majority.

Mr. McClellan: —that I, as the spokesman of the constituents of Bellwoods riding, together with my colleagues, whether we are on this side of the House or on that side in whatever combination, when we are the majority our views hold.

Mr. Martel: Bring back Bill 70.

Mr. Speaker: If there are no other members wishing to participate, the Solicitor General.

Mr. Martel: The minister's being provocative.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to mention that I may be bringing in amendments to section 13 of the bill when we are in committee. That deals with representation at inquests. At the present time, it is not necessary to have a barrister or a solicitor attend at an inquest. It is my understanding from my colleague, the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry), that it is not absolutely necessary at all types of inquest, to have a crown attorney attend. Many lay people, in rather simple inquests, can represent the crown. It has been done up until now, certainly, and therefore I will be considering bringing in an amendment to section 13.

[9:15]

Mr. Martel: Is it mandatory to have a solicitor there?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No. That would be the amendment, that it wouldn't be mandatory to have a solicitor there.

Mr. McClellan: You had better think that one out now, Mr. Solicitor General. Think that one out very carefully.

Mr. Renwick: We can make a deal on that section.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Now I would like to deal with some of the provisions. First of all, I really should apologize to the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell). She indicated I should have made an opening statement, and other members have also alluded to that particular situation. As I indicated when introducing the bill, they are basically housekeeping amendments. I realize there are some very important amendments, but they are basically outside of the provision regarding the mandatory inquests in the event of a mining accident. Most of the other sections, are, as I say, basically housekeeping amendments. I didn't have any notice of the honourable members' amendments to Bill 86 until this morning. Therefore, I did not have any real reason for any lengthy opening remarks.

Mr. Martel: Mailed Friday, George.

Ms. Gigantes: The mail is slow.

Mr. Lupusella: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Solicitor General that the amendments which were presented by this side of the House were introduced and were given to the government last Friday.

Mr. McClellan: Thursday.

Mr. Lupusella: I guess, if the Solicitor General wanted, he had an opportunity to look at those amendments and make opening remarks in relation to the introduction of those amendments. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, I understand the amendments were called in to my office last Friday afternoon and were typed up sometime late Friday and I had an opportunity to see them this morning.

Ms. Gigantes: Wrong again. Wrong again.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I wasn't in my office Friday afternoon.

Mr. Lupusella: You knew it when we dealt with the estimates of the Solicitor General.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I was in my constituency office on Friday afternoon. There was no real reason to wait until Friday to have those amendments. You could have had them earlier than that.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. The rules of the House, in fact, state categorically we should submit the amendments Friday before the bill is debated. We met with the order of the House by having them delivered by noon on Friday.

Mr. Speaker: Your honourable colleague before you had already drawn the House's attention to that fact.

Ms. Gigantes: Why does this whining continue?

Mr. Martel: With the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, the minister subsequently rose in his place—

Mr. McClellan: Can't help it if he takes a five-day weekend.

Mr. Martel: —and indicated that we had not conformed with the rules.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I didn't say that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I didn't say that.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lupusella: Can I rise on another point of order, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member for Dovercourt has already risen on a point of order.

Mr. Lupusella: It is a second point of order.

Mr. Speaker: His position with regard to the amendments is quite clear. Everybody on that side of the House has had an opportunity to speak to second reading of this bill.

Mr. McClellan: He's got another point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Solicitor General has the floor.

Mr. Lupusella: It's another point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, in dealing with most of the comments raised by the honourable members opposite, there is no question that section 3 of the bill and more particularly subsection 4(a) dealing with mandatory inquests in a mining accident were the sum and substance of most of the remarks. First of all, I want to say the main reason this section is in this bill is because, as the member for Riverdale has suggested, it is being transposed from the Mining Act.

Mr. Martel: They were dropping it.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It is my understanding the Mining Act will not contain that provision. Because we feel that it is essential and, as a matter of fact, the government wants that provision to continue, this is part of the amendments to this legislation.

In dealing with the suggestion that there be mandatory inquests for all accidental deaths in all work places, as suggested by the amendment from the member for Dovercourt, I should review, as has been done to some extent, the Coroners Act in general regarding inquests. I would refer, first of all, to section 9 which has been mentioned. I will read that section.

Section 9 says: "Every person who has reason to believe that a deceased person died as a result of violence, misadventure, negligence, misconduct or malpractice; by unfair means, during pregnancy or following pregnancy in circumstances that might reasonably be attributable thereto; suddenly and unexpectedly; from disease or sickness for which he was not treated by a legally qualified medical practitioner; from any cause other than disease; or under such circumstances as may require investigation, shall immediately notify a coroner or a police officer of the facts and circumstances relating to the death, and where a police officer is notified, he shall in turn immediately notify the coroner of such facts and circumstances."

This, therefore, would include, as I say, every accidental death involving a worker in the workplace. There would be an investigation.

Mr. Renwick: But not an inquest.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I might also add that the member for Riverdale has mentioned there isn't a definite or specific reference to cause. I might just refer the honourable member in this particular section to the words "the facts and circumstances relating to the death."

In my opinion, that certainly indicates there must be an investigation as to the cause. The facts and circumstances would seem to be as close to the ascertaining of the cause of death as I can quickly think of at this time. Certainly there is no objection to including the word "cause" in that section.

Section 13(1) is really a complementary section to section 9. It says: "Where a coroner is informed that there is in his jurisdiction the body of a person and that there is reason to believe that the person died in any circumstances mentioned in section 9, he shall issue his warrant to take possession of the body and shall view the body and make such further investigation as is required to enable him to determine whether or not an inquest is necessary." Again, the accidental death and the death under the circumstances that I have mentioned in the legislation have to be investigated.

The honourable member mentioned section 7 of this bill as well. Again, referring to an amendment to section 17a of the act, it says: "When making a determination whether an inquest is necessary or unnecessary, the coroner shall have regard to whether the holding of an inquest would serve the public interest and, without restricting the generality of the foregoing, shall consider . . ." Then there are three subsections there as to the circumstances and the reasons under which an inquest would be held.

Section 21a of the present legislation provides that in the event the coroner decides against an inquest, there is reference to the chief coroner to review the decision and the chief coroner shall review the decision of the coroner.

There is another provision in the legislation where the minister may require that a warrant be issued for the holding of an inquest. This, again, is another—

Mr. Lupusella: May, not shall.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: That's right. He may direct any coroner. That's true.

Ms. Gigantes: Weasel words. Shall, shall.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: But, again, it's another form of appeal.

Mr. Renwick: You could have total control over the process and you wouldn't have it.

Ms. Gigantes: Weasel words.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Again, if the relative of the deceased requests, the decision of the coroner may be reconsidered. All these are provisions where—

Mr. Martel: Ah, come on George, with great pressure you'll knuckle.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —there is an accidental death. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the provisions are quite exhaustive here as to when a coroner should hold an inquest.

Mr. Renwick: No, they are not.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The honourable members opposite should have some faith in the coroners of the province and in the coroner system of this province.

Mr. Renwick: No, not when you're talking about private industry, of deaths on private industrial sites.

Mr. Martel: Just ridiculous. Keep the faith, baby.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: When they talk about the provision that's required, as suggested by the member for Dovercourt, they're talking about every accidental death in the work place.

Mr. Lupusella: Right. At least that's the only way.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Whether it's in an insurance office, whether it's in a store, whether it's in a restaurant, whether it happens to be a driver on the street—

Mr. Lupusella: That's how your government can become irresponsible about accidents.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —an automobile accident, a nurse, even a secretary of a riding office, for goodness' sake. It could be an accidental death—

Mr. Lupusella: That's the only way.

Ms. Gigantes: You're an insurance agent, not a member of a government.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —regardless of the circumstances.

Mr. Martel: No, we didn't say that.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: That's what you are saying.

Mr. Martel: No, we're not.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Because you're doing away with the word "cause," or the requirements of cause in the amendment of the member for Dovercourt. You're not requiring any cause.

Mr. Martel: No, no, he said accidental.

Ms. Gigantes: Do you think people are stupid?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: There has to be no mystery. You're not dealing with the section of the act where it says—

Mr. Martel: No, they will handle it themselves.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —an inquest is held to inquire into and determine who the deceased was, how the deceased came to his death, when the deceased came to his death, where the deceased came to his death—

Ms. Gigantes: Yes, yes, yes.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —and by what means the deceased came to his death.

Ms. Gigantes: Yes, yes.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Now, surely, "how" and "by what means" indicates that there has to be some cause. You have to ascertain some cause.

Mr. Martel: Most people die from a cause, George.

Ms. Gigantes: It's an act of God, according to you.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: What the member for Dovercourt is suggesting would make it horrendous.

Mr. Martel: Passed away late in the night.

Mr. Lupusella: They are reasonable amendments.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I'm not talking just about the cause. I would suggest that there would be an inquest in Ontario 365 days a year.

Ms. Gigantes: How many people die in Ontario every day?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: There would be a jury sitting 365 days a year.

Mr. Martel: Now, there's a job for you, George.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: There would be inquest upon inquest on the same circumstances—

Mr. Martel: I am just trying to find him a job. He can be the coroner.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —resulting from the same situation. There would be two similar acts having inquests lasting three or four days with a jury empanelled that would counsel the whole structure of an inquest. It is completely unnecessary. And I would suggest—no, I won't say it.

Mr. Martel: No, don't say it, George. Quit while you're ahead.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I'm just saying it would be a useless expenditure of money and human resources to hold an inquest in all circumstances when they are unnecessary.

Mr. Lupusella: They are not.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Again, you have to have some faith in the coroners of this province—

Ms. Gigantes: You have some faith in people.

Mr. Lupusella: How can we have faith in this government?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —and the history of the coroner's office in inquests. You must remember that we're involving doctors in inquests; doctors have to be part of inquests.

Mr. Renwick: That's what we're worried about.

Ms. Gigantes: Holy, holy doctors.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: There are roughly 30,000 investigations now in Ontario and something between one and two per cent of those investigations result in inquests. In other words, there's no question that most inquests are the result of industrial or construction accidents. There's no question. Again, there are recommendations so that, hopefully, those same circumstances can be avoided and the problem won't occur again.

Ms. Gigantes: We don't hope. We want legislation.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I certainly understand what the member for Riverdale is attempting to do. I realize the importance of recommendations being published, recommendations that direct some type of required act on mandatory provision should be acted upon. Certainly I would agree to any reasonable recommendation in this legislation that would require the publication of recommendations.

I don't particularly agree with the amendment of the member for Dovercourt. He is talking about a separate annual report. The Solicitor General now has an annual report. Certainly much of the information he's requested can be included in the Solicitor General's annual report under the coroner's division.

Mr. McClellan: You missed the whole point.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The hon. member for York Centre made reference to section 11. Again we wouldn't have any objection to a person who is charged with or acquitted of a criminal offence becoming a compellable witness after these charges have been disposed of, if there is still an inquest and that person would be a relevant and a required witness. There is no objection on our part that the section be amended to provide for that.

Another mention was of the question of a constable. I think the constable has in many respects been acting the same as a sheriff would act in empanelling criminal and civil juries. They are gathering names.

Ms. Gigantes: You are scrambling. You are scrambling.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I know that the constable also will actually choose the names of those jurors. I don't know if there's been any great defect in that system. I think the constable attempts to have a representative jury. There are the same number of exemptions and excuses for not serving, so we have the same difficulties in empanelling a jury.

I have no objection, for example, for a provision that says the coroner would have the final approval or the final say in who the actual jurors are at a particular inquest. But I think the process of the constable actually gathering the names, bringing the number down to a reasonable amount and then leaving the final decision to the coroner is something that could be considered. Again, because constables are not doctors, because they are not hearing a particular inquest, it doesn't mean that they don't have the ability to pick a representative juror.

Ms. Gigantes: Has the minister ever known anybody who has died in an accident? Has he?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes, many people. I know I am not the veteran that the honourable member is—

Ms. Gigantes: Did the coroner investigate?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —or walked on the seedy side of life that she has—

Ms. Gigantes: Did the coroner investigate?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —but I have had some experience.

Mr. Speaker: Will the member for Carleton East try to contain herself? She had an opportunity to speak to this bill on second reading and didn't choose to do so.

Ms. Gigantes: Right, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lupusella: How many cases were investigated? How many cases?

An hon. member: Throw her out.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: And she has been yapping ever since.

An hon. member: George, that's unparliamentary.

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, I have been yapping ever since because I made a mistake—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, the member for Windsor-Sandwich suggested after our—oh, I am sorry, he's not here—after our brief discussion downstairs at around 6 o'clock, that my only concern was for the cost of having an inquest in all work places. My concern was not that at all. I tried to indicate just the practicality and the necessity of having an inquest in every such case.

He suggested that the bill list the exemptions; in other words, include an all-embracing provision in the work place and then list exemptions. I would not be in favour of that method of designating when there should be a mandatory inquest. It is better, in my opinion, to list specifically when there should be a mandatory inquest.

Under the legislation now, as the honourable members know, we have mandatory inquests for any person who dies in custody as well as the provision in respect to mines. If the honourable members feel that should be expanded in some way within reason, that's something we can consider when this legislation is in committee.

I don't agree with the member for Sudbury East when he says that we would have dropped this provision regarding mines if there wasn't a great outcry from the union.

Mr. Martel: Sure you would have.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: We had every intention of including that mandatory provision—

Mr. Martel: Don't kid the troops, George.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: We had every intention of including the mandatory provision. The chief coroner would insist on it.

In a weak moment, the member for Sudbury East complimented the coroner—

Mr. Martel: Yes: He has done some good stuff.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —for some of the improvement in procedures in respect to fatalities in mines. I think that indicates the general attitude and feeling of the coroner's office regarding inquests of this kind.

Mr. Martel: You fellows attempted to drop it from the Mining Act and let it disappear.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: A number of honourable members mentioned the fact that our recommendations are never adhered to. I would suggest that many of the provisions in our legislation dealing with safety, such as the Industrial Safety Act, the Construction Safety Act, the Public Hospitals Act, the Mining Act, are based on recommendations that have resulted from inquests or from recommendations directly from coroners who have investigated deaths without an inquest.

I don't have any objections to some mandatory provision regarding the publication of recommendations, or even of implementation of some of the recommendations of jurors, particularly in respect to rather specific accidents in the construction industry, in a mine or in some industry where by the very nature of the work there is a certain amount of danger involved.

Our aim is also to prevent fatalities, not just to hold inquests.

I realize that the vehicle of the inquest goes beyond finding the cause of death and fulfilling the other provisions of the act in the case of a specific fatality. If there is a death in a mine or in an underground operation of some kind, or even in a plant or in a quarry, for example, the recommendations that may come from that jury can be all-embracing; they can be applied across the industry or in that particular type of operation and not just in a way that could have prevented that particular fatality in relation to that particular inquest.

Therefore, I'm quite susceptible to having recommendations of that nature acted upon and steps taken, as they have been in the legislation that I've mentioned, as a result of the coroner's direction to various ministries in this government.

I really haven't too much more to say. As for the member for Riverdale's final suggestion, I'll have to read Hansard for that, but I believe he was in some way a little more restrictive than the suggested amendment from his colleague from Dovercourt. I think he was sticking to dangerous types of occupation, and that is much more reasonable than the broad provision suggested in the amendment by the member for Dovercourt. That's all I have to say now.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole.

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the amendment to the motion that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Mr. Ruston: I hope to get finished this evening, even before the closing hour. I suppose with the competition from the Montreal-Boston hockey game and so forth we don't expect to have too many listening to our remarks. However, we will have them on record anyway.

Mr. Conway: The member is not going to talk about STOL, is he?

Mr. Ruston: No, I won't be talking about STOL. I hope to speak briefly on the budget itself, looking over the past 10 years of the operations of this government. Then, hopefully, I will branch out into some other areas of concern that I have. One will be education and where we are heading in that regard at this time.

I was looking over a budget that was presented in the first year I attended this House. That was in 1968 when Mr. Charles MacNaughton presented his budget and it is interesting to note what has gone on in the intervening 10-year period.

Mr. Conway: Where's Charlie now?

Mr. Ruston: If you look over the budgetary expenditures of Mr. MacNaughton's budget of 1968 he showed a total net general expenditure of $2,819 million and some odd cents. It is interesting to compare that budget with the one introduced on April 7 by this Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) with total expenditures forecast at $14,005 million.

Mr. Conway: Darcy's gone Social Credit.

Mr. Ruston: We hear remarks about government expenditures federally and provincially, and how the federal budget has gone out of kilter since the present Prime Minister of Canada took over. On the other hand, I look at what's happened to the Ontario budget and it seems as though the one that went out of hand in spending was the Provincial Treasurer.

Mr. Cooke: Are you defending Trudeau?

Mr. Ruston: I don't think he needs any defending; he'll look after himself, I'm quite sure of that. I'm just referring to how budgets have been raised in the past 10 years in all levels of government, particularly in provincial fields.

The other concern during that period is the deficit.

Mr. Sterling: Not quite $5 billion.

Mr. Ruston: We have run a deficit almost every year since the present Premier (Mr. Davis) took over. The increase in the deficit has been rather astounding. From about $200 million in 1969-70 it has risen each year.

Mr. Cooke: What's the federal Liberals' deficit?

Mr. Ruston: The deficit in 1970-71 was $136 million and it went up to $625 million in 1971-72, when the present Premier took over as leader of the Conservative Party of Ontario and we've never had anything but a deficit since then. In 1975-76 there was a $1,480 million deficit; in 1976-77, $1,229 million; and in interim 1977-78 $1,597 million.

Mr. Sterling: Absolutely amazing.

Mr. Ruston: And the proposed deficit this year in Ontario is $1.3 billion.

[9:45]

You can only have a deficit for so long and then something has to be done. I don't know what the present Treasurer has been trying to do, whether he's been trying to spend his way out of a deficit in the past 10 years, or even the last five or six years. It just doesn't work out.

Mr. Sterling: Where would you cut?

Mr. Ruston: It seems he has either to quit spending so much or raise taxes. Those are the only two things he can do that I'm aware of. I guess it's the same as in one's own financial situation; if one continues to spend a great deal more than one takes in, some day somebody locks the door on you and you're out in the road. That's about what we should do with the Treasurer of Ontario, the way he's run the province for the last number of years.

It's fine for a government to have a deficit, or to "pump-prime" at certain times, depending on conditions of the province or the country at that time. If unemployment rises, then naturally it's up to the government to do whatever it can to stimulate the economy. That's when government should step in. But it seems like this present government has just been stepping in all the time and no one really seems to know what their plans were. I don't think they had any concrete plans as to where they were going. They just seemed to think it was the ideal thing to continue to overspend and to run a deficit.

The problem is that we have such a large deficit now that the financing of the deficit alone is running into major proportions; and when we see restrictions of hospital care and other such items, but especially hospital and health care in general, the people get very upset. Because, after all, to most everyone health care is the most important thing in life. That's when you need the facilities, Mr. Speaker. That's when you need the care, when you've got problems with your health. Those are the items that really shouldn't be cut back unless it's really absolutely necessary, or unless there is mismanagement of spending.

It behooves anyone to look at the budgets of this government in the last number of years and to try to ascertain what their plans were; what they expected of it when they continued to run such a large deficit. Now we're using over 10 per cent of our taxes to pay the interest on the debt, and this money would certainly be used in other ways to much more advantage. It concerns me a great deal, because we are putting a debt on our families and our children in the future. We look at—

Mr. Sterling: Nine thousand dollars federally.

Mr. Ruston:—Ontario's non-public borrowing, or the Canada Pension Plan now in 1977-78, $858 million—

Mr. G. Taylor: You're not sitting in your seat.

Mr. Ruston:—and the teacher's superannuation fund of $475 million.

Mr. Cooke: What's the federal Liberal deficit?

Mr. Ruston: I hear a little rumbling around to my left over here.

Mr. G. Taylor: Is that all it takes?

Mr. Ruston: I don't know whether they're rooting for the hockey team someplace or what they're talking about. I can't make out what they're saying, Mr. Speaker, so you'll pardon me if I ignore them.

Mr. Cooke: I am asking you what Trudeau's deficit is.

Mr. Ruston: I'm sure they're not going to add anything important to what's going on here.

Mr. Conway: That gang have been on the public payroll since day one.

Mr. Speaker: I want to remind the honourable members that this isn't the question period.

Mr. Ruston: That's right. They have been and that's all they ever expect to be. I guess they think money grows on trees and they can just pick it off and pass it out to their friends.

Mr. Cooke: The federal Liberals think it grows on trees.

Mr. Ruston: It's interesting to look at some of the expenditures of different departments over the past number of years. I was just noticing that the Education budget in 1968 was $850 million. Now in this present year we're over the $2 billion mark; education is around the $2 billion mark. It shows the increases since this present Premier took over. He was previously the Minister of Education.

We would like to talk, if we could, in regard to OHIP and the problems we are having now with the doctors claiming they are being mistreated. I saw an article in the paper the other day about a number of them who hadn't received their cheques. Somebody had said they'd mailed them out in brown envelopes, and they think the post office department put them in third class mail. Now they are late getting their cheques.

Mr. Makarchuk: I have the same problem with welfare recipients.

Mr. Ruston: What concerns me is we have three doctors in my own area who have opted out. They are in the clinic in the La Salle area and they have opted out of OHIP.

Mr. Cooke: I raised that in question period.

Mr. Ruston: Yes, I heard that, but the member doesn't know everything that is going on.

There are some problems there. There is another clinic that has opened up in a nearby area as well. In this particular one, I think what bothers me about the OHIP payments is general practitioners and the rate to which they have been held. If we look back over the period of the last 10 years, and I know in 1968-69 we still operated medicare under different private plans, Windsor Medical and, in our own county, the Essex County Medico-operative. We were paying, at that time, around $5 for an office visit. Most of the time we paid the full medical association rate. Sometimes we paid 90 per cent and other times we paid 100 per cent, depending on the financial position of the co-op, but it was around $5 an office visit. Now, up until this month the government was paying $7.20.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if you look at what the increase in income has been over the past 10 years it seems to me to be very unfair. I think when they are putting these rates up and negotiating the rates with the doctors it is most unfair to take a flat rate of six or seven per cent and raise it across the board. If it's an operation costing $200, at least you get $12 or $14 more, but six per cent of a $7 office visit is pretty small. I think the general practitioners have a good case when they say they have been kept down and they would be able to give better care if they could get a little more for general practice.

There are a number of items we think should be mentioned here. Of concern, and I'm sure it is a concern of everybody now in Ontario—mostly in Ontario—is the auto pact. It is interesting, Mr. Speaker, to read the comments in all the news media, and so forth. Everyone is an expert on the auto pact. You hear reports. The Treasurer, of course, had a report brought out not too long ago by officials of the Ontario government. There are discussions as to whether it is very accurate. I think it might be a good idea if we read into the record, the actual auto pact, the agreement. I know a lot of people talk about it and many have never actually seen it in print. Of course, it's available. There is a very small two-page article here, Mr. Speaker, and I'm going to read it into the record and maybe discuss afterwards how it can be negotiated and so on.

This is an Agreement Concerning Automotive Products Between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States of America.

"The government of Canada and the government of the United States of America, determined to strengthen the economic relations between our two countries, recognizing that this can best be achieved through the stimulation of economic growth and through the expansion of markets available to producers in both countries within the framework of the established policy of both countries of promoting multilateral trade;

"Recognizing that an expansion of trade can best be achieved through the reduction or elimination of tariff and all other barriers to trade operating to impede or distort the full and efficient development of each country's trade and industrial potential;

"Recognizing the important place that the automotive industry occupies in the industrial economy of the two countries and the interests of industry, labour and consumer in sustaining high levels of efficient production and continued growth in the automotive industry, agree as follows:

"Article 1: The governments of Canada and the United States, pursuant to the above principles, shall seek the early achievement of the following objectives:

"(a) The creation of a broader market for automotive products within which the full benefits of specialization and large-scale production can be achieved;

"(b) The liberalization of the United States and Canadian automotive trade in respect of tariff barriers and other factors tending to impede it, with a view to enabling the industries of both countries to participate on a fair and equitable basis in the expanding total market of the two countries;

"(c) The development of conditions in which market forces may operate effectively to obtain the most economic pattern of investment, production and trade.

"It shall be the policy of each government to avoid actions which would frustrate the achievement of these objectives.

"Article 2(a): The government of Canada, not later than the entry into force of the legislation contemplated in paragraph (b) of this article, shall accord duty-free treatment to imports of the products of the United States described in Annex A.

"(b) The government of the United States, during the session of the United States Congress commencing on January 4, 1965, shall seek enactment of legislation authorizing duty-free treatment of imports of the products of Canada described in Annex B. In seeking such legislation, the government of the United States shall also seek authority permitting the implementation of such duty-free treatment retroactively to the earliest date administratively possible following the date upon which the government of Canada has accorded duty-free treatment. Promptly after the entry into force of such legislation the government of the United States shall accord duty-free treatment to the products of Canada described in Annex B.

"Article 3: The commitments made by the two governments in this agreement shall not preclude action by either government consistent with its obligations under Part II of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

"Article 4(a): At any time, at the request of either government, the two governments shall consult with respect to any matter relating to this agreement.

"(b) Without limiting the foregoing, the two governments shall at the request of either government, consult with respect to any problems which may arise concerning automotive producers in the United States which do not at present have facilities in Canada for the manufacture of motor vehicles, and with respect to the implications for the operation of this agreement of new automotive producers becoming established in Canada.

"(c) No later than January 1, 1968, the two governments shall jointly undertake a comprehensive review of the progress made towards achieving the objectives set forth in Article 1. During this review the governments shall consider any such further steps as may be necessary or desirable for the full achievement of these objectives.

"Article 5: Access to the Canadian and United States markets provided for under this agreement may by agreement be accorded on similar terms to other countries.

"Article 6: This agreement shall enter into force provisionally on the date of signature and definitively on the date upon which notes are exchanged between the two governments giving notice that appropriate action in their respective legislatures has been completed.

"Article 7: This agreement shall be of unlimited duration. Each government shall, however, have the right to terminate this agreement 12 months from the date on which that government gives written notice to the other government of its intention to terminate the agreement."

This was done in duplicate at Johnson City, Texas on January 16, 1965, in English and in French, the two texts being equally authentic. In witness whereof the representatives of the two governments have signed this agreement. For the government of Canada, Lester B. Pearson and Paul Martin; for the government of the United States of America, Lyndon B. Johnson and Dean Rusk.

That's a statement of the auto pact as it is. One of the interesting parts of it is in article 1 which says: "It shall be the policy of each government to avoid action which would frustrate the achievement of these objectives."

Mr. B. Newman: Repeat that. That was good.

Mr. Ruston: The objectives that I could see is that each country will, at all times, try to produce their fair share of the total production of automobiles.

I'm wondering if some of the things we read about that are being tried or attempted to be done in the United States—I was reading just recently about a place in Ohio where they were offering tax-free land for a large plant for the Ford Motor Company. I'm wondering if that could be classified as being a policy that may infringe on the rights of Canada to compete. What concerns me is if one starts that then we'll both have to start it. That could be a very serious situation.

I suppose I could go back and think of one of the tire manufacturing companies that started in New Brunswick—I believe it was Michelin. It got a large grant from the federal government to build a plant in the eastern provinces. At that time, you may recall, the United States was complaining. If I recall correctly they did put a special import duty on tires coming from that plant. They felt it was unfair competition because the government was subsidizing the plant. That may be, in effect, a part of what we could be facing now.

Article 4(a) says: "At any time, at the request of either government, the two governments shall consult with respect to any matter relating to this agreement."

They certainly can consult at any time with regard to it, but it does take a year's notice that they intend to cancel it. I think we've got to be very careful. Things in the United States may be changed somewhat right now. We have at this time a Democratic president in Mr. Carter. Of course, at the time it was signed by Mr. Johnson, who was also a Democratic president. But there is a little different circumstance now in that Mr. Carter has tied—I guess, other people have tied their strings to Mr. Carter, I'm not sure which way it goes. The former head of the UAW and the mayor of Detroit, which is the automobile centre of the United States, have been very strong supporters of Mr. Carter. I'm sure they're going to have their input as to any changes in the auto pact or exert pressure to have industry expand in the United States, especially in Michigan if at all possible. We're having some of that right now in Michigan. Governor Milliken went to Washington to try to get some funds to help Chrysler expand in Michigan. That's something that concerns many people.

In auto production in Canada it's interesting to see over the years some of the comparisons of what we have. I was just looking over a statement I had made up from some statistics which I read in the magazines and newspapers. In 1965, General Motors produced 351,303 cars in Canada and 68,420 trucks for a total of 419,723 vehicles. In 1972, they produced 406,186 cars and 104,705 trucks for a total of 510,891 vehicles. In 1977, they produced 522,279 cars and 351,256 trucks for a total of 873,535 vehicles. From 1965 to 1977, there was an increase from 419,723 to 873,535.

The Ford Motor Company of Canada in 1965 produced 153,323 cars and 43,792 trucks for a total of 190,379. In 1972, which happened to be a record production year—these are just years I picked out and then found later that this was a record production year for Ford—they produced 460,435 cars and 174,031 trucks for a total of 634,466 units. Then, in 1977, they produced 376,785 cars and 212,582 trucks for a total of 589,367, which is down some from 1972, but which is about 400,000 more than they made in 1965.

Mr. Haggerty: It sounds like a good deal.

Mr. Ruston: In 1965, we had a deficit in auto trading with the United States of $500 million. The statement we see in the papers is that we had a trading deficit last year. It depends on who says it but it runs all the way from $1 billion to $1½ billion. That has a lot to do with auto parts themselves, which is one of our problems. I hope to have a little bit to say about what we should be doing with regard to getting into parts manufacturing in a stronger way in Ontario.

Mr. Cooke: What are the federal Liberals doing on that?

Mr. Ruston: We have some employee figures here. For instance, Chrysler Canada in 1963 had 5,000 employees and in 1965 they had 6,200. In 1971, the number had doubled to 13,500, and in 1972 it went up to 14,300. Now they have 16,000 employees. That's an increase of almost 10,000 employees in Chrysler Canada since 1965.

Mr. Haggerty: Just Chrysler?

Mr. Ruston: Yes. In 1972 General Motors had 26,600 employees in Canada and in 1978 they have 37,368, which is an increase of almost 11,000. During that same time, from the figures I have employment in the United States in General Motors increased about 10 per cent.

I must say it is a little difficult at times getting all the figures to match. There have been many reports about this auto pact. There's even some doubt as to the one that the Treasurer has had made up lately by his officials. Some claim that what they are really saying there is that we are short of parts, but when they were assessing their total imports and exports, there are some who claim that that report included parts imported from offshore and not just the United States.

I was talking to somebody in the parts business one day who was telling me about the Pinto car made in St. Thomas. An interesting thing is that the radiator was made in Mexico, the motor was made in Brazil, the transmission was made in Germany and the skin or the body itself was made in the US. We're assemblers and—

Mr. B. Newman: They should call it a Heinz.

Mr. Ruston: Heinz 57 variety, my colleague from Windsor-Walkerville says.

That's world trade, of course. That's part of something that we have to live with to some extent. We're a trading country and, heaven help us, we don't want a wall around Canada. I'm sure you're aware, Mr. Speaker, that there would be many things we would have to do without if we didn't have world trade, and I'm sure we all expect to carry that on to some extent.

The example I have cited gives an idea, when we're assessing what goes into a car, where the parts are deficient in our agreement. If they were figuring in those parts when they come in from the United States, all imports coming in, if they came in from offshore countries then it's not a very fair assessment to say that we're that deficient in parts if that was put in that latest report commissioned by the Treasurer.

If we look back to 1974 or 1975, when auto production was down all over Canada and the United States, part of it was caused by the OPEC countries raising the price of oil so much. In 1974 or 1975 there were places in the United States where cars were lined up for gas and many stations were out of gas. The automobile industry took a downturn.

In 1975, of course, Canada was affected a great deal, and that's when our Treasurer took the sales tax off cars to try to stimulate the economy or to try to stimulate the automobile business. It did help somewhat in Ontario. But the problem is that when we have an auto pact with another country as large as the United States, a small downturn there can really affect us a great deal, because we are dependent on the cars that we make here being sold in the United States.

If we look at the total number of cars—I was looking at some statistics the other day, and I've looked at so many statistics that I'm not sure about the old adage that figures don't lie but liars can figure—the total number of cars manufactured in Canada in 1977 was 1.7 million, while the total sold in Canada was 1,136,000, which means 564,000 more cars were made in Canada than were sold in Canada.

About 2,500 are employed at the new Chrysler van plant on Pillette Road in Windsor and I've heard some say that from 80 per cent to 90 per cent of all the parts going into those vans are imported. Again, that shows we're not really into the parts business as much as we should be.

What we probably should be doing, I think, is having both levels of government—the federal government definitely is going to have to get involved—involved with the auto manufacturers association or any new entrepreneur, wherever he may come from, who can manufacture parts in Canada. We should be looking at some of the parts manufacturing that takes high intensive energy, because we have a fair amount of energy in Ontario and Canada. We should be looking at that.

We should also be looking at new plastics. The new automobiles are lighter in weight because in the United States by 1985 their gas consumption must average 25 miles a gallon; so the cars are smaller. We should also be looking at manufacturing aluminum parts because that's another thing that's going to be used a lot more in cars because of the weight.

We do hear rumours that General Motors may be planning a large plant in Quebec, apparently to make aluminum parts for their new models coming out in the next few years. That would certainly be a shot in the arm if something like that were to come into the country.

I think we have to put pressure on the government of the United States. I understand that is being done. We also have to keep in contact with the automobile industry itself, the four large companies, to see that we get a fair share. In most cases we have been doing pretty well. I would certainly not want to cancel the auto pact at this time. I think that would be foolhardy, I just don't think that that's the way we have to go. It can be made into or continue to be a good thing. There are going to be times when the United States economy turns down, that it's going to affect us. After all, they are the ones that are using 90 per cent of the automobiles manufactured in the two countries.

This is something that has to be watched continually but we have to be careful that we don't, as the fellow says, throw the baby out with the bath water by someone saying we should really go shake the auto pact. We can discuss it, but I don't think we should go with the intention of drawing up a new one. I don't think we could do much better as far as that part goes except in the parts business. We have to put our main concern in the parts business and we should spend some time trying to find new companies or new industries that would go into the parts business in Canada.

The time is moving along. I could probably talk a little longer on that as it is an important item in our area. I know that Windsor is diversified somewhat more than it was. I can recall when the Ford Motor Company moved out to Oakville and we thought it was the end of the world. However, it was pretty tough for a number of years but Chrysler took over some of the slack. The auto pact came in and gave us a chance to really build up.

When I say we have to get into more parts and so forth, I am not saying it should be in Essex North or in the city of Windsor or whatever it might be. I don't want Essex county built over with asphalt and cement. I know we have some of the best farming land in Ontario. It's not only the land but the heat units that count, though it hasn't been very warm this year so far. However, I am sure that nature will take care of that in time. I think any place in Ontario would benefit us all wherever it might be.

Naturally, we like to see improvements in our own area but, on the other hand, we also have to look at the total country as well. If the people are working in some other province or in some other part of Ontario making these auto parts, then that's going to give them the money to buy whatever we make in Windsor and Essex county. That takes care of that and everybody is happy.

I'm a little concerned about another matter where we've had some problems in our area in the last few months. We had one teachers' strike that went on for seven weeks in the Essex County Separate School Board and we now have Essex county secondary school teachers on strike. That really is one of the things that concerns me a great deal. I just wonder where we are going with our education today. We read some startling things that are going on in our neighbouring country, the United States.

I was looking at the Detroit News this weekend. On May 21 there was an article headed, "Taxpayer Revolt Trims Bay City Schools." That article is really frightening. They have mill rates over there to vote on and they were turned down. Here's a city of about 50,000 people where their schools are practically closed and the cost of operations keeps going up. They had to have a vote to get a higher mill rate to pay the costs and they were turned down by the public.

Heaven help us, we don't want that over here. But I think there's a feeling among people in general that our education system has got out of hand financially. Enrolment is going down and everyone, I'm sure, is trying to keep the taxes within a reasonable amount, but we just don't know where we're heading.

I was looking through the public accounts and comparing the number of people in the Ministry of Education who are working in the main office here. In 1970-71 there were 678 who made over $20,000 a year. On March 31, 1975, there were 486 making over $25,000 a year. Then in March 1977 there were 538. Of course, that has to do with the increase in wages and so forth over that time, but there was still 538.

When the Premier was Minister of Education, he brought in a bill to consolidate school districts in Ontario and these school districts would have the operation of all their schools and they would pretty well run their own show. They wouldn't really need all these officials in Toronto hustling down every week or two, checking with the teachers and checking with the students to see how they're doing and if they're teaching properly and all this. Our understanding was that this would be taken care of locally and we wouldn't need this massive bureaucratic system here in Toronto. But it just doesn't seem to have turned out that way.

I was looking to compare our system here with some places in the United States, and I know that their system isn't perfect by any means, but we must compare it. After all, it concerns government and taxation, and people are interested. I was looking at the director of education for the city of Washington, who has 10,000 employees under his jurisdiction—7,000 teachers and 3,000 other employees. He receives $40,000 a year. The directors of education for most of the boards of education that I can find in Ontario have salaries that run anywhere from $45,000 to $55,000, and the total staffs they have jurisdiction over run anywhere from 600 to up to 2,000.

I don't know why it is that we feel that we have to be a higher level of income than a similar responsibility in the United States. The United States is supposed to be one of the richest countries in the world, and it concerns me a little when I see figures like that.

Here again, that was brought in under the Ministry of Education and the present Premier was the one who set up the guidelines. He decided that each board must be headed by a director and must have a superintendent and then must have an assistant superintendent. I think in our own area we have a director, a superintendent and four assistant superintendents. I'm not sure where it goes from there.

But in our strike situation with the Essex county secondary school teachers we have a different situation. The school board has asked to go to final offer selection or a voluntary binding arbitration, but the teachers refuse. In the previous strike at the Essex county separate school boards, the teachers wanted to go to voluntary binding arbitration, and the board refused. From what I can gather from the previous areas of Wentworth, Pembroke or Renfrew and other areas, the teachers always wanted to go to the arbitration and the boards did not. But Essex county, for some reasons or other, is just the opposite.

I don't know why. I talked to the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells) the other day, since he had sent letters to the boards asking them to settle their strike situations even if they went to arbitration. I said he should send a letter to the teachers' federation in our area asking them to go to arbitration and get the children back to school so they won't be losing any of their year. I said it certainly was a shame if at this time, when there is only five weeks left, they should be out of school.

There was a notice in the Windsor Star of May 19 which said the Essex county Board of Education's negotiations with the secondary teachers have left only monetary issues unresolved. The board here gives the detail of the breakdown of the salaries and so forth. I haven't got other boards of education to compare them to but effective January 1, 1977, teachers would run from a minimum of $12,355 to a maximum of $25,080. Vice-principals would run from $28,300 to $30,700 and principals $34,800.

Effective January 1, 1978, teachers would receive, to begin with, $13,096 up to $26,585. Then effective January 1, 1979, teachers would get $13,100 to a maximum of $27,500. Effective September 1, 1979, teachers would receive $13,620 to $28,600, plus employee benefits—OHIP all paid; semi-private hospital; dental plan; 75 per cent paid for the drug plan; and life insurance, three times the salary. Positions of responsibility—25 per cent of all teachers receive an allowance in addition to salary as follows: $1,000 to $2,400, and then retroactive salary from $400 to $1,800, then allowance for extra degrees.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, I don't have the figures from other areas. I am wondering if maybe at some time we are going to have to look at the matter of province-wide negotiations. Not many people in this House may agree to that, but I think it is something we are going to have to look at. It would mean that the contracts would begin on September 1 and they would be for all of Ontario.

Someone said you might have all of the schools closed. Well, maybe we would. But you know, Mr. Speaker, at least we would have a handle on it and when it was settled then everybody would be set then for the next year or two and we wouldn't have to be worrying about this continual problem. That is something I think we are going to have to look at.

Another thing I am concerned about is that when they are giving increases they continue percentage wise across the board. I don't think that's the fairest way. I think there's got to be a better way. I think the lower ones should get a higher percentage. That always has concerned me with percentage increases.

It's getting near closing time and rather than continue on another day I might just touch on one more thing. I could talk about a number of things, but I have on the order paper, as you might be aware, Mr. Speaker, a motion that the Legislature petition the government of Canada to have a referendum on capital punishment. I think that that is something that the people of Canada have been denied. I think it's a very personal thing. A person votes his own conscience on it and I don't begrudge anyone doing that.

In our own area the federal member, Mr. Whelan, has voted against capital punishment and I respect him for that. That's his opinion. But I think that something as serious as this should be left up to the conscience of the people of Canada to decide.

I noticed in the Toronto Star on May 11 that a former mayor of Toronto, Allan Lamport, wrote a letter. I don't have time to read it, Mr. Speaker, but it's a very good letter. He says that should be the route we should go because right now the leaders of all three parties in Ottawa are against capital punishment and I think 95 per cent of all the newspapers in Canada are too. So we are going to have a very difficult time putting it in unless we have a referendum. If the referendum is a very decisive referendum then I think it should be up to the government of Canada to instigate it and leave it up to the conscience of the people of Canada and not just to the conscience of each of 265 members in the Parliament of Canada.

Well, Mr. Speaker, it is closing time so I will quit at that. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: Anyone care to adjourn the debate?

On motion by Mr. Cooke, the debate was adjourned.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, the standing committee on resources development has passed a motion asking the House to give them permission to hire legal counsel. I would ask at this time to have the unanimous consent of the House to revert to motions.

Mr. Speaker: Do we have unanimous consent?

Agreed.

MOTION

STANDING RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Maeck, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Welch, moved that the standing committee on resources development be authorized to engage counsel for its study of the annual report of the Ministry of Agriculture and Food at charges approved by the Board of Internal Economy.

Motion agreed to.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Maeck, the House adjourned at 10:30 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, MAY 25, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

LIQUOR LEGISLATION

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I would like to announce to the House our plans for changes in Ontario's liquor legislation as part of the periodic review necessary to keep our liquor policy contemporary. Our objective with these changes is a balanced approach which provides the progressive measures the public wants with sufficient safeguards to prevent abuses.

As members will appreciate, liquor policy must be responsive to developments and attitudes within our society.

Mr. Conway: He sounds like Howard Ferguson.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In recent years, this has meant more progressive drinking laws. The legal age of consumption was lowered to 18 and new legislation was passed easing many of the traditional restrictions on alcohol consumption. These changes reflected a general wish to grant more responsibility to individual citizens and less to government.

We now have had an opportunity to assess this progressive trend. In general, the results are positive. There has been no substantial increase in per capita consumption of alcohol in Ontario in the past three years. In fact, Liquor Control Board's sales increases have slowed down significantly. We hope this will continue because the effects of consumption in terms of such factors as illness, financial dependency, absenteeism and general social havoc have serious repercussions. It seems that most of us have become our own liquor control board, as the Ministry of Health advised in its education campaign.

There are some exceptions, however. We're concerned about underage drinking and the impact it is having in our high schools. We are concerned about drinking and driving, especially among young people. We are also concerned that police do not believe current laws can be adequately enforced so as to prevent obvious abuses. We are concerned that a large number of our citizens may be losing respect for law which is not enforced.

These problems have received a great deal of study and we have come to realize that alcohol abuse is in large measure beyond the power of government and the reach of legislation. It is absurd to think that government alone can instil a sense of maturity or a respect for values which are not to be found within the family; nor can we prevent people from abusing alcohol if they really want to do so.

Nonetheless, there is value in government leadership in this area. Defining unlawful or dangerous behaviour and enforcing the sanctions against it will have a deterrent effect. Of course, to be effective, this approach requires that we eliminate anomalies or inconsistencies in our legislation which have proved to be a nuisance and which have encouraged disrespect for the law. Thus, the policy changes which I am proposing today to the Liquor Licence Act reflect a balanced approach to respond to the problems of abuse and also recognize areas where a more progressive approach is required.

Our first proposal is to raise the drinking age to 19, effective September 1, 1978. There is nothing magical or philosophical about this age. It is, however, a realistic and practical way of dealing with alcohol abuse in high schools. All 18-year-olds of legal drinking age will be permitted to continue their eligibility to drink.

Only 2.4 per cent of our high school students in September are 19 and over, compared to 10.8 per cent who are now legally able to drink. A legal age of 19 will substantially reduce the peer pressure on younger students as more than 97 per cent of high school students will be ineligible to drink legally. Obviously this is not a perfect solution.

Mr. Nixon: You are probably right.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Possibly.

There will still be young people in high school old enough to drink legally; there will still be some peer pressure and, undoubtedly, some of those who are not entitled to drink will do so anyway.

However, we believe that this measure will make it easier for many of our students to say no to alcohol consumption. This conclusion is based on the very extensive assessment of student attitudes carried on by the youth secretariat under the direction of my seatmate, the member for Mississauga North (Mr. Jones), whose excellent report on this matter was published a little over two years ago. The Terry Jones report proposes a legal age of 19 and so did the select committee on highway safety in its recommendations published last September.

Mr. Eakins: So did the member for Essex South.

Mr. Kerrio: What about him?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That committee, which included members from all parties, concluded that the government of Ontario should raise the legal drinking age to 19 because "steps must be taken to reduce access to alcohol for the youngest drivers." I should pause to note the private member's bill introduced by the member for Essex—

Mr. Ruston: South.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: South.

(Applause.)

Hon. Mr. Grossman: How about the Terry Jones report as well? Highway safety can take care of themselves.

Mr. T. P. Reid: It took you three years to do it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The age of employment in a licensed establishment will remain at 18. We do not wish to add to student unemployment, particularly in the resort and tourist industry, at a time when many students are finding it difficult to obtain part-time work. We see no inconsistency in having one age for drinking and another for employment.

To make the drinking age effective, we have to provide suitable identification. Under the act, the only piece of identification which protects the licensee from prosecution is a card provided by my ministry which has the bearer's photograph on it. To obtain this card, applicants must provide proof of their identity and age, a photograph and $2.

There are now 93,000 in circulation which will continue to be honoured. As part of the Ontario government's new policy approach, we intend to expand the number of cards in use this summer by hiring teams of students to travel across the province as part of the Experience '78 student summer employment program. These teams will take photographs and issue cards on the spot.

Mr. Lewis: I have heard of make-work projects, but that is the best so far this year.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We will also encourage increased promotion of this photo card by our licensees, the Ontario Hotel and Motel Association and colleges and universities. In addition, the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) has already introduced a bill which was passed last week to phase in photographs on drivers' licences. Not everyone drives, but the licence itself will contain the date of birth, which will be proof of the right of the individual to drink.

The new drinking age will be enforced, and enforced stringently. My colleague, the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry), has asked his crown attorneys to press for higher fines in appropriate cases involving illegal consumption by minors. Currently, it is our belief that the penalties being imposed are often too low to warrant police action or to deter illegal behaviour.

Mr. Warner: Crack down on the bars.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are proposing the introduction for the first time of a minimum penalty for licensees who serve a minor. This fine will be $500 for each and every offence, plus an automatic seven-day suspension. The Liquor Licence Board will also have the option to extend the suspension as it sees fit. The maximum fine will be raised from $2,000 to $10,000. We believe these penalties will impress on licensees our serious view on underage drinking.

We will be proposing an amendment to the regulations under the Liquor Licence Act to provide a general obligation on the part of the licensee to request identification from anyone who could reasonably be assumed to be under age. In addition, we propose to write into the law, the present acknowledged right of a licensee to refuse anyone entrance to or to eject anyone from the premises. This is strong medicine, but no other approach is likely to work. Enforcement of these measures will not be expensive or difficult. We can readily identify where underage drinking is occurring and our increased investigations will, therefore, concentrate upon those relatively few problem operators.

Mr. Warner: You haven't been able to; you don't do it now.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is a matter of making existing police work and board inspections more effective by strengthening the law and increasing the penalties. Most licensees are already acting responsibly and the remainder will get the message.

We also think that education is important in attitudes of young people towards drinking.

The Canadian distilling industry has agreed to finance a conference next year to explore ways to improve curriculum guidelines on alcohol education in our schools. I am pleased to announce this conference will be jointly sponsored with the Ontario Association of Curriculum Development.

In addition, my colleague, the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell), will be proposing the allocation of funds to reinstitute a television advertising campaign on moderation in use of alcohol. It is our hope that between the government and industry we can provide the public with more information on the dangers of alcohol abuse for the whole population, not just for minors.

Enforcement will go hand in hand with education. The existing legislation, which focuses on illegal consumption, has created specific difficulties in enforcement for the police. Possessing alcoholic beverages in an open bottle or glass is not illegal. The police officer must actually witness consumption. The legislation will be amended so that open bottles cannot be carried in public places. The police will also be empowered to seize any liquor in the possession of people charged with an offence so that illegal consumption can be stopped when it is first noticed.

A great many complaints have been made by campers about consumption of alcohol in provincial parks. My colleague, the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. F. S. Miller), has, therefore, commenced an experimental ban on the consumption of alcoholic beverages in 11 provincial parks between May 1 and June 18 of this year. Preliminary reports indicate public acceptance of this policy. We will be introducing amendments to our legislation to enable us to reflect the results of this experiment.

Consistent with our philosophy of providing local options in liquor policy, municipalities will also be given the right to pass bylaws making possession of alcohol illegal in specific parks, arenas or stadiums controlled by that municipality.

We are introducing a major new campaign against drinking and driving. The Ministry of Transportation and Communications is developing a new education program for use in schools. We believe a sustained and forceful information program is the most effective way to reduce the alarming upward spiral in automobile accidents involving young drinking drivers.

However, education is not enough. The government has no sympathy for the person who drives and drinks. We believe major steps are necessary to ensure that drinking drivers are taken off our roads and the penalties and enforcement become major deterrents. At present, the Highway Traffic Act provides for an automatic three-month suspension of the driver's licence with the first conviction for drinking and driving, and a mandatory six-months suspension on the second and subsequent offences. My colleague, the Minister of Transportation and Communications, will be introducing legislation to provide for the first time a three-year automatic suspension on the third and subsequent conviction.

In addition to tougher penalties, we are determined to create a system to help detect drinking drivers. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kerr) will shortly provide more portable screening devices to police for use in patrol cars. This will enable the police to increase protection and prosecution. We want to ensure that the portable units are in more locations more often, and therefore will be more effective across the province.

Furthermore, the government proposes to introduce in the fall legislation to give police officers the authority to issue immediate, on-the-spot, 24-hour licence suspension in cases where the portable screening device has indicated a degree of impairment sufficient to make the motorist a risk, although not legally impaired. A similar system has worked well in Alberta and British Columbia. We feel it is an effective way to get the drinking driver off the road.

This suspension will not result in a criminal record or any other penalty whatsoever, but it will help to administer a sobering shock to the marginal drinking drivers and get them off the road before someone is killed. Of course, drivers can still choose to go back to the police station for the legal breathalyser and risk a possible charge of impaired driving.

Local authorities will be asked to step up policing of drinking and driving, including greater use of spot checks. The public must perceive there is a good chance of being apprehended before the law on drinking and driving is taken seriously. We must stop the senseless slaughter of people on our highways by those who are irresponsible enough to combine drinking and driving. We believe these measures will help to achieve this objective.

As I mentioned earlier, we also wish to round out the liquor policy by removing the anomalies in the current law. We are, therefore, proposing five progressive changes which will eliminate restrictions now in force. These changes reflect the fact that our experience with more progressive legislation has been largely positive.

Mr. Nixon: We read all about this in the paper yesterday. How come it was released yesterday?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Firstly, we intend to drop the requirement of a sit-down meal with a Sunday drink. The food-liquor ratio provides sufficient control over consumption, so we intend to enforce this restriction instead.

Mr. Blundy: Will I be able to get a drink on the train?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Second, we are removing some of the limitations on the way licensees run their business. For example, we will allow hotels to close the few rooms they are now keeping open just to retain their liquor licence if local municipal councils say the rooms are not needed. In effect, this converts some of those small hotels to a tavern.

Thirdly, we propose to allow resorts to apply to the board to allow minors into all licensed rooms in resort areas so that families can be together without restriction. Minors will also be allowed into licensed areas of private clubs if no liquor is being served.

Mr. Conway: How about moonshine parlours?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Fourthly, we are proposing to exempt airlines from the normal restrictions and limitations on hours during which alcoholic beverages may be served.

Fifthly, we are introducing amendments to allow licensed premises and Liquor Control Board outlets to operate on election day as we feel the present legislation is an anachronism in today's world.

Mr. Breagh: You guys will do anything to win those seats.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In summarizing our proposed changes to some aspects of Ontario's liquor policy, I would like to emphasize that the main feature is a balanced approach.

Mr. Lewis: Why are you opening up the bars on election day? The entire Tory vote will be inside. You will never get your majority back.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are looking for tougher enforcement to ensure that the generally positive experience we have had with more progressive legislation is not jeopardized by the irresponsible behaviour of the minority. We see these changes as part of a continuous review of our liquor policy. The door will be open for further changes when required. I invite the comments and suggestions of the honourable members of the Legislature as we proceed with these changes.

MEDIC-ALERT MONTH

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, sitting in your gallery today are Mr. Norman Ayoub, campaign chairman of the Medic-Alert campaign sponsored by the Toronto Life Underwriters Association, and two of the association's executive officers, Mr. Douglas Owen-Hicks and Mr. J. L. Arthur Jefferson.

Mr. Foulds: Will the minister stop mumbling?

Ms. Gigantes: We can't hear him.

Mr. Lewis: It's his usual affliction; hold the papers away from the microphone and speak more slowly.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Can't the members hear me? They are here because the Medic-Alert Foundation has designated May as Medic-Alert Month in Ontario. I would like to take a minute to pay tribute to the valuable work of this foundation.

As honourable members are aware—some of them possibly from first-hand knowledge—the Medic-Alert Foundation issues identification emblems to people with medical conditions. People involved in accidents or episodes making it impossible to describe their condition might become seriously ill, or even worse die, without this emblem, which is worn as an identification bracelet. Among those who wear these bracelets are skin divers, diabetics, epileptics, haemophiliacs; those who suffer from multiple sclerosis, who have severe allergies to horse serum, antibiotics, bee stings; or who take anticoagulants, cortisone or Antabuse; or who wear contact lenses.

The foundation provides a central registration service with serial number, name file and any additional information a member may record. A 24-hour telephone service is maintained by the foundation. Calls are accepted from doctors and public safety officials from anywhere in the world. An estimated one quarter million people in Canada depend on Medic-Alert for informed, immediate help in the event of an emergency. The Medic-Alert Foundation, an affiliate of Medic-Alert International, is a non-profit organization. It has been providing services in Canada for 18 years.

As Minister of Health for Ontario and on behalf of the Ontario Government, I would like to endorse, and ask the House to join in this endorsement, the contribution to health care in the province made by the Medic-Alert Foundation.

INMATE WORK PROJECTS

Hon. Mr. Drea: Later today the government House leader will be tabling a reply to question 52 on the order paper, outlining projects being undertaken by inmates of correctional institutions operated by my ministry.

I know that honourable members will be pleased to learn the extent of the work projects being carried out by inmates in communities across the province. The detailed list which will be provided, mentions 115 individual projects which have been completed, are under way or are planned outside the confines of correctional institutions. In addition, approximately 50 work projects are being conducted on correctional institution properties.

The type of work which inmates are performing ranges from small projects involving only one or two inmates to sizeable undertakings utilizing large work parties. For example, individual inmates from Maplehurst Correctional Centre work on a one-to-one basis to assist a child afflicted by cerebral palsy who requires a daily exercise program. Similarly, inmates of Thunder Bay Correctional Centre help handicapped and disabled citizens to enjoy the swimming program at a local hospital. Two inmates of the Sudbury jail help with patients of a nursing home; while inmates of the Vanier Centre for Women work in day-care and in nursery school programs.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You forgot to mention the program in Brampton.

Hon. Mr. Drea: A well-established program involving inmates of the Rideau Correctional Centre sees one group of inmate volunteers working seven-and-one-half hour shifts daily with the retarded at the Rideau Regional Centre near Smiths Falls, while a second group works similar shifts in the geriatric ward at the Brockville Psychiatric Hospital. Recently, a similar program was established at the Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital where inmates from Mimico Correctional Centre work as volunteers.

As well as inmates performing on a one to one basis, groups of inmates provide maintenance of grounds at various senior citizens' homes. During the winter, inmates of Monteith Correctional Centre cut firewood for needy elderly persons in the north. In other communities, inmates shovelled snow for elderly persons and others unable to carry out such tasks. This summer inmates will be mowing lawns for senior citizens.

Inmate work projects which benefit communities as a whole include general cleanups, such as the work now being performed at the Stephen Leacock home in Orillia, restoration of historical cemeteries, the clearing of snow from around the fire hydrants in Millbrook in the winter and the clearing of ice and snow from all of the 246 bus stops and shelters in Barrie.

Kenora Jail inmates have cut logs into firewood which is sold, with all proceeds going to local community centres. A work crew of inmates from the Guelph Correctional Centre is helping the Grand River Conservation Authority prepare the site for the national convention of the Campers and Hikers Association of Canada to be held next year. Inmates from Burtch Correctional Centre are helping to clean up a river island where a benefit concert will be held this summer to help finance a theatre in Brantford for the entire community.

The work projects on ministry property include renovations to convert a former training school facility at Cambridge into the Waterloo Detention Centre. This project also involved the construction of a 20-foot-high security wall. The work was carried out by inmates under the supervision of correctional staff at savings to the taxpayer of approximately $1 million.

Inmates are helping to construct two new dormitories at the Mimico Correctional Centre. Inmate crews will also build recreation facilities inside the walls at Millbrook Correctional Centre, as well as security walls at the Elgin-Middlesex Detention Centre and at a former training school at Guelph, which is to be converted into a detention facility for adults to replace the antiquated Guelph jail. In addition to assisting in construction projects at institutions, inmates at 22 facilities are planting and maintaining vegetable gardens to produce fresh produce for institutional use. As a matter of fact, we are now entirely self-sufficient in potatoes and at the end of this summer we will be in cabbages for our institutions.

A great deal of credit for the innovative inmate work projects which have been undertaken has fallen to the minister when, in fact, the real credit should go to the superintendents of our institutions and the correctional officers and staff who supervise and direct these work projects. The superintendents have always said that these kinds of projects could be done on a broad scale and now they are proving it. Incidentally, the projects are not being directed out of the ministry main office; control has been decentralized to allow individual institutions to respond to specific local needs.

I am very proud of the inmates who have always contended that, given the chance to work in the community, they would perform in a reasonable and responsible manner.

They have been given the opportunity and they have come through with flying colours. I think it is especially noteworthy that inmates who have worked in the programs I have mentioned have participated without receiving any payment except the personal satisfaction of helping other individuals and/or the community generally. Many of the inmates who worked on these projects will be released prior to July 1 and will therefore not benefit from the new remission system which comes into effect on that date.

The Ministry of Correctional Services is dedicated to providing a $10 million dividend of free labour to the people of Ontario this year, and we have only begun to scratch the surface. Our goal is to help Canada regain its economic strength. I intend to encourage the continued expansion of inmate work projects that benefit the community.

I want it clearly understood that the utilization of inmates has not taken a single paying job away from anyone. The work that is being performed would not have been carried out, because there were no other people willing to perform the tasks or there were no funds available. Rather than reduce job opportunities, some of the projects which inmates have undertaken have stimulated employment by requiring the purchase of materials which would not otherwise have been sold.

Mr. S. Smith: Too bad that's the only way to get a job in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Since inmates are not receiving remuneration for the work they are performing on behalf of the public, I believe some recognition should be given to their efforts. Therefore, signs which say simply "We're Working—Your Ministry of Correctional Services" will soon be erected at sites where inmates are completing projects.

Mr. S. Smith: Nobody else is.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I wish to thank my colleague, the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Henderson), for his co-operation in regard to our new signs, as well as for his assistance in arranging for a number of other government signs to be manufactured by inmates in our institutions as part of their on-the-job training.

Mr. Lewis: If you could find jobs for people who aren't in jail that would be useful.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Send me to Ottawa. Give me the challenge, and I will.

DEBT COLLECTION

Hon. Mr. McKeough: On May 13 the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds) asked several questions with respect to bad debt collection. Since the government does business with such a great number and variety of citizens, sometimes the most difficult problem is just to locate a debtor.

As happens also in business, even if they can be traced some payments are extremely difficult to exact, so six or seven years ago an in-house collection agency was set up in the Ministry of Government Services to assist ministries in their tracing and collection efforts. This has proven successful, as the record shows, and an eight-to-one collection-to-salary cost ratio is a credit to that staff.

Considering the total revenue flow in the province, the current $5.2 million on 7,300 delinquent accounts testifies to the fact that the individual ministries which are responsible for the collection of all moneys due to the government do a very creditable job with a very high success rate. Not only do receivables come from the revenue side, but they can arrive from such things as recovery where a recipient has not complied with the eligibility requirement for grants, student awards; or from recovery of amounts paid to banks under guaranteed loan programs.

The problems of a mounting case load were brought to my treasury division's attention earlier this year by the management within the Ministry of Government Services, and our staffs conducted an in-depth review of the situation. One significant outcome of the review was that an increasing number of small dollar amounts were being referred to collection services which was overloading their capability to deal with the real payoff situations.

The outcome of this review is now in the process of implementation and it is generally aimed at giving the central collection service a more timely, smaller volume and higher dollar-value caseload, which will allow them to do what they do best while reinforcing each individual ministry's own collection responsibilities and timing requirements.

Revised treasury policy statements, which will further clarify these responsibilities and the timeliness and procedures governing the entire receivables processing method, are about to go to print. I understand the public accounts committee requested these of the Ministry of Government Services, and of course they will be glad to supply them.

As to why some ministries may have delayed using the in-house collection services, this mostly reflected a perhaps misplaced reluctance to admit an early defeat in pursuing what they see as their collection responsibility, though I am sure it sometimes reflected less than rigorous follow-up procedures. That issue is specifically addressed in our forthcoming directive.

PROVINCIAL BORROWING

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, on May 17 several questions were raised regarding provincial and Ontario Hydro borrowing.

First, I want to reply to the questions by the member for Waterloo North (Mr. Epp) regarding the recent issue in Europe. To clarify some confusion in the question I want to point out that the issue was floated by Ontario Hydro with a province of Ontario guarantee. It was not a provincial issue on behalf of Ontario Hydro as suggested by the member for Waterloo North. Furthermore, the issue, while placed in Frankfurt, was floated on the Eurodollar market and, therefore, was denominated in US dollars, not Deutsche marks. Regarding the specifics of the issue: the principal is $125 million American; the coupon is 8.5 per cent, priced to yield 8.60 per cent; and the term is seven years, maturing June 1, 1985.

On May 23, the province floated a debenture issue in New York on behalf of Ontario Hydro. This issue produced $200 million American, with a coupon and yield of 9.375 per cent. The term is 30 years, maturing June 1, 2008. The debentures were rated Triple-A by both Moody's and Standard and Poor's.

At the same time, the member for Waterloo North requested a prospectus for the Eurodollar issue. I am tabling a copy of the preliminary prospectus for Europe. The final version will be available later this month or early next month. I am also tabling a copy of the final version of the US prospectus.

During the same series of questions, the member for Halton-Burlington (Mr. J. Reed) wanted to know the reason for the borrowing. Both issues noted above were for Ontario Hydro purposes. Capital construction during the current year was generating requirements in the range of $1,500 million to $1,550 million.

Borrowing for Hydro purposes to date in Canadian dollars is $1,035 million. Of this $400 million was raised in Canada and $575 million in US funds. Conversion of the US funds to Canadian dollars has generated approximately $635 million, that is about $60 million over the principal amount of US dollar issues. The remaining requirements of some $515 million for this calendar year is expected to be raised in Canada via bond issues and short-term Hydro notes.

The member for Wentworth (Mr. Deans) wanted to know if the borrowing was to re-finance an existing issue. Hydro requirements for 1978 amount to some $204 million. This amount is spread over a number of issues. In view of the borrowing program I have already outlined, it is evident that the borrowing is not designed to refund existing debt.

The member for Wentworth also expressed concern over the policy of borrowing in foreign markets. We are well aware of the risks associated with exchange rate movements and therefore limit foreign borrowing activity. We cannot, however, raise all the requirements in the Canadian market as this would place undue pressure on Canadian interest rates and crowd out many smaller borrowers, that is force them to borrow abroad or reduce their capital expansion.

PROBATION SERVICES

Hon. Mr. Norton: I would like to inform the House that later today I will be introducing for first reading a new act to provide for the continuation of probation services for young offenders.

Mr. McClellan: What happened to private members' hour? Why are you trying to prevent the introduction of the bill by the member for York East (Mr. Elgie)?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Under the Probation Act, the Ministry of Community and Social Services currently provides probation services for the juvenile court as part of the juvenile corrections program of the children's services division. As the honourable members are aware, the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Drea) has recently introduced an act to re-enact the Ministry of Correctional Services Act. This new statute includes provisions for probation services with respect to adults, and when proclaimed and in force, will repeal the existing Probation Act. The primary purpose of the proposed children's probation act is to enable my ministry's probation officers to continue to provide probation services with respect to children.

Mr. McClellan: Admirable.

Hon. Mr. Norton: A definition of the duties and functions of probation officers has also been included. The proposed act does not represent a departure from existing probation programming, rather the act reflects the current practice of my ministry.

Briefly, the proposed act deals with the following matters: the appointment of probation officers under the Public Service Act and the designation of other persons by the minister as required; the purchase of probation services by my ministry under this act; and the mandatory duties of the probation officer with respect to the juvenile court. These duties include the making of pre-dispositional reports on young offenders, recommendations to the court with respect to disposition and the compliance with terms of probation orders made under the Juvenile Delinquents Act of Canada.

The proposed act also includes provision similar to that in the proposed Ministry of Correctional Services Act, whereby a probation officer may apply to the court to vary the terms of a probation order which may be impractical or impossible for the officer to fulfil; the authority for the minister to prescribe other duties for probation officers; and finally, a description of the probation officers; role as a helping professional. The probation officer is directed to assist the probationer by explaining the court process to him or her, and by counselling the probationer and his or her family.

My ministry feels very strongly that the focus of the children's probation officer's work is the child and the family with special needs, and wishes to emphasize this commitment in our proposed legislation.

Mr. Roy: Are you sure you are finished over there. Are there no more statements?

ORAL QUESTIONS

DELAYS IN OMB HEARINGS

Mr. S. Smith: I would like to ask a question of the Premier. Given the obviously drastic unemployment situation in Toronto's construction industry, and given the backlog of construction projects that have been waiting to go but are held up at the OMB and elsewhere, has the Premier had a chance to react to the suggestion from the city of Toronto's housing commissioner, Mr. Dennis, that the OMB be beefed up, possibly with additional members if necessary, so as to get on with the job and get that backlog dealt with as quickly as possible, to create jobs and create construction in Toronto? Is the Premier prepared to move to increase the capacity of the OMB to deal with this important logjam which is causing suffering?

Mr. Rotenberg: That is not the logjam.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I believe there are to be some discussions this weekend related to some matters concerning the OMB. I would only make the observation that while part of the problem may rest in terms of numbers of people at the Ontario Municipal Board, I think also part of the problem relates to some of the applications that are there—some of them at the insistence of the city of Toronto.

Some months ago in discussions with some of the municipal representatives, the government was successful in having certain accommodations made in terms of some projects as they related to the rather controversial bylaw that is presently before the board. I'm not sure it's as simple as just having two or three more members of the board—I wish it were that simple. But, certainly, that's something the government is prepared to explore if that will help.

I just caution the Leader of the Opposition that some of the problems we presently have don't relate to the numbers of people who are there to hear the applications. When one looks at the length of time, for instance, on the present hearing, it's not the numbers of the board members, it is the length of the hearings themselves; and I don't think the city of Toronto can escape totally a part of that responsibility.

Mr. S. Smith: I'm pleased to hear that the Premier will at least look at the possibility of additional members, which might at least help the OMB to hear some of the newer applications and could avoid the logjam that's there.

May I ask, by way of supplementary, if the Premier is prepared once again this summer to countenance the rather leisurely pace of work and hearings that seems to characterize the Ontario Municipal Board, with its four-day weeks and the whole month of July off and rather few working hours during the day and so on? Will the Premier make certain that the board meets five or six days and takes no lengthy vacations this summer? Is he prepared, by virtue of his conversation with the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough), or by any other means of seeking this information, to make sure that the OMB does not take the whole month of July off again this year? Is he prepared to make sure that the OMB gives its proper attention to what is a very serious matter?

Mr. Bradley: Check with Darcy first.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Part of the problem at the board could have been resolved here. I can't recall the particulars of the legislation—which the Leader of the Opposition perhaps voted against; he may recall his position—as it related to severances, which takes a substantial amount of time of the board and which by legislation we could have resolved here. Perhaps if we were to reintroduce that we might now gain his support in trying to minimize the amount of red tape and the necessity for hearings when they aren't really that necessary, if I can phrase it as delicately as that.

Mr. S. Smith: Are they going to work in the month of July? Are they going to do five or six days or what? That is the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm not here defending the Ontario Municipal Board or its hours of work, but the municipal board does work during the summer months. I think the Leader of the Opposition will find that part of the reason is because some of those clients who are appearing before the board, or their counsel on behalf of their clients, on occasion are themselves taking the odd vacation during July and August. I'm not saying whether this is good or bad; I'm just saying this is a part of the problem during the summer months.

An hon. member: You're always blaming somebody else.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think it is also fair to point out to the members of the House, knowing a little bit from some many years ago of how the municipal board functions, that while it is accused on many occasions of delay—and some of it is justified—in many instances the blame for the delay could be that of the municipality; it could even be that, on occasion, of the legal profession.

Mr. Roy: Oh no.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say this to the member for Ottawa East, I'm sure he himself has been guilty on occasion, not before the municipal board but before other courts that he knows far better, in either getting remands—

Mr. Roy: Not before the board; I'm always on time.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —because his public responsibilities require his attendance here, although we notice on Mondays and Fridays his practice requires his presence in the courts. We notice that sort of thing on occasion. I would say to the Leader of the Opposition, yes, we are anxious to expediate these things as best we can.

Mr. Roy: You miss me, do you? Half of your members should be away as well, they don't accomplish anything here.

Mr. Bradley: It's called quality representation.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I do say on behalf of the board that the delays are not always their fault.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I'm a bit concerned at the Premier's effort to find scapegoats everywhere except in this Legislature itself. As a supplementary, is the Premier aware that it is now six years since the select committee on the Ontario Municipal Board presented a series of recommendations to streamline the work of the board and to ensure that the kinds of delays that we are experiencing today would not take place, and that projects would not be blocked because of this kind of red tape erected by the government? The problem has been the failure of the government to take those recommendations seriously and to bring in reforms to the Planning Act in order to ensure that these problems would not exist. The problem is right over there.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Nonsense.

Mr. Warner: Six years.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I don't want to be provocative—

Mr. Ruston: Go ahead, go ahead.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —but I wish the honourable member would go back just a few months. When certain proposed amendments were presented to this House, the New Democratic Party members, along with the Liberal opposition, indicated that they would not support those amendments.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: That's right.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Those amendments would have expedited some of the processes at the board. Perhaps he will review those; perhaps he's saying to us now he's had a chance to reconsider his position again and he would be prepared to support some of that.

[2:45]

Mr. Nixon: You were taking away the right of appeal.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would also make this observation to the member—and I have had some experience, and it is to that party in particular—this is one of the things that has happened with respect to municipal board hearings. His party, time after time, is demanding even greater public participation in terms of the board's function.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Publicly funded.

Mr. Makarchuk: So why don't you deal with it?

Mr. Nixon: Where do you stand?

Hon. Mr. Davis: And I am not quarrelling with the principle, but you have to understand that the greater the public participation and the more people are encouraged in terms of presentations to the boards, the longer the process is going to take. You people have to understand that is now part of what causes some of the delays at the Ontario Municipal Board.

Mr. Nixon: Coming down strongly on both sides.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The members can sit and shake their heads all day long. That happens to be factually the case.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Leader of the Opposition with a new question.

Mr. S. Smith: I haven't had my supplementary; I had only the first supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, you have.

Mr. S. Smith: Only the first supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: You have had a supplementary. Second question.

Mr. S. Smith: I appeal to you Mr. Speaker. It was not our own party that took the 40 minutes of today to read the usual Thursday's statements.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question period started at 2:37, we have now spent eight minutes on the first question with one initial question and two supplementaries.

Mr. Nixon: It was the meandering response.

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: Those were meandering answers. All we needed was yes or no. Are they going to work the month of July or not?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: They work in July. They do so; you don't know what you are talking about.

Mr. S. Smith: They didn't last year and you know it.

RENT REVIEW

Mr. S. Smith: I will ask a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations regarding the statement that he made in committee that there would be no successor legislation to the rent review act until October. Given the fact that, of course, there will be a problem with the 90-day notice unless some successor to the legislation comes forward by September 30, has the minister rethought this matter and is he prepared to give us what method he intends to use to overcome the confusion and chaos that might well result as a consequence of waiting until October to bring in successor legislation? Would he, for instance, like to have an amendment brought forward which would give the government the opportunity, by regulation, to have a short-term extension until the committee has finished its deliberations and the new legislation can be brought forward in the fall?

Mr. Lewis: Another 24-hour shift in policy; amazing.

Mr. Foulds: You have to draft legislation.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are aware of that problem and, as the member may recall, when I pointed that problem out—and it wasn't at committee, I think it was in debate in the House when we referred the matter to committee—I indicated that because of that problem, we would, on this side of the House, undertake to let the public know, hopefully in September, but at an earlier enough stage, with regard to our intention so that given the deliberations of the committee, which I hope the third party might continue to participate in after yesterday's attempt to end it.

Mr. Warner: We are participating.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Given the deliberations of the committee; taken together with the legislation which we announced we will bring forward in September, there may be some predictability as to what to do.

Obviously, what the committee reports and what the government's response is will dictate the need or otherwise to amend the notice period.

In any case, I am currently giving some consideration to the problem, by way of either bringing in a short bill before the House rises in June to shorten that notice period or perhaps conversely to permit some change so that a rent increase—for example to come into effect January 1, 1979—may perhaps be again adjusted, either upwards or downwards—

Mr. Speaker: Would you try to shorten up the answer too, please.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is a very complex answer, Mr. Speaker.

—so that they are not locked into a decision that they have to make in November for a full 14-month period.

Mr. Foulds: You have been pretty slow in bringing forward legislation.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Quite frankly, one of the problems that I identify with shortening that time period for notice this fall is that I see no reason why we should penalize tenants by way of leaving them with a 30- or 40-day notice period simply because the legislative process has been such that we can't get legislation into the House. I would be pleased to see any suggestions the opposition might have with regard to how we hurdle that problem.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: Given the fact that the solution suggested by some, that we simply pre-empt and destroy the work of the committee now to prematurely come to some conclusion, is not a reasonable solution.

Mr. Warner: Now you are getting silly.

Mr. S. Smith: Would the minister accept the idea that he might bring an amendment before us—

Mr. Cassidy: That bunch is preposterous.

Mr. Roy: Can't you control these fellows, Mike?

Mr. S. Smith: —to give the government the power by regulation?

Mr. Warner: You are abandoning the tenants and you know it.

Mr. S. Smith: I appeal to you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. S. Smith: Your former colleagues are in disarray.

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: Would the minister consider bringing in an amendment to give the government the power by regulation to simply extend the present rent review for the month or two that is required on a shortterm basis—

Mr. Foulds: Oh, you would like to give them more power by regulation, would you? Nice move.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. S. Smith: —so that we can finally bring in the legislation in the fall—

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: —at a time when we will have completed the committee work?

Mr. Lewis: You just threatened a no-confidence motion over giving them more.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. S. Smith: The member is grand-standing.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lewis: I will try.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Maybe you could try keeping quiet and give people an opportunity to be heard.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Forgive them. Echoes of their 1975 exploitation of the issue are causing them to fall all over themselves in running for the tenants' votes while we try and find a solution to the problem.

Mr. S. Smith: They are losing support so rapidly they have to do something.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now to deal with the problem instead of the politics of the situation. The problem we would have in extending that for the 60 days, of course, is it would lock all landlords and tenants into the current scheme, i.e. six per cent for a further 12 months for all those leases that came up in January and February, since under the legislation they have to stick to one increase every 12 months. So if any lease came out January 1 it means everyone would be locked in for 12 months from that date.

That is the complexity of the problem and, frankly, I hesitate to opt for anything which sounds even closely akin to the silly solution the third party proposed yesterday of increasing it by pieces for ever and ever, amen. That emphasizes the problem and I don't think that is the definitive answer.

Mr. Breaugh: I seem to recall that's what you did.

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary, the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere.

Mr. Warner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While it is enlightening to learn of the change of policy of the Liberal Party overnight—

Mr. Speaker: Question?

Mr. S. Smith: What rubbish.

Mr. Kerrio: Why don't you resign?

Mr. Warner: —I would like to know from the minister, since this committee doesn't report back until June 15—

Interjections.

Mr. Warner: —and it appears the House will arise on June 23 and not sit again until October, what specific protection will the minister guarantee for the tenants of this province before the September 30 deadline?

Why can't the minister simply refuse to extend the rent review legislation up to six months with a real reason for doing so, not the silly excuse he has given us this afternoon?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: For one thing the program was developed as a very shortterm program.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It will reach 41 months by December of this year. I don't think the people of this province—be they landlords or tenants or neither—are at all helped by a shortterm program that is extended another six months so it becomes a 47-month shortterm program.

Mr. Foulds: You are going to be a short-term minister.

Mr. Breaugh: Why don't we have another election, it would be the third one in a row?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I must say we can't accuse the third party of having a new policy every time we look around. They simply have one blind policy. They won't look past the problems created by the current rent control scheme.

Mr. Cassidy: Read the presentation. It was constructive.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They are going for six more months of it, and I say very simply to this House that we are looking for a scheme that is better than the current scheme, as quickly as possible—

Mr. Cassidy: You are looking to get out of it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—and I don't want to fraudulently hold out to anyone that we are about to encourage the continuation of this scheme for ever and ever.

Mr. Sargent: Build some more apartments, that's the answer.

Mr. Breaugh: What are you fraudulently going to do?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: However the members opposite may identify the good politics and the attractiveness of sticking to this scheme for ever for the sake of the tenants' votes—

Mr. Cassidy: You are welching on the tenants of the province.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—let me tell them, tenants will be adequately protected under whatever new scheme we develop—

Mr. Warner: When? What are you going to do before September 30?

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—and obviously we are going to have to develop it without the assistance, advice, or participation of those people, as they scurry for the tenants' votes.

Mr. Makarchuk: Obviously you haven't been at any of the hearings.

Mr. Warner: What are you going to do before September 30?

FLECK MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Solicitor General arising out of the incidents at Centralia yesterday, which we were shocked by and which we all on this side of the House deplore. I want to recall to the minister that he stated on March 9 that the commissioner "has assured me that his men are acting impartially in this strike and intend only to maintain peace on the picket line." The minister said that on several other occasions early in March.

Can the minister state why OPP officers were present at the Fleck picket line yesterday in full riot gear, why they struck women and men to the point of making them unconscious and who gave the order to launch this outrageous and completely unprovoked assault?

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The statement just made by the leader of the third party is a result, I would assume, of some press reports he has been reading.

Mr. Lewis: No.

Mr. Cassidy: It's from the people who were there.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I have asked the Ontario Provincial Police to comment and report on these allegations. The information I have now and the information I was given yesterday afternoon was that the picket line was closed to those people who wanted to go to work on that particular shift. They were not able to do so. They were being intimidated and the police attempted to open that picket line to allow them access into that plant.

Mr. Mackenzie: Who came with the riot gear on and why?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: There was a scuffle, I understand, outside the plant.

Mr. Cassidy: Yes, the minister's people started it.

Mr. Warner: The police were out of control.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. Cassidy: It's a matter of fact.

An hon. member: He is usually wrong, so don't worry about it.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: If the picket line is closed, that in itself is an illegal action. The honourable member knows that.

Mr. Lewis: What were they doing there in riot gear, for heaven's sake?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I'm just saying that the picket line was closed. This is not something that has happened overnight, as the honourable member knows. The problem at Fleck has been going on now for about two and a half months. There have been very many peaceful days when there haven't been any incidents of this kind and when the plant has been open.

Mr. Foulds: When there haven't been any police incitements.

Mr. Lupusella: You have to be responsible and the Minister of Labour as well.

Ms. Gigantes: Police don't wear riot gear every day.

Mr. Cassidy: There was no provocation.

Mr. Warner: The police were out of control yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: There have been times when there has been up to 50 or 60 employees working in the plant. However, last week there was an incident, when a number of picketers from Windsor, I believe, attended at the plant. There was a scuffle with workers in the plant. There was some intimidation and there was some property damage.

Mr. Foulds: What do you mean by intimidation?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Because of that, the police increased the number of people at the site and around the plant to prevent that type of occurrence.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: I am staggered by what the minister has had to say. Can he say what instructions were issued to the OPP constables who were there in riot gear at the Fleck picket line yesterday at the outset that would lead them to set upon the women and men there with their nightsticks—which are this long—without speaking to the strikers, without asking them to move aside and without making any indication that they were about to launch that particular assault, particularly in view of the fact that the bus carrying the scabs has been going through on a regular basis and the strikers have been letting that bus through?

Mr. Mackenzie: Haven't you learned from Hepburn's Hussars?

Mr. McClellan: He is a modern-day Hepburn.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: On what premise and what information can the honourable member say that the police did not ask the picketer to move aside? How can he unequivocally say a thing like that?

Mr. Mackenzie: Answer the questions.

Interjections.

Mr. Lupusella: By way of supplementary: Considering that on March 9, 1978, the Solicitor General stated in this House that the OPP role in the Fleck strike was to maintain the peace, to inform workers of their rights and of the law regarding intimidation, mischief, damage, threats and weapons, how can the minister justify the police involvement in the picket line by injuring a few workers? Can the minister explain to this House why the OPP officers on yesterday's incident were not wearing identification?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The question of identification is another matter. What I said on March 9 still applies.

[3:00]

Mr. Lupusella: Why are you accusing the workers then?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It still applies. There have been a number of incidents over the two-and-a-half-month period, as the honourable member knows.

Mr. Swart: Why did they have riot gear on?

Mr. Foulds: Why did they have the riot gear on to start with?

Mr. Warner: It's a sad day in this province.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: There was one other incident, I believe when Mr. McDermott attended at the picket line, or before that, perhaps, when the police were wearing helmets and carrying nightsticks. This is not the first time. This is in reaction to the number of outside people who attend the picket line—

Mr. Cassidy: There were 50 of them.

Hon. Mr. Kerr:—and who prevent the workers who want to go to work from entering that plant. As the honourable member knows, the law says that workers who want to work must be allowed to cross the picket line. That is the law and it is the duty of the police to attempt to uphold that law.

Mr. Foulds: By violence?

Mr. Cassidy: By violence?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Now to answer that question, as I have said, based on the reports I have had today—which is more than I had received up to now about the incidents yesterday—I have asked about the allegations in respect to so-called violence or the actions of the police in pushing people with nightsticks and things of that nature.

Ms. Gigantes: The "so-called violence"? Beating them.

Mr. McClellan: You're a so-called minister.

An hon. member: Whacking them down.

An hon. member: Pushing them? Rushing them.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I just don't believe that the police officers who were at that particular site, on duty there—

Mr. McClellan: If you're wise, you'll stay out of this.

Hon. Mr. Kerr:—would intend to hurt or strike anybody on that picket line without good and just reason.

Mr. Lewis: How do you hit people on the stomach and the breasts without hurting them, for God's sake? What is wrong with you?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The point here is that the picket line was closed. Workers were prevented from going to work, which has not happened on many occasions during the past two and a half months. That, of course, is the type of thing that provokes the type of confrontation that took place yesterday.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: No. The member for Ottawa Centre with his second question.

SOLICITOR GENERAL'S RESPONSES

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I want to pose this question to the Premier. We will have some more questions today to the Solicitor General because of our concern about the situation at Centralia, but I suspect that the responses from the Solicitor General subsequently this afternoon—

Some hon. members: Question. Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cassidy: —will be no more satisfactory than the ones we've had now.

Mr. Speaker: Second question.

An hon. member: Speech.

Mr. Cassidy: In view of the responses of the Solicitor General and the evidence that he is not concerned that the unprovoked violence that was launched by police at the Fleck picket line; and in view of the evidence that the minister has neither adequately informed himself nor ensured that the police are properly under political control in the province of Ontario, I would like to ask the Premier if he will now seek the resignation of the Solicitor General—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Oh, come on.

Mr. Cassidy: —and put in his place a minister who can bring the OPP under control.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That's the stupidest thing he's come up with yet.

Mr. Conway: Mike is such a friendly fellow.

Mr. Kerrio: Get ready, Lorne.

Hon. Mr. Davis: There are very few occasions when the Premier of this province can give a simple answer. The answer is no.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: In view of the fact that the minister's responsibility—particularly in this situation where there have been many warnings from this side of the House, from the union, and from the public about the situation—is to keep himself informed, to keep this House informed, and to keep the police under proper political control, is the Premier satisfied with the way in which the minister is carrying out those responsibilities?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'll take just a little longer to answer this. I will start at the outset by saying yes, but I want to add further to that that I find it intriguing—and I'll phrase it as delicately as that—that the leader of the New Democratic Party, who should be relatively familiar with some of the problems existing at that particular plant, is suggesting that the Solicitor General of this province (a) is not concerned, (b) is not on top of the situation or is not exercising the appropriate judgement.

Mr. Breaugh: That's right.

Mr. Warner: He doesn't have a clue what's going on.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say to the leader of the New Democratic Party that the Solicitor General of this province discharges his responsibilities objectively, responsibly, with sensitivity; and I just wish the leader of the New Democratic Party would learn some of those attributes in the discharge of his responsibilities in this House.

Mr. Mackenzie: Through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: If the Solicitor General is on top of the situation, as the Premier says, then he certainly should resign, because the story we have been given here today—

Mr. Speaker: A new question. I haven't heard a question.

Mr. Makarchuk: We haven't heard any answers either.

Mr. Mackenzie: How can the Premier say the Solicitor General is on top of the situation when we have had an escalation in violence whenever there has been an increased number of police there in riot gear and there was not an increased number of picketers on the day that this incident took place? We are not getting the truth in this House.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, if the honourable member wishes to state that the Solicitor General of this province is deliberately misleading the House, then I suggest that he have the intestinal fortitude to stand up and make that allegation.

Mr. Breaugh: He didn't ask you that. You know that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The Solicitor General has a responsibility to inform the House on the basis of the information that is provided to him. I am totally confident he does just that.

Mr. Lewis: That's right and it is not accurate.

Mr. Foulds: Why doesn't he make sure the information is accurate?

WATERLOO REGIONAL POLICE

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, a question for the Solicitor General:

Will the Solicitor General inform the House as to the exact requests made of him by the Waterloo regional police commission for whatever investigation was sought by that commission of the activities of its police force? And will he table that letter?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Waterloo police commission asked for investigation by the ministry or by the Ontario Police Commission. I believe it first asked for investigation by the OPP; then it was pointed out it would be more appropriate to be done by the Ontario Police Commission. This was referred to the Ontario Police Commission and they are now undertaking the investigation.

Mr. Breithaupt: As a supplementary, will the Solicitor General confirm that the costs of the investigation of this police force by the Ontario Police Commission will be fully paid from the consolidated revenue fund?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No, Mr. Speaker. There will be certain costs that would have to be borne locally. For example, if the police have counsel, things of that nature, that would have to be borne locally. But the actual operation of the hearing, for example—there will be an open hearing or inquiry—the general structure and the day to day cost of that would be borne by the ministry.

Mr. M. Davidson: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Did I understand the minister correctly to say that contained in the letter was a further request to take the matter to the Ontario Police Commission? Why could he not follow the request of the chief of police in the area and have the investigation conducted by senior officers of the OPP? Such an investigation has just been carried out in the Niagara region. Why did he have to expand the scope of the investigation?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, that is a very interesting question from a member of the NDP. Usually he would be criticizing us because of having an in-house investigation—because the police were investigating the police. I have heard those criticisms before.

Mr. Warner: Just answer it.

Mr. Foulds: Sometimes it is justified.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: As I just said in answer to the previous question, the request was from the chairman to have the OPP investigate the activities of a regional force. That would not be appropriate. That was pointed out to the chairman. Then the request was to have the OPC, as was suggested to him, conduct the inquiry.

The problem as far as the region is concerned, if there is any problem, is that the Ontario Police Commission wants an open inquiry. They feel the allegations are serious enough that there should be an open inquiry, not just a private or in-house investigation. That is the difference of opinion that exists at the present time.

Mr. Sweeney: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Given that the regional police commission, in addition to its request to the minister, also instructed its chief to conduct an internal inquiry, why do the OPC investigators now obstruct that internal inquiry by advising witnesses not to co-operate with the chief? Why would they do that?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of the OPC telling police officers not to co-operate with the chief.

Mr. Wildman: What are you aware of?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: What the OPC does not feel is necessary now is the type of investigation the honourable member is talking about; in other words, that the police chief should be investigating these charges. The OPC does not feel that is necessary because it has the matter in hand. They are interviewing the police officers involved. They are involving the private citizens who are involved in these allegations. They are conducting the inquiry. It really doesn't make sense that the chief of police is also conducting an in-house inquiry unless he's doing it on the instructions of the OPC.

Mr. Sweeney: But he's doing it on the instructions of his board.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: But I'm not aware that there is a direction to each police officer on the force not to talk to the police. I'll find that out.

Mr. Sweeney: Would the minister investigate that?

Mr. Speaker: A new question; the member for Hamilton East.

FLECK MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Speaker, what we do want to get at is the truth in what is going on. I would like to know from the Solicitor General how it is that there was a much larger crowd there when the women were down demonstrating just two or three days previously than the crowd that was on the picket line when the incidents took place yesterday. And why were the police there in riot gear, in the numbers they were in, and why did they move in? Who is giving the orders? What is going on? I don't think the facts are coming out.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated before, I will certainly find out why the police officers were in riot gear.

Mr. Laughren: The minister should know that by now.

Mr. Mackenzie: The minister is on top of it; the Premier said so.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: That's right. But remember the instructions in the operation of that police force are given by the commissioner and the head of that police force. They are looking after this particular situation at Fleck on a day-to-day basis.

Mr. Cassidy: But the minister is responsible for their behaviour.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: A certain amount of information or intelligence comes to them as to what may take place from day to day.

As far as the incident last Friday is concerned, it was known that there would be a group of women attending—I believe there were around 250—

Mr. Foulds: And no riot gear.

Hon. Mr. Kerr:—and it would be assumed that there would be no incidents.

Some hon. members: Why?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The police were in the area in reserve, shall we say, in the event that there was any problem.

As for the situation that took place yesterday, as I say, I will ask for a fuller report based on the information I have now as far as the dress of the police is concerned. However, they were mostly male picketers who came in yesterday from Windsor, I understand, or from outside of the area—there were about 70 of them—and there was some information and intelligence that there could be some problems.

Mr. Mackenzie: Much less than 100.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I would assume that's why there was the police present that there was yesterday.

Mr. Warner: They lost control.

Mr. Lupusella: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Considering that we had just 200 women at the picket line last week, can the Solicitor General justify why 35 cruisers were called and two paddy wagons were within the immediate area of the industrial park, and they contained an estimated 75 to 100 officers? How can the Solicitor General justify that?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Two paddy wagons?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, that will be part of the information that I will get and give to the House.

Mr. Warner: How long does it take?

Ms. Gigantes: The Solicitor General takes his time, doesn't he? People could get killed while he takes his time.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Rainy River with a new question.

Mr. Lewis: The minister is preventing a settlement of that dispute—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No, I'm not. There's no reason why they can't sit down and argue it out.

Mr. Mackenzie: We're going back to Hepburn's Hussars again.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

OIL EXPORTS

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Energy. Did the minister happen to watch Patrick Watson on the CBC last night concerning the oil companies now asking the federal government for an increase in oil exports? Has Ontario a position on this? Will he make any representations to the National Energy Board in Ottawa regarding it?

Hon. Mr. Norton: We work so hard we don't have time to watch television.

Mr. Mackenzie: It doesn't show in your performance.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, I must admit, as my colleague has just pointed out, that I was working very hard last night and did not have a chance to watch Patrick Watson.

Mr. Breithaupt: He usually bowls on Wednesday nights.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Or was he at the baseball game?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: However, I would like to assure him that our government will be appearing before the National Energy Board to make our views known about the whole question of supply and demand in the oil field. As I am sure the member knows, and everyone in this House knows, there are many wild estimates and guesstimates flying about the future—

[3:15]

Mr. Haggerty: Give us some of the facts.

Hon. Mr. Baetz:—supply of oil and requirements. We heard an outstanding scholar—at least he's reputed to be an outstanding scholar—

Mr. Foulds: Why are the lights going out when you are speaking about energy?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I know the lights went out, that's all right—say that perhaps there is enough oil to last several hundred years. I don't know, I'd hate to bet on that particular problem. But, anyway, the member may be assured that we will be making our case known in a very forthright way and backed by all kinds of data before the National Energy Board during their present hearing.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Supplementary: I wonder if I could ask if the minister can share with the House exactly what those views are? I also ask if the minister is opposed then to the further export of petroleum products to the United States, as the current situation seems to be at least holding down the costs of gasoline and petroleum in Ontario and Canada?

Mr. Nixon: His deputy hasn't told him yet what he is going to do.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: That was a smart aleck remark. You can keep that. It's not worth a nickel.

Mr. Conway: Aren't you glad you didn't run for us, after all, Reuben?

Mr. Warner: He probably did watch TV last night, but it was turned off.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We have not yet drawn our conclusions as to what our stance will be when we go before the National Energy Board. We are collecting our data, and from all sources; not only relying on the bureaucracy and my deputy minister, if that is any reassurance to the member.

FLECK MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Mr. Lupusella: Considering that the Solicitor General is on top of the situation, as the Premier stated, I would like to ask him a question. In view of the fact that one of the most important principles of law enforcement suggested by Sir Robert Peel, the founder of the British police force, is the following—it is a short quote, Mr. Speaker—"The police are the only members of the public who are paid to give full attention to duties which are incumbent upon every citizen in the interest of community welfare."

In view of that, can the minister explain to this House how the role of the OPP in the Fleck strike, a role which appears to be one of protecting the employer's interests and preventing the workers from carrying out their strike in accordance with the law, serves the principle of community welfare as articulated by Sir Robert Peel?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: As I have said on a number of occasions, the required duty of the police is to uphold the law. Whether the member agrees with that or not, that is the fact.

Mr. Cassidy: Not by beating people senseless.

Mr. Lupusella: The police are protecting the employer; that is the dilemma.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: They could be taken to serious task if they don't uphold the law as required by statute.

Mr. M. N. Davison: When was the last time they beat up on one of the bosses?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The Criminal Code in this country, as well as other legislation—the Judicature Act, for example—says that any worker at a plant where there is a strike who wants to continue working at that plant must be allowed to do so without obstruction and intimidation. That is basically the law in this country.

Mr. Lupusella: The minister is protecting the employers.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: When that is interfered with in any way and workers are not allowed to do that—and in this case there has at times been a fluctuation from, say, 35 to 40 up to 60 employees of that plant who have been going to work—if they are obstructed, then the police are called in. I can't think of any other public agency that should be called in.

Mr. Deans: No, no; that is not how it happens.

An hon. member: Who calls them in? Fleck?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The police are called in and asked to maintain peace and order on the picket line, and to make sure that there is access to that plant; and that the picketers stick to the law in informing the workers of a strike.

Mr. Cassidy: The police should stick to the law as well.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: They don't like that role; I'll tell you that right now. They don't like that role, but it is their duty to carry it out. Certainly, they are liking less and less what is going on at Fleck. They don't enjoy that. They are getting sick and tired of it and they want the strike settled, I'll tell the members that right now.

Mr. Cassidy: Is that your way to get the workers back to work, by clubbing them into submission?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: But as long as the two parties can't get together they have to be there to maintain the law.

Last week they were severely criticized, not just by the plant managers, but by the public generally, because they weren't there when there was damage, intimidation, when two workers in the plant were attacked and windshields were broken and plate glass windows were broken. That happened last week. We only had one or two men there, hoping that the same type of atmosphere would have continued that has continued there for two or three weeks. But because of outside workers deciding to go in and attempt to close the plant, there were problems and the police presence had to be increased. There were more people there.

That is the simple answer. I don't think they're in contradiction to what Sir Robert Peel has said. I don't think there's any—they attempt to serve the community and be the friend of the public. But they don't particularly like their role in labour-management disputes.

Mr. M. Davidson: Supplementary to the minister: Is the minister not concerned, as I am and many other people throughout this province are, that the role being played by the OPP at the Fleck strike is destroying its credibility in the eyes of many people throughout the province and reflecting upon every police officer in Ontario? Does that not concern the minister? If it does, why does he not do something about it?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I think that when the facts are out here—

Mr. Cooke: Why don't you get the facts?

Hon. Mr. Kerr:—when the truth is known, when there is a balanced—

Mr. Warner: When do you intend to get the facts?

Hon. Mr. Kerr:—assessment of the role of the OPP at that strike—

Mr. Cassidy: You don't even know the facts.

Hon. Mr. Kerr:—and the problems that have been involved there over this two-and-a-half-month period, I don't believe the credibility of the police has suffered at all.

MAPLE PARK SITE

Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to ask a question of the Chairman of Cabinet, the Minister of Government Services.

A couple of months ago an application was made by the town of Vaughan to have certain lands in the Maple area rezoned. Concerned citizens in that area and the Ontario Municipal Board ruled in favour of the rezoning of those lands in Vaughan township. A group of concerned citizens appealed to the cabinet to have the municipal board ruling rejected.

I'm asking whether the cabinet or the Chairman of Cabinet has made a decision on that certain request?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes. Cabinet dealt with this yesterday—

Mr. Sargent: Thank him for the question.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: They upheld the decision of the—

Mr. McClellan: Turn around and tell him, Lorne.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Ontario Municipal Board.

Mr. Roy: Were you surprised? Did it come as a complete surprise?

LOTTERIES

Mr. Kerrio: I have a question of the Minister of Culture and Recreation, if I may have his attention:

Mrs. Campbell: Just a little of it.

An hon. member: The minister of lotteries.

Mr. Kerrio: In view of the fact that the minister is now contemplating a fourth lottery in Ontario—we might refer to this government now as the "gambling government"—what are the projected revenues for this new computerized lottery and what purposes does he expect to put the revenue to?

An hon. member: The Las Vegas of the north.

Mr. Foulds: It is called the wipe-out-the-debt campaign.

Mr. Conway: A sellout to sin.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The Ontario Lottery Corporation and the Quebec Lottery Corporation are indeed inviting proposals for certain equipment that's necessary for this new game. The lottery corporation will be, no doubt—

Mr. Wildman: Gambling with Canada.

Hon. Mr. Welch:—ultimately sharing with us some further information about that, which I'll be glad to pass on to the House. No determination has yet been made with respect to the designation of the revenue.

Mr. Kerrio: A supplementary: I would then ask the minister why this Legislature might not have been consulted about the commission's ideas before a final go-ahead was given? We could expect these kind of decisions to be made without some discussions here in the House in an area that's becoming quite significant to the people of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Davis: There are some decisions we do make.

Hon. Mr. Welch: This Legislature was consulted at the time of the introduction of a bill establishing the Ontario Lottery Corporation. If the honourable member will look through the sections of that particular legislation, he will see that the lottery corporation was empowered by this Legislature to do the very thing they're doing now.

Mr. Kerrio: We are going to have to change all that.

FLECK MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I also want to ask the Solicitor General a question with regard to the incidents involving the police. I would like to ask whether he would agree to make sure the people who are held accountable within the Ontario Provincial Police, the commissioner or whatever senior officers are in charge of the Fleck situation and any other officers who are required to make decisions, be at the justice committee tomorrow when we are dealing with the Ontario Provincial Police vote. Will they be there in order that they can be questioned directly about their involvement, how they make their decisions, why they feel it necessary to use the degree of force they have used, and what it is in this situation that requires this continual presence of the police in such magnitude? This has unnecessarily created, I think, and I think my colleagues share this view, controversy and violence on many occasions.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes, Mr. Speaker, they will be there tomorrow morning.

Mr. Roy: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, if I may, without prejudging either side in this matter, but in view of the great public—

Mr. McClellan: So you are taking a stand on the question?

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I usually don't take a stand until I know the facts.

Interjections.

Mr. Cassidy: Didn't stop George Kerr.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You only take a stand once a year, Albert.

Interjections.

Mr. Roy: Are you here Darcy? You're not very popular in Rockcliffe, I'll tell you that.

I would like to ask the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker, in view of the controversy on the use of the police and the great public interest in this situation, why is it that he is not able to stand in the House here today, 24 hours after this incident happened and give us a full and complete report? Don't these people report to him?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, I have a report of the incident that took place yesterday. The report does not include some of the things I have read today from press clippings or some of the allegations that have been made in questioning today. I will deal with this added information and these added allegations and report further to the House.

Mr. Cassidy: You started by saying there was nothing wrong.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I want some detailed information on the allegations, for example, that women were unnecessarily struck and moved and pushed out of the way and things of that nature. I haven't got that at this time, but I do have a general report of what happened yesterday.

Mr. Cassidy: You started by saying there was nothing wrong. You began with a white-wash.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I'm not saying that took place, don't misunderstand. I'm saying that because allegations were made in this House, I want that information and a report on those allegations.

Mr. Foulds: You will want it anyway?

Mr. Cassidy: Those allegations were made yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to add to my question. Would the minister make sure the officer in charge of the detachment, I believe his name is Glover, is one of those people who appear tomorrow at the committee?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to get Sergeant Glover here, yes. It's rather short notice, but I will attempt to get him here.

Mr. Deans: Please do.

Mr. Speaker: Point of privilege?

Mr. Lewis: The allegations to which the minister refers were not made simply in this House, they were made explicitly on the front page of the early edition of the Globe and Mail last night. If the minister was about his wits, and the OPP knew what they were about, he would have all the information here today, now.

AUTO INSURANCE

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Whether we agree with him or not, he says we are going to decrease the accidents in teenage driving by raising the drinking age to 19. What's more important, or equally as important, is the fact there is great discrimination against young drivers in the cost of car insurance. When is his ministry going to look into the great inequalities here?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I guess it was a couple of years ago that the Premier of this province took up the matter himself with the insurance companies together with the then Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

[3:30]

Mr. Wildman: Did a lot of good.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member may recall that as a result the insurance companies agreed to go into a program whereby young drivers who were taking approved courses from the driving schools could, in many instances, with the co-operation of the insurance companies, get up to a 44 per cent reduction in their insurance premiums.

We have said time and again to those young drivers who are beginning to take lessons that if they'll check carefully and go to those approved driving schools and then insure themselves with those companies which have agreed to participate in the program set up by the Premier and my predecessor, they will face up to a 44 per cent decrease in their premiums.

As always, the problem has been anticipated and acted upon on this side of the House.

Mr. Kerrio: On that side of the House!

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary: In view of the fact that it's not working, what is the minister going to do about it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I've more teenage drivers than you, so I know that it's working somewhat.

Mr. Sargent: Some of them are paying up to $1,000 for car insurance to drive a car.

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. Lewis: Some of them pay more than that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member may wish to consult with his colleagues on the select committee on company law who have canvassed the whole problem of the allocation of insurance rates. They will tell him that if adjustments were made to disproportionately throw the burden of those rates on other drivers, it means that those drivers who are less likely to be involved in motor vehicle accidents would pay higher premiums than they're currently paying.

The whole principle of the system is that you pay according to the risk you represent; and while the system has its imperfections, I will say that the type of initiative that has been shown—

Mr. Makarchuk: For 30 per cent of them.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—which permits people to upgrade themselves through things such as driving schools and approved courses is, we think, the fairest scheme.

At the present time, I am undertaking some discussions with a view towards studying the report of the select committee to see if perhaps it isn't time that the rating structure right across the board be looked at again.

CHAIN STORE DISCOUNTS

Mr. Swart: My question is for the Minister of Agriculture and Food. In the absence of the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry), who has been unwilling or unable to provide the House with the information on which he based his decision that there was no illegality about the kickbacks or the discounts paid to the farm producers; and as the Attorney General said he based his decision on the information which was supplied by the Minister of Agriculture and Food, will that minister now table the information he gave the Attorney General, either here at this time or provide it to the resources committee this evening?

Hon. W. Newman: I'm glad to see the member has it well written out and well rehearsed.

Mr. Bounsall: That's better than you ever do.

Mr. Foulds: Maybe you should do that once in a while.

Hon. W. Newman: Sometimes we know what goes on in our ministry.

An hon. member: Not very often, though.

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question—

Mr. Foulds: Bill, just get your tongue around those impromptu words.

Hon. W. Newman: In answer to the specific question, the Attorney General informed me this afternoon that he would have delivered to the committee tonight a letter on this matter.

Mr. Foulds: A letter—what about the evidence?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Wait until you read the letter.

Mr. Gaunt: Great anticipation.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary: In view of the fact that the Attorney General said he had only based that decision on the Criminal Code, the federal combines legislation and the Farm Products Marketing Act, could the minister tell us why he excluded the Farm Products Grades and Sales Act, which is pertinent to this? Will the minister or the Attorney General also supply the opinion on whether that act was broken by the kick-backs?

Hon. W. Newman: This whole matter is in the Attorney General's hands. The Farm Products Grades and Sales Act will be dealt with. I could answer the question, but the Attorney General's letter will explain it, I think, and the member might understand it a little better this evening.

MILK SUPPLIES

Mr. Riddell: A question to the Minister of Agriculture and Food: Is he familiar with the recent formation of the Ontario Cheddar Cheese Association and with their concerns over the dwindling milk supply in the 5-A category? Is he aware that the cheddar cheese factory clientele are having to purchase a higher percentage of their cheddar cheese out of the province because of the shortage of milk?

If he is aware of these problems, does he intend to take any action to see that the cheese factories get their fair share of milk in this province; or is he prepared to let the cheddar cheese industry which we have developed over the years, wither and die?

Hon. W. Newman: I am very pleased that the member asked that particular question.

Mr. Foulds: Setup.

Hon. W. Newman: Yes, I would say it was a setup, because I am concerned about the total dairy industry in this province and it is in serious trouble right now under the national supply management scheme. I am not saying that national supply management is not a good idea, it is. But it is inequitable as far as Ontario is concerned today and I have the facts and figures to back it up—not only regarding cheddar cheese. We don't have enough milk to produce the cheese for export. We don't have enough milk to produce the cheese for our own needs here in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Sargent: Cheesy answer, Bill.

Mr. Stong: Full of holes.

Hon. W. Newman: We don't have enough milk to supply the milk powder and butter needs we have here in the province of Ontario.

Ms. Gigantes: How come Kraft always gets enough?

Hon. W. Newman: I am concerned that we need more basic MSQ from the Canadian Dairy Commission if we are going to survive in all aspects of the dairy industry in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Bradley: Pass the buck again, pass the buck again.

Hon. Mr. Davis: And you people from Essex—

Hon. W. Newman: Furthermore, I have already set up a meeting for June 5—providing the committee will allow me to go, with the inquiry and everything else that is on—with Mr. Whelan to put our case before him—

Mr. Roy: Oh, well, we will go with you, Bill.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You will be in Ottawa anyway.

Mr. Roy: That's right. You are not welcome to Ottawa.

Hon. W. Newman: —because we realize the seriousness of the total matter.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary.

Mr. Riddell: Would the minister like me to accompany him on that trip to Ottawa so that I can make his case a wee bit stronger and see if we can't do something to help the province?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Are you starting to support the feds now, Stuart? Are you back on their side again?

Hon. W. Newman: I want to take representatives from the Ontario Dairy Council, the Ontario Milk Commission, the Ontario milk industry, the—

Mr. Warner: You need all the help you can get.

Mr. Foulds: You are really milking this.

Hon. W. Newman: —Ontario Milk Marketing Board, myself and two other staff. If there is room on the aircraft, we will be glad to take the member.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: If you pay your own way.

Hon. W. Newman: No, seriously, if we could possibly work it in, I would love to have the member go with us. He is welcome to go.

Mr. Kennedy: He can't go.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The fact that there isn't room is irrelevant.

Mr. Wildman: I don't want to go. Is the minister aware that there is such a shortage of MSQ in the northern pool that the latest sale of MSQ out of the Algoma district into the Tritown area was as high as $60 a pound?

Mr. Eaton: That's cheap!

Hon. W. Newman: MSQ is usually sold at so many cents per pound.

Mr. Wildman: This is "around."

Hon. W. Newman: You are saying how much—$60? I think you mean a hundredweight, do you? Okay, that makes it a little better.

Mr. Wildman: Yes, a hundredweight.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: You had better go back to school.

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: Just a small matter.

Mr. Foulds: What is a hundredweight worth?

Mr. S. Smith: Two decimal places and you can't—

Mr. Speaker: Do you want an answer?

Mr. Foulds: Will the cabinet minister's own colleagues stop heckling him?

Hon. W. Newman: The control of the distribution of the small amount of MSQ we are given in this province lies in the hands of the Ontario Milk Marketing Board by legislation and regulation. The Ontario Milk Marketing Board, starting off the new dairy year on April 1, said, "If you wish to sell MSQ, market share quota, you must sell half of it to the board at a fixed price." They allow the other half to be flexible.

Mr. Foulds: I think you are really milking this issue.

Hon. W. Newman: The board now has a handle on at least half the MSQ. That was their decision and they have the power to do it that way. If there is a particular problem with a particular producer, and a lot of them do need MSQ, they should take their concerns to the milk marketing board. By the way, there is an appeal from the board to the Ontario Milk Commission that we are not satisfied.

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

PETITION

RENT REVIEW

Mr. Warner: A petition to the Lieutenant Governor—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Are you presenting the Magna Carta again?

An hon. member: You already did that.

Mr. McClellan: An updated version.

Mr. Warner:—and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario in keeping with section 83 of the standing orders of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

An hon. member: Resign.

Mr. Bradley: Same names, different positions.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Just another citizen.

Mr. Warner: I am petitioning the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly that since it will not be possible for legislation to be drafted, introduced, given adequate discussion and passed between the June 15, 1978, reporting date of the standing general government committee and the deadline of the end of September 1978 which must be met for legislation to take effect on January 1, 1979, that the present rent review legislation be extended for at least six months as an interim measure. The petition is on behalf of and signed by the member for Parkdale (Mr. Dukszta).

REPORT

STANDING PROCEDURAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Mr. Breaugh from the standing procedural affairs committee presented the committee's report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee has carefully examined the following applications for private acts and finds the notices, as published in each case, sufficient:

City of Ottawa;

Ottawa Charitable Foundation.

MOTIONS

STANDING RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the proceedings of the standing resources development committee when considering the annual report of the Ministry of Agriculture and Food be recorded, transcribed and printed by Hansard in the format of the daily House Hansard.

Motion agreed to.

MINISTRY OF INDUSTRY AND TOURISM ESTIMATES

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the estimates for the Ministry of Industry and Tourism be removed from the standing resources development committee to be considered by the committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

CHILDREN'S PROBATION ACT

Hon. Mr. Norton moved first reading of Bill 95, An Act to provide probation services to young offenders.

Motion agreed to.

LIQUOR LICENCE AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Grossman moved first reading of Bill 96, An Act to amend the Liquor Licence Act, 1975.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. B. Newman: Is that the Mancini bill?

An hon. member: I hope so.

Mr. Rotenberg: Yes, sunset on Mancini.

CITY OF TORONTO ACT

Mr. Rotenberg moved first reading of Bill Pr23, An Act respecting the City of Toronto.

Motion agreed to.

[3:45]

ONTARIO FRENCH LANGUAGE SERVICES ACT

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, you will recall that last week, on May 16, 1978, I introduced Bill 89, An Act respecting French Language Services in Ontario. At that time, I felt I could not introduce the French translation of the bill. I would like to introduce the French version of the bill now and leave it with the Clerk of the House to form part of that bill, as a translation of Bill 89.

Mr. Speaker: Understood.

EMPLOYMENT STANDARDS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Mackenzie moved first reading of Bill 97, An Act to amend the Employment Standards Act, 1974.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to require an employer to provide a leave of absence to any employee who has been elected to provincial or municipal office so that the employee may be able to carry out the duties of an elected official.

CONSTRUCTION WORKERS RESIDENCE ACT

Mr. Samis moved first reading of Bill 98, An Act to provide for Residence Requirements for Construction Workers Employed in Ontario.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Samis: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to protect employment opportunities in the construction industry, in areas of the province designated by the minister, for permanent residents of Ontario. May I add that I introduce this bill reluctantly.

HAMILTON CIVIC HOSPITAL ACT

Mr. M. N. Davison moved first reading of Bill Pr23, An Act to revise the Hamilton Civic Hospital Act, 1961-62.

Motion agreed to.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before the honors of the day, I wish to table the answers to questions 51 and 52 standing on the notice paper. (See appendix, page 2812.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

ONTARIO MINERALS CONSERVATION ACT

Mr. Wildman moved second reading of Bill 88, An Act to conserve the Mineral Resources of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member has up to 20 minutes.

Mr. Wildman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would use a portion of my time now and ask to reserve the rest of it at the end.

At the outset, I want to express my appreciation to Mr. Dave Phillips of the legislative counsel and to Grant Wedge, my parliamentary intern this session, for their hard work in assisting me in the preparation of the minerals conservation bill and my remarks in this debate. Both were most helpful.

I have introduced this bill for debate out of a sincere desire to establish some vehicle for rational planning in the mining industry in order to alleviate the boom-bust cycle that plagues all mining communities in this province. Over the years, towns such as Kirkland Lake, Elliot Lake and Sudbury have experienced rapid expansion as production increases by leaps and bounds, then sudden production cutbacks and massive layoffs and dislocations as market patterns change and the resource is depleted.

The boom-bust cycle has been the inevitable result of Ontario's approach to the development of our resources. This pattern of mineral operations is especially significant in northern Ontario and has resulted in one calamity after another for one community after another. It was the disastrous layoffs at Inco and Falconbridge last fall and winter, of course, which focused my attention on the need to search for some means to end this vicious cycle, a means that might be acceptable to all members of this House.

The protest from the workers, the community, municipal and business leaders, the emergency debate in this House and the subsequent appointment of the select committee of which I was a member, its hearings and, finally, the lack of response by either senior level of government highlighted this need and emphasized the overall ineffectiveness of the government and of all of us as elected representatives, whatever our political stripe, in controlling the rational development of our resources and economy in general. I came to the conclusion that we needed some mechanism for smoothing the peaks and valleys of production levels, stabilizing employment levels in mining communities and conserving our resources for longterm utilization.

Despite the comments of the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. F. S. Miller) during the emergency debate last fall—"Companies have learned to try to level their production for the sake of profit and also for the sake of their employment work-force"—I remain convinced that the profit motive will always take precedence over the well-being of the workers and their communities if resource development planning is left solely to the private sector. During the Inco committee hearings the minister's belief proved to be mistaken when it became obvious that the company accepted cyclical production fluctuations as part of the so-called stable employment situation in Sudbury.

Resource export markets are characterized by wide fluctuations in price to which the mining corporations respond with major changes in production, either more rapid depletion or sudden cutbacks, with little regard for the economic and social effects on the community or the province. Most multi-nationals are more concerned with the stability of their own growth, rather than the long-term stability of the communities from which the minerals are extracted. Thus their interests fundamentally conflict with ours as watch-dogs of the public interest.

If the private sector alone is incapable of managing our resources in the best interests of the people of Ontario, then my NDP colleagues and I are convinced that public ownership of our primary industries is essential if there is to be wise management of this sector, which is so central to a planned industrial strategy for the development of our economy. I recognize, though, that I would be more than naive if I supposed that I could, by means of a private member's bill, persuade Conservatives and Liberals of this House to accept NDP policy. I hope, however, that the members of the assembly will consider legislation to ensure public accountability by the large resource corporations that develop our minerals.

My three New Democratic colleagues and I proposed this approach in our additional comments appended to the February final report of the select committee on the Inco and Falconbridge layoffs. I hope all members will agree that resource corporations must be required to consult with the government agency with regard to planning and development decisions and will support the principle of this bill.

The present system has proved inadequate since it is obvious that Inco did not consult at all with the government prior to the layoffs and even though the Ministry of Natural Resources had predicted production slow-downs as long ago as February or March 1977, no discussions took place between the company and the government.

Before preparing this bill, I consulted with other jurisdictions and discovered that other provincial governments, non-socialist ones I should add, have shown more concern for the conservation and management of their mineral resources than we have in Ontario.

The Thatcher Liberals in Saskatchewan brought in a Mineral Resources Act in 1965 and the Alberta Conservatives established an Energy Resources Conservation Act in 1971. My bill, though somewhat different in approach, has been developed with similar purposes in mind and I hope that Liberals and Conservatives, as well as New Democrats in Ontario will support it.

To effect management that is in the public interests, and to appraise the extent and value of, and the requirements for, our mineral resources, this bill would establish a mineral management board responsible for issuing five-year producing licences for all mining operations in the province. An application for a licence would be accompanied by a proposed mineral management plan, and an agreement would have to be worked out with the board. That is, a public authority would be consulted about the projected stability of the operation. It would ensure that the production levels approved would be consistent with sound principles of conservation and wise management. Companies would be required to make regular reports and could be subject to inspection to ensure that the conditions of their licences were complied with. The board would have the right to review, revoke or modify producing licences if necessary.

The bill also provides for appeal procedures re decisions of the board and for public input. In this way a public agency would be able to bring an objective, reasoned view on the resource development and production levels, taking into account not only the company's economic position, but also that of the community and the province at large in setting conditions on producing licences. The government would have access to predictions of fluctuations far in advance and then it could make appropriate contingency plans.

The bill, as it's prepared, deals in detail with the composition of the board, how it would operate and how there could be public input. It also provides for the appeals to the board's decision and procedures for that in detail, and establishes a tribunal to which further appeals could be taken. Also, as a final stage, it would allow for appeals to the minister.

I don't think that anyone could accuse me of being too hard on the private sector in this bill. The attempt is simply to provide for a public agency that has some input into the production levels and that would be able to develop and understand the extent of ores in the province and be able to advise the government, as well as the companies, on how those minerals should be developed in the public interest.

As the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) pointed out in relation to political decisions, in his speech in Vancouver on April 26, 1978—and I trust he would say the same thing here—"Important decisions cannot be made in private, and will only be accepted when they are made and advocated by those who are accountable."

In the words of the Ministry of Natural Resources discussion paper on the mining industry which was published in 1977—as a matter of fact it also predicted the difficult situation in nickel—I quote from page 12:

"Mining policy does not and cannot exist in a vacuum. Even the best mineral policy can only be effective, that is, ensure the continued health of the mineral sector, if there is some measure of co-ordination between it and the policies in other areas of concern. This requires the introduction of the concept of policy accountability of every policy-making unit for the effects of its proposals on the areas of responsibility of the other units. In this way, the inevitable tradeoffs between various conflicting requirements can be made in an intelligent fashion."

That, I'm sure, must apply to the private sector as well as to the public sector.

I think this bill goes some distance towards fulfilling these needs and I hope that it will gain support in this House. Some may view it as undue government intervention or as undue regulation of the private sector. But let's be honest and responsible and recognize that it is simple self-preservation and good sense. I hope all the members will give this bill serious consideration and will take this opportunity to establish a monitoring agency to help stabilize the mining industry in Ontario by supporting this bill in principle.

[4:00]

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Algoma has nine minutes left. Do you wish to reserve all nine minutes of your time?

Mr. Havrot: I welcome the opportunity to speak on this bill. This is an area in which I have a keen interest and some understanding.

The member for Algoma and I share some similarities. We both represent ridings in which mining is a large industry. We both sit on the resources development committee in which consideration is being given to this valuable industry. Yet I strongly oppose this bill. Let me give you my reasons, Mr. Speaker.

This bill is both naive and retrogressive. It demonstrates an amazing lack of insight into mining as a whole. This rather surprises me, since mining is such an important factor in the economy of the riding of the member for Algoma. He appears to want to direct the mining processes of tomorrow without knowing what happened yesterday and today to produce the industry as it is now.

The lack of assistance of a mining engineer in the preparation of this bill is also evident. The scope of the bill is impractical. It is impossible to draft universal production policy for the different minerals which are listed in the bill. Gold and silver are not geologically the same as iron or nickel.

Mr. Mackenzie: So?

Mr. Havrot: An attempt to treat the different minerals as if they had the same properties and to require, therefore, the same production techniques for them is foolish.

To ask a prospector—

Mr. Foulds: What kind of nonsense is this?

Mr. Havrot: —to prophesy the amount of gold or silver contained in an area he wishes to mine is impossible.

Mr. Foulds: Have you read the bill?

Mr. Havrot: This brings me to a second area of concern. Yes. Traditionally, it has been the small prospector who has made the mineral finds. Unfortunately, this isn't the case today.

Mr. Mackenzie: What area of concern is "yes"?

Mr. Havrot: The expense required to obtain the sophisticated technical equipment have all but put the task of exploration in mine development out of the reach of most individuals. The few who remain will be frightened off by extra capital demands required to produce engineering and market studies if this legislation is passed. This leaves only two levels with capital and the technology required for exploration and development—government and big business.

In the past, the most effective technique for encouraging exploration in mining expansion has been a co-operative effort between government and industry. At present, it would seem like poor timing and exceedingly bad judgement to legislate mineral inventory assessment and market forecasts when good co-operation already exists here.

Mr. Foulds: I beg your pardon? You have got to be kidding.

Mr. Havrot: The fact that a mine has not come into production in Ontario during the last three years should clearly indicate to all of us that the mining industry is reluctant to invest in the search for new mines because of present government control.

Mr. Foulds: Because of present government lack of management.

Mr. Havrot: The proposed bill would bring mineral exploration to a halt in Ontario and encourage mining companies and prospectors to spend their exploration budgets in other provinces.

On this question of timing, I think I might make one other point. The state of the minerals industry is such right now that it would be highly undesirable to further frustrate industry when the market conditions for mineral products is so unstable. The imposition of a mineral management board would be a very bad move at the moment. With world excesses of copper, zinc, and nickel, the market seems to be controlling itself anyway. We have only to look at the situation in Sudbury to realize the nickel resources we possess are in no danger of being bled dry.

This leads me to my biggest criticism of this bill. The people who constructed this legislation seem to have been suffering from tunnel vision. They have become so absorbed with the ideals of conservation and management they have blinded themselves to any of the implications that can, and must, follow from such legislation. The irony of the situation is that the implications which will occur are precisely those which the New Democratic Party is so vocal in criticizing.

The New Democratic Party purports to be the protector of the small working man. This legislation would create another barrier to bar the individual prospector from plying his trade.

Mr. Foulds: How?

Mr. Havrot: The financial strains of contracting engineering and market studies before applying for a mining permit would effectively cut off his ability to participate in mining.

The same prerequisites, plus disclosure of confidential information to another unnecessary level of bureaucracy, would further discourage big business from engaging in exploration and development at a time when world market conditions, as pointed out, make them overcautious.

The New Democratic Party is constantly griping about the fact that they feel the big companies are not reinvesting enough of their profits in Ontario.

Mr. Foulds: Right on.

Mr. Havrot: This act probably would effectively perpetuate a situation that they feel pre-exists and they may even reconsider normal expansion plans.

Mr. Foulds: Why haven't they been investing in the past?

Mr. Havrot: Probably the most serious implication of this act, if passed, concerns jobs and the cash flow that employment creates. The New Democrats are continually criticizing the government for inefficient job creation measures.

Mr. Foulds: Right on.

Mr. Havrot: Perhaps they should take time to seriously consider the implications of this act.

Mr. Foulds: You split your infinitive there.

Mr. Havrot: Exploration and expansion in the mineral resource field means employment. This act would effectively stifle the initiative and the ability of an individual or a company to explore and expand. Therefore: no expansion, no new jobs.

Mr. Foulds: That's complete and utter nonsense. You know it.

Mr. Havrot: At a time of high unemployment, we should be trying to stimulate, not frustrate, employment. This act would effectively conserve minerals, but it would equally serve to conserve if not magnify unemployment.

Mr. Foulds: Complete balderdash.

Mr. Havrot: The process does not end here either. The capital generated by job creation would assist not only the miners; the secondary industries that process the minerals would benefit, as would all facets of the economy.

Mr. Foulds: If the market is so bad, where are you going to sell it?

Mr. Havrot: The greater the employment level, the greater the cash flow, believe it or not; the honourable member might not understand that.

Mr. Foulds: No. Explain that to me, will you?

Mr. Havrot: The repercussions of this act would have far-reaching effects. In essence, it would stifle an economy that would recover much more effectively and quickly without this unnecessary interference.

In conclusion, I am intrigued by the prospect of seeing whether the New Democrats as a group will support this bill. If they do, they will be supporting the suppression of incentives for the individual and for industry which may aid in the recovery of the mining industry. They will be supporting a measure that will retain unemployment at a high level.

Mr. Foulds: Nonsense. That's a complete untruth.

Mr. Havrot: They will be retarding the free flow of capital that an improved mining industry would generate for the whole economy, and they would be legislating measures that would discourage rather than encourage large mining companies to re-invest profits in Ontario.

In essence, this bill would effectively create all the situations that the members of the third party have so often verbally deplored in the past. I would blush with shame if I were a New Democrat who supported this bill.

Mr. Foulds: I would blush with shame if you were a New Democrat.

Mr. J. Reed: Mr. Speaker, I believe it was this morning I was listening to the radio and I heard that six new mines have opened in Ontario in the past decade. I do believe that the record prior to that time was about 13 a year. On looking at this bill, I would suggest that if government were ever to introduce a document that would reduce that number to three or four in the next decade, this is probably the perfect medium.

It's interesting too that the explanatory note says, "The purpose of the bill is to ensure the conservation and wise management of mineral resources in Ontario," and yet the member presenting the bill said he was first prompted to draft this bill because of the cycle of layoffs in the mining industry.

Mr. Wildman: That is part of my reason.

Mr. J. Reed: It is a rather inconsistent thing. In terms of the cyclic nature of the mining industry in the marketing of metals, I cannot see anything in this bill that would do anything to level out that problem, which I am sure the member for Algoma must agree is a problem that has a world base; it doesn't have a provincial base. If he feels that the establishment of this board is going to enable the board to order a mine to keep producing regardless and to stockpile or something, then he is naive in the extreme.

Mr. Foulds: So's Larry Grossman's bill to raise the drinking age.

Mr. J. Reed: In terms of the interpretation section of the bill, under subsection (b) he interprets minerals to mean gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, nickel and coal. What about all the other minerals that we mine in Ontario, and why did he include coal? Admittedly, I must say that we do have some lignite in northern Ontario. I suppose that if we interpret that in its broad sense, we can call it coal. But what about aggregates? What about cobalt? What about molybdenum? Admittedly, the control of uranium is federal but surely, with the importance of the uranium industry in Ontario, some mention might be made of uranium.

The member for Algoma was railing at the industry because he felt they were really motivated for the sake of profit.

Mr. Foulds: Alone.

Mr. J. Reed: For the sake of profit alone. Let me submit that profits are one of the best mediums for providing incentive for new exploration. They're one of the best mediums for ensuring employment in northern Ontario. After all, mines need employees. In the technology that's being used in the mining industry at the present time, they need skilled employees. Prompted basically by the profit motive it's in the best interests of the mining industry to maintain the employment level at a high uniform rate, if possible.

I think that we should get over this attitude that the word "profit" is somehow a dirty word, because it's one of the great catalysts that keeps the world turning over and keeps people employed.

Mr. Foulds: That has led us to where we are.

Mr. J. Reed: He talks about a five-year licence. I would like to ask the member for Algoma how he can condone the issuing of a five-year licence when the mining company is probably saddled with a 30-year investment. Why would a mining company make a 30-year investment on the basis of having a five-year licence? I really can't figure that out.

Mr. Foulds: Never had your mortgage come up for renewal?

Mr. J. Reed: I don't think there is anyone in this House who is not concerned with conservation of our resources, especially with the conservation of our non-renewable resources, but I submit that the conservation of those resources is going to find its base line with the consumer of those resources and not with the producers of the resources. We are finding some of that influence taking place right now as we have depressed prices for some of our minerals. So that conservation is rather self-regulating.

An hon. member: No.

Mr. J. Reed: We're all concerned in the House, certainly my party has been very concerned, with the bureaucratization of our province and the fact that we recognize we're over-governed and over-regulated. We're controlled to the point where we very often can't move any more.

The body that is proposed in this bill can, I suppose, be likened to the Niagara Escarpment Commission, or to the conservation authorities—all of which are formed with good intent but run away with the ball when the thing gets into actual practice.

Mr. Foulds: You would like to do away with them all. Sell out the future.

Mr. J. Reed: When we witness the evolution of some of these controlling boards, what we find is that the control and the conservation was much better performed by the private sector before it was put under public control.

Mr. Foulds: Give us an example of that, will you?

Mr. J. Reed: The Niagara Escarpment Commission, if you'd like an example.

Mr. Foulds: No, no. Give us an example of where private control is doing something.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. J. Reed: All right, I'll tell the member that the farmers on the Niagara Escarpment have done a darn sight better job of preserving the escarpment and the beauties of that area than the commission.

Mr. Foulds: Have they—

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order. I remind the member for Port Arthur this is not question period.

Mr. J. Reed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to know who's going to pay for all these levels of bureaucracy that we're going to create. Naturally, it's going to be the fellow who goes down in the mine; the guy who does the work ends up paying these taxes.

In conclusion, I would suggest that if the mining industry needs anything, it needs some relaxation of regulations; not the imposition of more.

Mr. Germa: I'm propelled to my feet to speak to this legislation because I think it is probably one of the most important pieces of legislation which has come before this House and one which would have a major impact on the riding that I represent, being that of Sudbury.

I think that most people in this House are aware and know that Sudbury is the biggest mining camp in the world. Make no mistake about that. We might try to pass ourselves off as not being a mining camp but we are still today, even though we are 160,000 people, basically a mining camp. Sixty per cent of the mineral wealth of Ontario comes out of the Sudbury basin.

Just so that you get an idea of the magnitude of the mining industry, Mr. Speaker, the wealth that came out of the minerals industry in Ontario in 1977 was $2,192,775,000. The total for Canada was $5.6 billion. So we see that Ontario generates almost half of the mineral wealth in the entire country. All of this wealth has been generated without any management whatsoever. Nobody has been minding the store, monitoring our reserves, or calculating what the mining companies are doing to this natural asset which is vested with the government of Ontario and is owned by the people of Ontario.

That is the first thing we have to understand: The ore body that is being exploited is owned by the people of Ontario. Consequently, the government of the day over the past 30 years has abdicated its responsibility in managing this very large asset. This is precisely what the bill would do. It would just bring management to a very important sector in the economy.

Mr. Foulds: Hear, hear.

Mr. Germa: Make no mistake about it. There are a lot of people involved. In 1975 there were 47,196 people in Ontario directly concerned with the mining of metals. There is a spinoff effect to this production of basic wealth, Mr. Speaker, which you could probably multiply by four or five times; this will give you an idea of the magnitude of dollars and people concerned with the wise exploitation and preservation of this natural resource.

As a longtime resident of the city of Sudbury, I have certainly seen that the present laissez faire management of our resource has not been to the best interests of the people in that community or, in fact, the people across Ontario. The management of the resource has been to maximize profits only; profits at any cost—that is the name of the game; and the member for Timiskaming (Mr. Havrot) chooses to ignore what has happened to his own community of Kirkland Lake when the mining barons went in there and ripped out the ore body, then abandoned him and his people to a substandard form of life after generating billions of dollars in gold production.

Under this legislation there would be a monitoring and a wise extraction of the ore body to prolong its life and not have waste. We know that during the Second World War we had such a management board. We had in Canada then, to guarantee metals for our war machines, what we called a metals procurement board. The operation of that metals procurement board was similar to what is envisaged in the legislation; that there will be a reporting by the mining companies and an accounting of what they are doing. I defy anyone in this Legislature or in the province of Ontario to go to any central office and find out what the wealth of our known ore reserves are. There is just no way that these things are all brought together, because of the lack of reporting.

Mr. Foulds: Absolutely.

Mr. Germa: I think that is the prime purpose so that we, as the owners of this ore body, as the people concerned in the province, will know what we have in the bank. Right now, we don't know and the federal government doesn't know, and that is the ironical part of the whole thing.

I know there is somebody in the Sudbury basin, this large mining community of which I am speaking, who knows exactly what is in the bank as far as that vast complex is concerned. Certainly, Inco knows to the last ounce how much nickel, copper, platinum group metals, tellurium, selenium, and cobalt they have. They know all those figures. But will they share them with you and me, Mr. Speaker? They will not share that information because there is no requirement under the present legislation for them to give us that information so, we as a government, can do some planning.

It even goes further than that. As a member of the city council in the city of Sudbury some 10 years ago, we were constantly in trouble trying to gear the development of the community services such as roads, sewers, water and hydro power lines, to coincide with the development in the mining sector, because it was for the miners we had to provide services. We passed motions and resolutions at the council requesting that the International Nickel Company come to the city council and level with us and give us their labour force estimates over the next 10 years. We asked them to give us their production estimates for the next 10 years so we, as a city council, could do some constructive planning to see the city of Sudbury was ready for this influx of workers when Inco decided to take out a particular ore body.

At no time did this company ever cooperate and provide the city council with information so we could do rational planning. Consequently, we are flying in the dark. At one point in time, we will have too many houses. At the next point in time we don't have enough houses. There is no way a community can function unless we can get the basic information from the mining companies.

Make no mistake about it, the information is there. You don't need a large bureaucracy, as was cited by the member for Halton-Burlington. That is not what we are all about. It is basically a reporting agency and licensing body, and the reporting of the information, I think, is the most important aspect to the whole bill.

There is also evidence—and I don't know why we don't use this more often. We have this great elephant to the south of us, the United States. They have preceded us in exploitation of their natural resources. Make no mistake about it, that country was once very rich in minerals.

When the Mesabi range, that great iron ore range, was discovered south of Lake Superior about 110 years ago, it was the greatest iron ore deposit the world had ever discovered until that time. The Americans, in their typical fashion, said: "We have so much iron that we will never run out of iron. The Mesabi range runs for 300 miles and it is all solid iron. We don't have to worry our heads about iron ore for ever and ever."

So they went to work and they built up this great industrial complex of theirs without any conservation, or monitoring, and lo and behold, within 100 years they had run out of iron ore. Where are they now? They are up in Labrador. That is why they are up there. They are not up there because they like to go to Labrador; it is because they exploited a resource. They were not concerned with this wealth. There was so much wealth they could throw it away.

That is what I am trying to say, Mr. Speaker. We don't want to stop the extraction of a resource, we want to do it on a rational basis, and get the greatest value for the people of Ontario in the extraction of these vast assets we have.

Mr. G. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on the member for Algoma's legislation this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, and express my opposition to the bill as proposed by the member for Algoma. There are many flaws in the logic which has gone into the constitution of the bill and for the next few moments I would like to focus attention on a few of those flaws in the approach to the mining industry in the province.

The premises outlined and the purpose of the bill are laudable, as they usually are, but again they attempt to over-regulate and legislate an area of our economy that may not allow for that. To effect the conservation and wise management of the mineral resources of Ontario, to provide for the appraisal of the extent and value of the reserves and productive capacity of these mineral resources, to provide for the appraisal of the requirements for mineral resources in Ontario and markets outside in Ontario for mineral resources, are some of those premises he has put forward.

The important fact to note is that these three processes are already being done by the Ministry for Natural Resources. At this point, the bill offers nothing new—possibly something revolutionary, but nothing new.

Mr. Wildman: What? How can they both be the same?

Mr. G. Taylor: What is new is the method proposed to effect the conservation of and wise management of these vast and varied types of minerals that are listed. The member for Algoma apparently feels that a body as large as the Ministry of Natural Resources cannot properly manage the affairs and mineral resources of this province.

Mr. Foulds: They haven't so far.

Mr. G. Taylor: It is somewhat surprising to me that he does feel that a small board can do this job better. Furthermore, he rejects the abilities of the professionals in the mineral resources branch of the ministry in favour of board members who have no specific background in minerals or mining and who may appoint, from time to time, one or more of their persons having technical or special training.

These suggestions smack of too much simplicity, impracticality, and a duplication of pre-existing services.

Mr. Germa: No. There is nothing.

Mr. G. Taylor: The Ministry of Natural Resources already is involved in the appraisal of mineral resources and the productive capacity through mineral inventory and other studies.

Mr. Germa: No, they don't.

Mr. Foulds: They don't have any.

Mr. McClellan: Absolutely wrong. Who writes this stuff, George? Some ministry hack?

Mr. G. Taylor: From past experience, such work has proved most effective when a co-operative sense has been reached between industry and government.

Mr. Germa: Some faceless bureaucrat?

Mr. G. Taylor: Legislation requiring that such work be done under prescribed conditions can only serve to damage an effective working arrangement which pre-exists between these two bodies.

Mr. Foulds: What two bodies?

Mr. McClellan: Name the bodies.

Mr. G. Taylor: As for the appraisal of the requirements for mineral resources, there are already ongoing commodity studies for such minerals as nickel and zinc and this act would only serve to duplicate services already being given.

Mr. Foulds: What service?

Mr. McClellan: Name the services.

Mr. G. Taylor: Besides the duplication of services mentioned above, there is evidence in many places of a serious lack of understanding of the practical workings of the industry.

Mr. Germa: Come on, I have been doing it for 40 years.

Mr. G. Taylor: The mining industry is a rather unique entity. Long periods of time are required to get an operation functional. It takes eight to 12 years to develop any reasonable mineral deposit—

Mr. Germa: Who told you that?

Mr. G. Taylor:—and a company is generally looking to 20-year operations. In this development context, a five-year licence as suggested in section 5(1) is entirely impractical. The industry's reaction would probably be to entirely stop exploration and development.

Mr. Foulds: They have now.

Mr. G. Taylor: It doesn't take an economist to see the error of this article. We should be encouraging growth, not retarding it as this piece of legislation may do.

Mr. Foulds: Sell them out. Sell out the riches of the north.

Mr. G. Taylor: Section 5(2) would also anger people in the industry. Sales commitments and contracts are highly confidential information. This information is available to government upon request, possibly, if needed. I see no reason to write legislation which might serve to sour the good working relations which exist between the government and industry at present.

Mr. McClellan: Leo Bernier must have written this.

Mr. G. Taylor: Sections 6(1) and 6(2) are also unnecessary intrusions into the confidentiality of the companies' records.

Mr. Germa: It's our ore body. We own it.

Mr. G. Taylor: There is also an element of creating a paper war whereby the companies are required to compile large amounts of data which is time-consuming and of questionable worth to the government.

Mr. Germa: Who owns the ore bodies?

Mr. McClellan: It's our ore, George.

Mr. G. Taylor: On the practical side, a small board like the one proposed would likely become quickly swamped by these semi-annual reports—

Mr. Germa: It belongs to us. We both own it.

Mr. G. Taylor:—the data likely becoming outdated before it can be assessed.

An added danger in this reporting of confidential data is the possibility of accidental disclosure during the process of transmission or assessment. This again would cause uneasiness in the industrial sector which could be reflected in reduced or curtailed exploration and expansion.

Mr. Foulds: Why is the confidentiality so important to you if they all have to do it?

Mr. McClellan: If you have nothing to hide, why are you hiding it?

[4:30]

Mr. G. Taylor: What we do not need at the present time is an increase in the uncertainty in the minerals market in Ontario.

Section 7(1) allows government to alter or add new terms and conditions at any time. This section also is dangerous because it creates a sense of uncertainty when industry needs the assurance of predictability from government. This legislation will not allow the predictability needed in the minerals and resources section of our economy.

In section 14(1) a mineral production appeal tribunal is proposed. This would merely add another level of bureaucracy through which industry would have to function. Since industry already has access to courts of law, to the ministers, to cabinet and ultimately to the Premier in matters of appeal, this tribunal seems nothing more than superfluous, a duplication of already existing avenues, an increase in red tape and bureaucracy as we have not seen before.

In overview, this bill adds nothing new or useful to the mineral management program already existing in the Ministry of Natural Resources. At its best, it reflects the positive aspects already in practice at the ministry. At its worst, it proposes amendments which run exactly contrary to the current government policies of removing unnecessary regulations.

It would require an increase in the civil service with a complementary need for greater government to implement and enforce it. Perhaps greatest of all, it would create such uncertainty in industry as to discourage formation of new business and capital investment.

The New Democrats constantly cry in one breath for job creation, for regulations that require greater reinvestment of profits in Ontario and, in the next, propose legislation like this which is entirely counterproductive to their own policy.

Mr. Germa: Profit is a four-letter word.

Mr. G. Taylor: The way to help the plight in the minerals industry is to offer them assistance, not resistance.

This bill should be defeated, and the third party should begin to work on proposing methods of creating jobs and helping the economy, issues in which they claim to be passionately interested, rather than proposing bills like this which are both unnecessary and counterproductive.

Mr. Foulds: Who writes that crap for you?

Mr. McClellan: Disclose the author.

Mr. Foulds: Now you are ad libbing and stumbling.

Mr. G. Taylor: The matter of mineral resources greatly concerns the economy of this province. To put them under the strictures allowed for by this bill would put a great burden upon that industry.

We may have come too far. One member suggested that we had such boards during the war, but this is now some number of years later. We had many boards during the war. We had a common purpose, to defeat an enemy—

Mr. McClellan: We even had day care during the war.

Mr. G. Taylor:—and many people worked together. But our society no longer works that way. It has no solid purpose. But maybe we are coming back to that purpose again.

Mr. Makarchuk: It doesn't work—period.

Mr. G. Taylor: When we look at the years when we had that common purpose, we were all willing to sacrifice many things, the industrial sector, the employee sector, the employer sector. We all had a common purpose. But today, the purpose is individual, everybody wants what they can get as soon as they can get it, in industry, employees, employers, governments and all.

Mr. McClellan: Now we are back to free enterprise.

Mr. Swart: That is why we are going down the pipe.

Mr. Foulds: That is what you call free enterprise.

Mr. G. Taylor: And we are being overburdened today with the amount of government intervention in our economy, to the point the economy is probably bogging down.

We have heard from many avenues that we are overgoverned.

Mr. Makarchuk: It is bogging down because it is mismanaged. You guys never knew how to manage the economy.

Mr. G. Taylor: We have heard from many avenues that we are overgoverned. This would be another of those ever-increasing bricks on that avenue, further burdening an economy already overburdened with government intervention.

One has to look at this bill as another one of those intrusions. We would all like to see our resources totally under our control, but that is possibly a thing that should have happened many years ago. It is beyond our ability today, unless we want to bring down entirely the economy of this province and of this country.

Mr. Foulds: So you would sell them all out.

Mr. G. Taylor: There is no way possible we can exploit ourselves by buying back those industries now in the sector of the economy which best can manage them, with as little guidance as possible from the government of this country.

Mr. McClellan: Soon it will be all gone and we will be broke.

Mr. G. Taylor: They should receive guidance, not total regulation and legislation and takeovers by an indirect method as proposed in this piece of legislation.

Mr. Makarchuk: That is why you have such high unemployment. You guys believe in putting people out of work.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Unfortunately, I must also rise to oppose Bill 88.

I must say I agree with the former speaker's speech writer. I would give the same reasons for opposing the bill.

The principle contained in the bill of having a central collection of information is helpful and is something perhaps that is necessary in Ontario. However, to go as far as this bill and to provide the powers that this bill does to provide yet another board and commission, I just cannot agree to do.

The government, rightly or wrongly, has set up a group of members of that side to look into the number of boards, agencies and commissions that exist in the province of Ontario with the view I thought even my friends on the left agreed with that we already have too many agencies, boards and commissions. We really don't need all we have.

Mr. Makarchuk: You don't have agencies, boards and commissions; you have an Ontario senate, that's what you have.

Mr. T. P. Reid: It really surprises me, Mr. Speaker—well I shouldn't say surprises because, as usual, my socialist friends are out of step with what's going on with the world. My God, the last thing we need to do to the mining industry in the province of Ontario—

Mr. McClellan: You are drowning, Pat. You are drowning.

Mr. T. P. Reid:—is to provide yet another layer of regulation on top of what they already have. I would have found it easy to support a bill that would have suggested—

Mr. Foulds: The poor things.

Mr. T. P. Reid:—better provincial-federal co-operation in the way of looking at the taxation structure on the mining business in the province of Ontario. I would have looked with favour on a bill that would rescind, if possible, C. 32 of the Ontario Securities Act which has destroyed junior mining, its development and exploration, in the province of Ontario. I would have looked with favour on some bill that might have rationalized all the problems in the mining industry and which would say, "Here are the guidelines under which you must operate, but these are guidelines and we're not going to be looking over your shoulder every minute of every day."

As we know, the mining business in Ontario and across Canada is in trouble. One of the reasons for that, Mr. Speaker, is the fact the Third World countries and South America are heavily subsidizing their mining industry as a tool and weapon of industrial development. They are, therefore, providing massive subsidies and exporting their minerals at a loss to their country to provide some kind of strategy of economic development within their own particular country.

The result of that, of course, is it increases the supply of metal on the market. The other result is because of the world economic situation, the demand has not risen to suck up that extra supply with the result that in many cases Canada and Ontario are at a disadvantage in competing on world markets. So it seems to me we, in this House, should be looking for methods to improve the level of competition that can be provided by Ontario mining, rather than yet putting another restriction and layer of regulation on it.

I have a number of mines in my riding. I have Steep Rock Iron Mines, and Caland Ore iron mines, located at Atikokan, which have announced well in advance—

Mr. Foulds: Not for long.

Mr. T. P. Reid:—they will be shutting down in late 1979 and 1980. It's going to put approximately 1,000 men out of work, which won't mean the end of that particular community because it has the best spirit of any community, I think, in northwestern Ontario. It is causing severe problems.

Mr. Foulds: Wait until the people at Fort Frances hear that, Pat.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Rainy River, Ignace, wherever they like, I say Atikokan—and not just because I was raised there—has a tremendous spirit and vitality. I would hope, I'm sure in my own mind—

Mr. Foulds: Probably in spite of it.

Mr. T. P. Reid:—that that town and community are going to continue, but we have serious problems there. I'm not sure this bill goes any way to help solve them.

I do want to say to my friend from Algoma I agree with the central idea of the registry, of the collection of data, of the catalogue of what is here and the plans, and what the markets are, as far as they can be known. I think that's a function, and a very important function, that should be carried out under the Minister of Natural Resources and the mining branch under him. We tend sometimes to think that civil servants are not as professional as others, or that they don't have the competence. But I think there is a great deal of competence in those two ministries to deal with these problems. The trouble is that they don't get the direction from above, that is, from the minister and the government as a whole.

There are other people who wish to speak. I just want to reiterate that I cannot in conscience support this bill which I think would impose more regulation on the mining industry at a time when we need less. I agree with the central supposition of it but I can't support the concept of a board; certainly not one with the wide-ranging powers that the board would have under this bill.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Algoma has reserved nine minutes. There are about 10 minutes left now. Is there any agreement as to whether or not he would wish to share any of that with the member for Port Arthur?

Mr. Wildman: Yes.

Mr. Foulds: I'll take about three minutes, if that's agreeable to the member for Algoma.

I think the debate has been an interesting and enlightening one. I suppose it comes down to the fundamental question of who owns the ore. We in this party say the people of Ontario own the ore in this province. That it should be mined and exploited for the benefit of all the people of this province. Whether we do that in a mixed economy; whether we do that under some public ownership; whether we do it through mechanisms which the member has outlined, that is the basic principle we see.

We see, in looking over the history of this province, that the mining that has taken place in this province has been done with the idea of exploitation only. To use a phrase used by the member for Rainy River about some of the Third World countries, we have failed to use in the past our mineral riches to develop an industrial strategy for the province as a whole.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I would agree with that.

Mr. Foulds: This bill is an attempt to try to recoup before it is too late.

The example the member for Rainy River uses is a good one. He tells us that two mines in his riding are going to be defunct in a couple of years. What he does not tell us, and what is important in the situation at Atikokan, is that the Bending Lake development is not now going ahead. It is not now going ahead because CP Investments, that controls the mine, has decided it won't. It has told us that it is uneconomic to proceed with the mine at the present time, given the richness of the ore body. We have no agency, such as the one proposed by my colleague, to verify that. If we had the agency—

Mr. T. P. Reid: There are also 10 million tons of ore in that north angle, as well, that are easily got at. That is one of the reasons.

Mr. Foulds: That is the kind of information that should be available to the public and to the government on demand, and the agency that my friend is proposing would get that to us.

I just want to conclude by saying that this is a careful and thoughtful bill. It is modelled after legislation that is in place in the western provinces. It is workable and has not developed enormous bureaucracies either in Saskatchewan or in Alberta. If the members who talk about bureaucracy are really concerned about that, I would be glad to sacrifice half of the present boards, agencies and commissions that this Tory government has established in the last 34 years for one good effective agency, such as the one proposed here.

Some of the members who have spoken previously have said that profit is an incentive to development. I say that we cannot afford to have profits at any price. That is what we have had in the past. We have had profit at the price of mining safety in some cases. We have had profit at the price of high-grading. We have had profit at the price of shipping out jobs because we have not used mining, as I said previously, as part of our industrial strategy to create manufacturing jobs not only in the province, but especially in the north.

Mr. Wildman: I want to thank the members for their comments. I'm disappointed so many members disagreed with the bill. I just want to reply to some of the comments that were made.

First, the member for Timiskaming (Mr. Havrot) indicated he strongly opposed the bill and considered it naive. He couldn't understand why I, as a member from northern Ontario, would introduce such a bill when mining is as important to my area as it is to his. He then went on to say the present system is working well. There is good co-operation between government, big business and the companies now operating. Considering the history of Kirkland Lake in his own riding, he must be very naive if he can say the present system is working well in the interests of the mining communities of northern Ontario.

He did raise some problems in that he thought this legislation would make it impossible for the individual prospector to become involved in mining and to bring mines into production. He then went on to discuss, as did other members, the lack of new mines coming into production in the last few years.

The reason for lack of new mines coming into production would not be exacerbated by this bill. There is nothing at all to prevent prospecting from taking place. As a matter of fact, one of the provisions of the bill is to encourage exploration and to monitor exploration. One of the stipulations for a licence would be that the company be engaged in further exploration. Frankly, we must monitor exploration. One of the best measures of the weakness of the mining industry in this province is the lack of exploration. When we see exploration going down we know there are problems and we must prepare for them.

That member is a prisoner of the biases of the government and of business and the corporate elite. This bill is not directed just at conservation, which will provide for more unemployment as he suggests, but is a management bill, a bill that is determined to have fair management and good management which would mean longer term employment, not short-term employment.

The member for Simcoe Centre (Mr. G. Taylor) indicated this is a redundant bill because all the functions suggested by the board have already been carried out by the Ministry of Natural Resources. Look at the history of Sudbury. If those functions have been carried out by the Ministry of Natural Resources they were not carried out very well.

It's a fact that almost a year prior to the announcement of the layoffs in Sudbury the MNR did know and did predict slowdowns in production in nickel, but nothing was done by the government. If there is a good working relationship between the government and the mining industry as the member suggests, then that relationship is exemplified by cosy agreements which benefit the companies to the detriment of the mining communities in northern Ontario. It's not something I would want to perpetuate. He suggested our society has no solid or common purpose. Well, if that's the case, it's hardly something my bill can be expected to rectify.

He suggested companies need as little guidance as possible and that this bill is an indirect takeover. How he can consider this indirect takeover, I don't know. This would not prevent the companies from making a profit. The companies would continue to operate, and would be encouraged to operate in a longterm utilization of our resources and the development of those resources. He suggested at the same time, that the bill is nothing new but is revolutionary and then criticized me for flaws in logic. I suggest that that is quite a flaw in logic in itself.

The member for Halton-Burlington (Mr. J. Reed) suggested that the industry is cyclical. It is indeed. He wondered why a company that is going to have a longterm investment would be interested in a five-year licence. The reason for the five-year situation is simply because the industry itself has indicated that, certainly as far as nickel is concerned, the market seems to operate in cycles of four to six years. That's the reason for the five years. I should emphasize that licences under the bill would be renewable. There is nothing to stop longterm development of a resource at all.

To suggest conservation should be part of a self-regulation of the industry is ridiculous, frankly, because the reason it may conserve minerals now is there is a slowdown in the market. As soon as the markets turn up again there will be tremendous increases in production. We can see again what happened in Kirkland Lake.

Lastly, I am gratified the member for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid) thinks the central idea of the bill is a good one. Unfortunately, I can't agree with him that it goes too far. There is legislation in other provinces. A Liberal government in Saskatchewan has brought in similar legislation and a Conservative government in Alberta, that is really concerned with its energy resources, brought in similar legislation. I just wish and hope the Liberal and Conservative members in this House will be as concerned with their resources as the Liberals and Conservatives in those provinces.

CHILDREN'S RIGHTS ACT

Mr. Elgie moved second reading of Bill 57, An Act respecting Proceedings on behalf of Children who are Maltreated.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member has up to 20 minutes.

Mr. Elgie: I'm pleased to speak on behalf of Bill 57, An Act respecting Proceedings on behalf of Children who are Maltreated. As a neurosurgeon dealing with brain and spinal cord injuries I have, unfortunately, during my practice been exposed to some of the most horrifying examples of child abuse.

It's incredible, for example, to believe an abusive parent could go to the point of actually breaking a child's back over his knee, but that and even worse things do happen. We, as legislators, must continue to upgrade and revise the laws dealing with child abuse to attempt to control and prevent these tragedies. Our efforts, and the efforts of society in general, must be aimed not only at crisis intervention, but at early identification and prevention, objectives which I know the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) shares with all of us.

As a parent of loving and loved children, I find, as I know we all do, that the whole problem of child abuse is abhorrent and incomprehensible. Kahlil Gibran has written that "children are not your children. They come through you, but not from you, and they are with you, yet they belong not to you." Still, the centuries old concept of children as chattels lingers on in the subconscious, and sometimes not so subconscious.

Mr. McClellan: Sometimes even in the green papers.

Mr. Elgie: You're commending the minister for the efforts in the green paper?

Mr. McClellan: I am agreeing with you.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: That's good.

Mr. Elgie: That's surely an unusual event in this House, we should have a drink over that.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I would worry about that. I just changed my vote.

Mr. Elgie: You may not support it

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It's okay, Bob; he recognizes greatness when he sees it.

Mr. McClellan: Oh yes, he'd be a superior minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member for York East has the floor.

Mr. Elgie: We can look back in dismay today at early Roman law, for instance, which gave a father absolute authority over his children, even to the point of allowing him to inflict capital punishment. Even early English law, not too many years ago, still gave a father complete control over his children, without regard to their welfare. Fortunately, this situation has gradually changed over the years so now parental authority does have some legal limits.

However, the mere statement in references I'm sure all of us read from time to time, that parental authority has legal limits tells a bit of a story in itself. Children still do not have well established legal rights as individuals, a situation which is presently being addressed by the Canadian Council on Children and Youth in their recent report entitled The Child as a Citizen. It is a study that will reportedly go far beyond the question of legal rights of children before the courts. It has been said by one reporter: "It will upset our smug assumptions that children in Canada never had it so good and will challenge our very preconceptions about the nature of childhood."

Mr. Speaker, Bill 57, the bill before us today is entitled, an Act respecting Proceedings on behalf of Children who are Maltreated. At the outset, let me make it very clear that it is not intended that his bill will in any way deal with or resolve the problem of child abuse. Legislation regarding the reporting and management of child abuse already exists, and as members know, it is anticipated that revisions will be placed on that legislation before this House in the near future.

Bill 57 concerns itself with the rights of abused children and civil law. In other words, the right to be compensated for injury, a right that exists for all other citizens. By emphasizing the existence of this right, it is my sincere belief and hope that awareness of child abuse by society and abusers will be heightened and the incidents thereby reduced. In other words, I hope that heightened awareness of the civil rights of children will help produce a deterrent effect. I believe many people would desist from battering their children if they were more aware of the rights children should have.

It seems incredible that children who have been battered by their parents in the past have not been able to sue in tort. Had they been injured by anyone other than a parent, there is little doubt that civil legal action would have ensued. The reasons for this deficiency are interesting and have been reviewed by Prosser in his handbook on the law of torts. Prosser is a reknowned American jurist who has stated, and I quote: "The chief reason offered is that domestic tranquility and parental discipline and control would be disturbed by the action, on the theory that an uncompensated tort makes for peace in the family and respect for the parent, even though it be a rape, a brutal beating, and even though the relationship itself may have been terminated by death before the suit."

Another American lawyer, Muriel Crawford, has added the following comments, which I think are of interest: "Moreover, none of these arguments have been used to bar suits by children against parents for a tort against property, nor to bar personal injury suits between siblings, even though the arguments should be equally applicable in all of these instances".

With the passing of the Family Law Reform Act in this province in 1975, this government and this Legislature made very clear its position regarding the right of the child to bring an action against the parent. Chapter 4, section 3, states that "no person shall be disentitled from bringing an action or other proceeding against another by reason only that they stand in the relationship of parent and child." The principle is clear; in practice, however, there are some problems.

Firstly, civil actions in court by children are brought on by what is called a next friend and this next friend is usually the parent. For example, if my child was struck down today by a motor vehicle or injured by another person, as the parent of the child I would commence an action as next friend on his or her behalf against the person who caused the injury. Since the majority of child abusers are the parents, this first step becomes a hurdle usually not overcome unless the official guardian happens to be made aware of the situation.

Secondly, there is no legal requirement that those who are aware of an abuse must notify the official guardian, although in practice they sometimes, and indeed often, do.

Thirdly, there is no legal requirement that the official guardian must be the next friend, since the present Judicature Act requires that he do so only in accordance with any act, rule or order of a court or judge. There is no such act in existence and, therefore, it depends on a rule or order of a court or judge. There is, therefore, no well defined responsibility to report abuse and no well defined requirement that action take place as a result of that report.

Bill 57 is an omnibus bill which proposes amendments to both the Judicature Act and the Child Welfare Act. The main changes contemplated by the bill are as follows:

Firstly, under the existing Child Welfare Act, section 4(1), reports of child abuse "shall be rendered to the children's aid society or crown attorney." Bill 57 requires that such a children's aid society or crown attorney that has reasonable and probable cause to believe that a child has been abused emotionally or physically "shall report the information to the official guardian." The official guardian thus becomes aware of the situation in a more formal reporting setting.

Secondly, the existing Child Welfare Act refers to physical ill-treatment. Bill 57 would propose substituting the term "physical or emotional maltreatment" to broaden and to expand the concept of child abuse.

Finally, the Judicature Act would be amended to require that "where the official guardian is of the opinion that an infant has a cause of action"—thus there have been two checks, keep that in mind; there was a probable belief in abuse by the children's aid or crown attorney, and now the official guardian has to feel there is a cause of action—"against one or more person, or another right of recovery by reason of physical or emotional maltreatment inflicted upon the infant, the official guardian shall institute and conduct a proceeding as next friend for the recovery of damages or other compensation in respect of injuries sustained by the infant, unless,"—and this is the key phrase—"in the circumstances such a proceeding would not be in the best interests of the infant." There's no question of whether it's in the best interests of anybody else. It's a question of whether it's in the best interests of the infant.

Some of these changes proposed in the Child Welfare Act may, of course, have to be reviewed and revised once the proposed children's legislation has been presented to this House. In the meantime, the requirement that a children's aid society or a crown attorney report to the official guardian seems to me to be a pretty straightforward approach. I did not specifically insert a requirement that various professionals must report, nor did I insert a penalty for such failure. It is my belief that such a section will be included in the proposed children's legislation package, and if it isn't perhaps such a section should be added to this bill.

The substitution of physical or emotional maltreatment for the existing physical ill-treatment phrase is, to my mind, an important one. It is true, and we all know this, that physical abuse is more easily defined and more easily recognized: the child's behaviour, repeated unexplained bruises, repetitive visits to doctors or emergency departments with odd injuries, strange fractures showing up on x-rays and other similar criteria help observers reach conclusions regarding physical abuse. It seems clear that neglect, emotional abuse and sexual abuse are as prevalent, or indeed more prevalent, and can have equally devastating consequences.

Dr. Bates, who is director of the child abuse clinic at the Hospital for Sick Children, has even gone so far as to state: "Emotional deprivation or neglect can be far more devastating than physical abuse to the child at an early age." Another pediatrician in Metropolitan Toronto, Dr. Ray LaForest, suggested at a recent child abuse conference that physical abuse constitutes less than five per cent of abuse. Certainly it's impossible to get a good handle on the extent of emotional abuse, since it really presents great problems, not only in definition but in identification. However, there is literature on the subject. For example, a book entitled Emotional Neglect of Children by Robert M. Fulford of the children's division of the American Humane Association offers several definitions of emotional abuse. It is my feeling that we should not ignore this aspect of abuse simply because it is difficult to define. What constitutes emotional abuse would, of course, be settled in common law jurisdiction such as this by the first legal precedent.

But in any event, I recognize that it is a difficult problem and I would sincerely value comments from members of this House about this difficult definition problem. The revision of the Judicature Act requires that the official guardian, if he is of the opinion that an infant has a cause of action, shall commence such action or proceeding. It is my hope that this section will also allow the official guardian to bring an application before the criminal injuries compensation board in appropriate cases.

The Criminal Injuries Compensation Board Act, interestingly enough, under section 1(1)(d) defines injury as actual bodily harm and includes pregnancy, mental or nervous shock. So the concept of some emotional elements is there.

Under section 5 it is stated that "where any person is injured or killed by any act or omission in Ontario by any other person occurring in or resulting from, the commission of violence . . ." and so forth and so on ". . . there shall be the right to recover." So I believe the legal machinery is there to allow such a recovery from the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in cases where there has been a criminal conviction.

The final proviso of that revision of the Judicature Act is that the official guardian may decide not to bring such action or application if, in his opinion, such a proceeding would not be in the best interest of the infant. The feeling here is that the decision would be based upon the interests of the infant, and it contemplates situations where families have recognized the problem and have clearly demonstrated a change in attitude and behaviour.

In conclusion, may I say that I recognize the futility of many civil actions against parents, we all do; but does that mean that children should be deprived of that basic right? I think not, and I look forward to hearing members' views on those various matters.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Does the member for York East wish to reserve time at the end?

Mr. Elgie: Yes, if there is any.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this bill with every part of me involved, because it is a long time in coming before this House. The principle of the bill surely is one that has to have unanimous support. I recall some years ago when, as a member of the Metropolitan Children's Aid Society, we engaged in seminars on the subject, trying to wrestle with the best way to approach child abuse.

At that point we had some very fine speakers from the United States, who I must say rather frightened me a little in this approach. At that point they stated they found that where you had mandatory reporting, there seemed to be an increase in the loss of the child completely. I bore that in mind in approaching this particular bill. Certainly if it has that effect, then we have to rethink it.

But there has to be a method of reporting child abuse cases. As I have seen them in the courts, I don't think there is anything that so appals a judge as facing a case with evidence of child abuse. At this point, I'm speaking largely of physical abuse, of course. But we did see other areas where we were unable to bring any kind of assistance to the child because the evidence wasn't clear enough as to the emotional effects of a parental attitude.

One of the problems I envisage with this bill is that we may find we have, as I had in one case, a mother who so overwhelmed her son that he became, in a very bizarre fashion, very much a part of that mother. It's hard to approach that problem, because that mother had no comprehension of what she was doing to that child. But the child's rights simply have to be protected.

One of the problems I have with the bill is that, as the mover of the bill has suggested, we have to go into the whole area of prevention. This bill does not do that. For years, ever since I came into this House, and through a series of ministers, starting with the member for Cochrane North (Mr. Brunelle) and moving through his successors, we have begged for this government to take some action on the prevention of this sort of maltreatment. We have not succeeded, and that's why I have not been so impressed with the will of this government in that area.

We begged that financing would be put in place for the Sick Children's Hospital so that they could enlarge the Denver Module which they were using and which seemed, at the time at least, to be one of the most successful areas of prevention which we knew at that point. Instead of that, money was frittered away—a little bit here to this single-parent group, or a little bit there to somebody else—and obviously the total effect of the money was not seen to be used in the most efficient fashion.

The question of compensation is, of course, a very difficult one. I had the opportunity of speaking with the member about my concerns with the wording of this bill in the compensation area, and I'm delighted that he has clarified for the House the fact that one might proceed either by way of a tort action for damages, or certainly in the alternative, where it is indicated, through the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board. It's interesting that I have had some discussions with Mr. Allan Crossman with reference to this very matter. I would hope that together we might move.

One of the problems again is, the reporting. There really isn't a good system by which abuse, be it physical or anything else, is properly reported. I feel that the children's aid societies would welcome the kind of direction which this bill gives, because in many cases the parents are not brutal and horrible. This sounds dreadful, but they're not.

I can think of a mother whose one child died and the other one was before me. She said to me: "You don't understand. I love my child." We have to understand the whole context of this kind of situation.

Certainly, with the children's aid trying desperately to retain some kind of relationship, I think that society needs this kind of direction. I know they would surely welcome it, so their role might be very clear and very precise, and leave to others the opportunity to bring about some kind of conciliation, if that's possible in some of these cases.

Without question, children must have recognized rights in our society. When they are damaged, they must certainly have the opportunity to be heard. I gave some thought to the question of the role of the official guardian in such a matter, and while I am not certain that is the best road to go, at the moment it certainly is better than what we have.

Even though we now have a mother entitled to be a next friend of her children—we've come a long way, baby, now a mother can be a next friend—it certainly puts her in a desperate situation if the damage to the child has resulted from actions of the father. To have someone in the role of an official guardian able to move into the scene is of tremendous importance in these areas.

I would want to see this bill go to committee because I think it can be improved as we discuss it. I would hope, perhaps we might be able to build into it in some form, not just the action indicated here but also including the element of prevention.

I would like to see, in some place, someone undertaking a really educational role. In some cases, a parent coming to this country is coming into a new culture, a different approach, and doesn't quite understand how we view the question—

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired.

Mrs. Campbell: —of parent and child.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am supporting this bill with everything I have.

Mr. McClellan: I am rising, also, to support the bill—

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Great.

Mr. McClellan: —the member will be pleased to know. I don't support it with the same degree of enthusiasm, if I'm not being unfair, as the member for St. George. I will support it on second reading, but unless the bill was changed substantially in committee, and I'll try to deal with my concerns, we would have to vote against it on third reading. I want to try to explain why.

Because of the time constraints, let me try to deal with four points.

The question of the extension of civil rights to children is a useful reform. I'm not sure I can say too much more than that, because I do not believe the matter of child abuse is dealt with in any substantial way through the reform. It is a reform, and it is worth supporting because it is a reform, but I'm not sure you can say a whole lot more than that. I'm not sure it's a significant measure. I don't think, quite frankly, there are many people to whom the reform would apply. The fact that there are some makes it supportable.

Mrs. Campbell: A lot.

Mr. McClellan: Those who have more experience with the courts, and perhaps even the member himself because of his background as a doctor, would have better knowledge than myself with respect to how many people would be affected by this particular measure. My own feeling is there aren't many who would have the financial resources to compensate a battered child for the injury sustained. If the intent is to try to redress that injury through the use of the personal financial resources of the battering parent, I say again I'm not sure how useful that is. I suspect the compensation can only come from public sources.

The second point I want to make is with respect to the definition of abuse in section 2 of the bill. While I applaud the extension of the definition of abuse to include emotional maltreatment, I would be unable to support a final bill that didn't have complete definitions attached both to the notion of physical abuse and to the notion of emotional abuse.

Addressing firstly the question of physical abuse, there is a certain ambiguity even within government circles concerning physical abuse. The member for York East began by setting out a very good statement with respect to the need to move away from the traditional concept of children as chattels, to move away from the traditional notion of the pre-eminent right of the natural parent. I applaud him for those sentiments and agree with him, but when we look at the green paper, the consultation paper on short-term legislative amendments, we find the ministry position really entrenches and reiterates very traditional concepts of the rights of the natural parent with respect to the child. We see that concept of natural rights pushed to an absurd extreme in the bizarre sections on adoption within the green paper. I think that's been withdrawn, but it illustrates the point that there is a lack of consensus within government circles. I hope the view of the member for York East prevails in the discussion. Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Norton: You don't know what a green paper is.

Mr. McClellan: Oh, I do know what a green paper is; and I know what the minister's green paper is all about. I know what the minister's advisers think and I know he has been forced to reject a lot of that advice. Even within the green paper the definition of physical abuse is quite inadequate.

Hon. Mr. Norton: You think if it looks white it is not a green paper.

Where do you get all this incorrect knowledge that you purport to—

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Speaker, can you keep the minister in order?

Mr. McClellan: It is inadequate in that it defines physical abuse in terms of serious physical harm or sexual molestation. In other words, a child has to suffer severely before the protection of the child abuse laws can be applied to the child, and I don't think that's good enough. I wouldn't support legislation which left physical abuse undefined and I would not support legislation which left emotional maltreatment or emotional abuse undefined.

I am not prepared to leave it to the courts; that is a real copout. It's a bad way of passing law; and I say this to the member with respect. It is our duty to say what we mean when we pass law, and if we can't say what we mean we shouldn't pass the law, we should not leave it to the courts—

Hon. Mr. Norton: That is because you don't understand the tradition of the courts in a free, democratic country.

Mr. McClellan: —to interpret a question as crucial as what is physical abuse or what is emotional abuse. We have to define it. We can't just say physical abuse and leave it undefined.

The third point I want to address is the reporting provisions of the bill. As the minister knows, we are strongly in favour of the reporting provision and penalties because we don't feel that a reporting provision without a penalty is an effective reporting provision. If there is no penalty, I am afraid there will be no reporting. I would not be prepared to support a bill on third reading that had a section dealing with obligations to report child abuse but which didn't have penalties attached to it, because I think in some ways that's a step backwards. I expect the ministry to do what it said it would do in the estimates debate last year and bring in legislation that will have substantial penalties attached to the reporting provisions.

The final point that I wish to make, very briefly—and we'll have lots of opportunities to debate this both in the estimates and on the legislative reform packages—is the matter of prevention of child abuse and this government's commitment to the notion of prevention. Prevention is not a matter of law, I don't believe, prevention is a matter of services; and until there is a network of services in place in this province which can shore up the needs of families under stress, and provide real and concrete help to families under stress before child abuse begins to occur, or to become significant, then we're not doing anything at all in the area of prevention. Out of, I think, a budget of some $80 million in child welfare last year, there was something in the order of $300,000 allocated specifically to preventive child welfare services; that's simply absurd.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Plus $25 million. Get your facts straight.

Mr. McClellan: Visiting homemaker services, for example, have been severely cut by this government. There is no more effective preventive social service to deal with the problem of child abuse than visiting homemaker's services, and yet that is an area where there have been major cuts by this government since 1975.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: That is not true.

Mr. McClellan: Until we see services in place and until we see resources going into preventive social services in the child welfare field, all of the lawyers' reforms under the sun are not going to address themselves to the problem of child abuse.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired.

Mr. McClellan: We will simply continue with the present crisis orientation. We will continue this in the estimates and on the reform package.

Mr. Jones: I rise today, recognizing the importance of this piece of legislation that's before us, and I compliment the member for York East. I know we all sense the very real sincerity with which he has presented it to us for our consideration.

Mr. Conway: He is a lonely progressive over there, I can tell you, a lonely progressive.

Mr. McClellan: Elgie for minister.

Mr. Jones: However, as we look at this legislation he did invite us to give our comments towards it, to give our full thoughts and deliberation, and I'm happy to have the opportunity to do so.

I think all of us, of course, were, in a very real way, shocked as he opened his introduction to the bill by giving us a first-hand insight into a very severe situation in which a parent, a mother, broke her child's back over her leg. That has to shock all of us. I'm certain that no language is too strong when it comes to the maltreatment of children and the righteous indignation that it stirs in us as legislators, and indeed as members of this society.

[5:30]

Mr. Bradley: Does that mean there is no guillotine this week?

Mr. Jones: I have an opportunity of working in a particular section of this government, the youth secretariat where we deal with ages that go down to youngsters in this category and today we are concerned that young people all have equal opportunity and not have scars as they come in to take their rightful role in society. We turn our thoughts to a host of things. These young people that I have the pleasure of working with, I assure the House when they are called upon, that generation will be capable of managing the affairs of Ontario and dealing with the current issues, as we are this day.

As I work with these young people in such programs as venture capital and I see their unbridled optimism and enthusiasm, it gives one reason to be encouraged and to be protective towards those types of backgrounds that they would have and those stumbling blocks that might hinder them in making their full progress.

The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Grossman) announced this afternoon, a number of components of that package of alcohol—

Mr. McClellan: This has nothing to do with the bill. Have you read the bill?

Mr. Jones: I would think we would be wrong not to take a look at the studies available where they have identified alcohol as being a factor in some of the issues that have resulted in child abuse and the other types of mistreatment of youngsters. So I was happy to see the government coming forward with a very responsible attitude towards alcohol, calling on society as a whole—

Mr. McClellan: You haven't even read the bill.

Mr. Bradley: Dragged in, kicking and screaming.

Mr. Jones:—and making a lot of specific changes in that direction, because the maltreated and abused child is an aberration of our society. We must do everything in our power to see that abuse of children, both physically and emotionally, is purged from Ontario. However, I agree with what the Minister of Community and Social Services said on April 19: "We, of course, do not have the right to legislate the family experience." That reply was a comment he made to someone making a specific inquiry.

I feel that the bill before us presents the threat of a very real intrusion into the affairs of the family in Ontario. There are a couple of highlights, as I see them, and I would like to express them this afternoon.

Mr. McClellan: Here comes the schizophrenia.

Mr. Jones: The family in Ontario is in a transition and the Provincial Secretary for Social Development, as the members know, has posed the question of how the social policy of Ontario can best support the family. The theme that the provincial secretary has taken is that the government recognize the importance of dealing with the family as a unit rather than a group of individuals when we design or evaluate our social programs.

The legislation that the member for York East has introduced says "one member of a family"—and I am questioning this—"one member of a family could perhaps be set against or at odds with another." Perhaps the reconciliation would better serve the interests of the child. We as a government have recognized that there is no way any agency can fulfil the needs that the family can provide. I think we can all agree on that. Perhaps this is due to the seemingly unbreakable bond between parent and child. Admittedly, it is difficult to convey the nature of family bond in words, because it is a bond based on emotions. This difficulty appears also in Bill 57.

What can we define as emotional abuse? Other speakers before me have referred to this, and indeed the member introducing the bill has admitted the problem. At what point does parental discipline become abuse? Is the child who is forced against his or her will to take piano lessons, say, abused? If so, we would probably have no pianists. The point that I mean to convey is that all relationships between family members are developed without thought or pretense and all parental discipline is based on emotion. Is this emotional harm? That is the question. I think not.

We must place more emphasis on the parents to teach a respect for authority. With this, perhaps, we would see fewer instances, for example, of youth in conflict with the law and some of the other negative things they see themselves confronted with in today's society.

Mr. McClellan: This is Ontario's youth policy?

Mr. Jones: I believe the dispensing of parental discipline, in the vast majority of cases, is judicious and responsible. In the majority of cases, the attitude that "this hurts me more than it hurts you" is true. Hopefully, parental discipline has a shared effect that strengthens the bonds of the family in the long term.

A problem I have with this bill is that it leaves the observer to report the incidence of emotional abuse. I believe this imposes the values of the observer on the family unit.

Mr. Cooke: They don't make the judgement.

Mr. Jones: This is a weakening of the individuality of the fundamental unit of our society. The children's aid society—and this has been mentioned by earlier speakers, including the member for St. George and, indeed the mover of this bill—has the authority now to investigate and act on cases of maltreatment of children. This bill proposes to establish a parallel body within the legal guardian's office to determine whether civil action for damages ought to be brought.

Mr. McClellan: What confusion within the social development field over there. This is really nuts.

Mr. Jones: I cannot reconcile this duplication for reason of costs during a period of constraint—

Mr. McClellan: Do you guys ever meet?

Mr. Jones: —or for the reason of the conflict that might occur between the agencies.

This is private members' business and I am expressing my private opinion on this.

Mr. McClellan: You are the youth secretary.

Mr. Bradley: The member for York East is making a face when you're saying that.

Mr. Elgie: A smiling face.

Mr. Jones: Imagine the children's aid society encouraging therapy in order to keep the family together while concurrently, the legal guardian proposes to bring charges against the parents on behalf of the child.

Mr. McClellan: This is the youth secretariat of the province.

Mr. Jones: It seems to me that, while I support the bill in principle, these are parts of this bill that, indeed, will have to be examined as it goes forward to committee.

Mr. Mancini: Is it going to go forward like my bill?

Mr. Jones: As I said earlier, I appreciate what the member for York East is saying as he refers, perhaps, to the welfare of children in the sense of parents who do not fit that norm I referred to earlier. Hopefully, the present therapeutic and counselling bodies of the province are capable of dealing with them.

My conception of our civil justice system is it is a last resort to be utilized when all other negotiations and reconciliations fail. To implement this bill as proposed would, however, encourage the use of the courts before all other negotiations and proceedings are exhausted—

Mr. McClellan: You haven't even read the bill; you are totally confused.

Mr. Jones: —partially because the crown and not the injured party would be empowered to initiate the proceedings. That is in the bill.

Mr. McClellan: You are going to get heckled from behind in a minute.

Mr. Jones: While I support the bill, in principle, I have some very real problems with the specifics. The final reason I am opposed is that—

Mr. McClellan: It's time for Barry Goldwater to come out.

Mr. Jones: —any awards made would be limited, in practice, by the parents' ability to pay.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Jones: I would close by saying most of the parents who come into mind in the incidents, and this is borne out by the report, are not necessarily people from those income brackets where this would be a factor.

Mr. Bradley: Who said Attila is dead?

Mr. Sweeney: I rise to support this bill with no qualifications and with no reservations.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: That's great.

Mr. Sweeney: I say that for two reasons. The first is, I find myself in general philosophical agreement so frequently with the member for York East I feel he must be in the wrong party.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Come on over.

Hon. Mr. Norton: You are welcome, John. Two of your colleagues have already offered to come across today.

Mr. Sweeney: As my colleague from Renfrew indicated earlier, if the member for York East must be in that party, surely it's because of the "Progressive," not because of the "Conservative."

Secondly, I appreciate that what we're dealing with at this particular point in time is the principle of the bill and we will have opportunity in committee later on to amend it, to fine tune it and to take into consideration some of the reservations to which several of the previous speakers have alluded.

I support this bill, as I say, because of the principles involved. I would like to touch on a couple of those. The first is that parents don't have absolute chattel rights over their children, they may not do whatever they choose to do with them. I say that as a parent. I say that as a father in a family—and I say "in" not "of," in a family, as a member of that family. I don't believe that I have those kinds of total, unlimited rights over my children; I think we have to say very carefully that we don't believe that other parents do. I also say, in reference to the immediate past future, that I don't want to see any unnecessary intrusion into family life in this province.

In most cases the families are able to look after themselves. But it is clearly evident, not only from the incidents that were brought to our attention by the mover of this bill but others that many of us are aware of, that there are some horrendous and unforgivable things happening to some children in some families in this province. We must surely stand forward and be a protector for them.

Therefore, the second principle of the bill which is enunciated, is that we say defenceless children and infants in this province have a right to a protector. It has often been said that the quality of any civilization is the degree to which it protects its defenceless—whether children, the aged, or the handicapped. That principle I see in this bill.

The third principle that I strongly support is the use of "shall" in reporting—not "may," not "should," but "shall." If there is one thing that has held so many people back, it is the natural human fear of reprisal in some form; reprisal, in that maybe they might be wrong, reprisal of suit, reprisal of ridicule, whatever it happens to be.

I would sincerely hope that the implementation of this bill, or some other bill like it—maybe at this point I could strongly suggest to the minister that maybe even a stronger bill coming from him or his parliamentary assistant is what we need.

Surely we need to say "shall." We need to give people who would want to report the assurance that they are doing the right thing, that they will be supported and that we don't expect them to be absolutely perfect or that they can't make a mistake.

I was pleased to hear the member for York East make a couple of references. He said, for example, that what we needed to be concerned with is the best interest of the infant or child, not somebody else's best interest.

He also pointed out that in ancient times—I believe he was referring to Rome—that a father had absolute authority over his child, even to the extent of capital punishment and being able to destroy that child. We know that in ancient Sparta a father would have the right to take a defective child out in the mountains and leave it there to the elements to die.

Mr. Foulds: Down with Sparta.

Mr. Sweeney: People in this day and age think that that kind of practice is barbarous; but the member for York East may remember that only a year ago in the summer of 1977 a church committee in this country recommended that defective babies be allowed to die. There was a wave of revulsion and horror sweeping this country. Yet what many people don't realize is that that precise practice has been going on for years. As a matter of fact, the December, 1974, edition of the Journal of Paediatric Medicine clearly identified that of the last 50 infants who were taken to the Hospital for Sick Children and who had an intestinal obstruction which would not permit them to accept food and who also just happened to have Down's syndrome—in other words they were retarded—of those 50, 27 were not operated on at the decision of the parents. Those 27 infants, without anyone else to protect them, were stuck in a corner of that hospital and allowed to starve to death. We need protection for that too.

The member for York East referred to maltreatment. I would hope that eventually this bill would also include lack of treatment. There is enough evidence that there are children who are being refused treatment. There are enough children who are being maltreated, either physically or emotionally, who need assistance.

In closing, I want to support the contention of the member for Bellwoods (Mr. McClellan) that legislation like this has really no weight if we are not prepared to go one further step. That is to provide as much assistance and support as we possibly can to the family units of this province that require it.

It is hypocritical of us to say to members of family units, "you shall not do this," and "you shall not do that," even as we recognize the terrible internal pressures which are driving many of these families to do things they would never do under normal circumstances; driving them to abuse their own children against their own deepest instincts. Yet the pressures on some families do exist. Surely, therefore, either within this bill or in companion legislation, we must make provision for such eventualities, and also, as the member for York East said, prevent what could happen. If we don't do that, then we are being hypocritical, even with an excellent bill like this.

Mr. Elgie: In the very short time remaining I want to extend my thanks to members who have supported the bill in principle and to those who have supported it in more than principle.

I wish the honourable member for St. George were here. She mentioned the difficulty she had with a troublesome case of emotional abuse, and I'd like to tell her this story.

Last week, the son of a friend of mine, who is a social worker, told me the trouble he was having. He was advised of a case of emotional abuse and went to visit the home. He was greeted at the door by a mother who said: "Okay, I knew you were coming. Look at the kid. You won't find a mark on him. I feed him three meals a day; but I hate him." That's emotional abuse, I say to the member for St. George, and that's not hard to identify.

Mrs. Campbell: You're right.

Mr. Elgie: The problem is the definition, and we all know that; but I appreciate her remarks very much.

I won't take time to go over all of the comments of the member for Bellwoods, but I do appreciate them, and also his criticism. I take it all in the way he intended, assuming it was well intended.

Mr. McClellan: Absolutely.

Mr. Lawlor: You don't like emotional abuse?

Mr. Elgie: I'm not as obsessed as he is with the need for an exact definition, because I like to feel that the courts have a pretty good capability for making a good determination on issues such as this. However, I did mention earlier that it was a problem we had to face and could face in committee.

Finally, with regard to the comments of the member for Mississauga North I wish to say that no one could object to his view that we shouldn't intrude into the life of the family. But I would like to quote to him a study entitled: Protecting the Battered Child, which states it has been well established that 90 per cent of the families involved already have serious social problems; we're not intruding into a healthy situation.

The member also made a comment about the income level of such families. The interesting thing about this study is that financial difficulty was a problem in only 22 per cent of the lengthy series reported in Protecting the Battered Child. I would submit to you that child abuse is not the domain of any one socio-economic group.

Mr. Speaker: We have about a minute and a half. Would the member for Windsor-Riverside like to make a brief comment?

Mr. Cooke: Sure.

I had prepared a more lengthy talk on this bill, but maybe I can make just one point, coming from the children's aid society as an employee before being elected. I'd like to mention to the sponsor of this bill some of the problems being faced with this problem of child abuse.

This is the problem of prevention versus protection. The problem in children's aid societies right now is that the workers in the societies don't know what their role is. The Child Welfare Act provides for both protection and prevention. The workers go out, do investigations; and then their role becomes prevention—preventing the child coming into care.

The end result is that crown wardship or some type of temporary wardship seems to be viewed as a failure. Children are being returned to parents, being returned to their families, and then we have these tragic cases that have taken place and received a fair amount of publicity and attention in this House over the last few months.

The government has to come to grips with the two jobs of children's aid societies, they have to be separated. We have to have an agency or someone in charge of being an advocate for the children to make sure that someone is looking after their interests, not an agency's interests and not their own personal interests. We have to have someone out there who will take the case to court, will fight it, and will appeal it too.

When cases go to court under the Child Welfare Act, children's aid societies very seldom appeal the case if they lose. That's another aspect, and it's a very important one.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

MINERAL RESOURCES OF ONTARIO CONSERVATION ACT

Sufficient members having objected by rising, a vote was not taken on Bill 88.

CHILDREN'S RIGHTS ACT

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Elgie has moved second reading of Bill 57.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for standing committee.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, may I take the few remaining moments to indicate the order of business for the balance of this week and next week?

Tonight, at 8 p.m. sharp—

Mr. Foulds: With a full quorum.

Mr. Conway: Larry did it so well.

Hon. Mr. Welch:—and we do have some reserved seats left; here, at 8 p.m., the budget debate; the budget debate from 8 to 10:30 tonight—at what time those of you who are here may have a preview of the Montreal victory tonight as well.

Mr. Conway: What does Sidney think about that?

Mr. Handleman: Those are my kind of Canadians.

Mr. Roy: You like winners, don't you?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Friday morning, that's tomorrow morning, the House will be in committee of supply and will continue its consideration of the estimates of the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

The business schedule for the week of May 29 is as follows: On Monday, the House in committee of supply considering the estimates of the Ministry of Northern Affairs; Tuesday, in the afternoon, we will take into consideration legislation, the following bills in this order: Bills 35, 90, 91, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84; in the evening, the following bills in this order—

Mr. Nixon: Oh, Lord.

Hon. Mr. Welch: —85, 92; following which we will continue with any of the bills which we have set out for the afternoon which were not completed in the afternoon, that is any of the bills between 80 and 84.

Wednesday, the general government committee, resources development committee and the justice committee may meet in the morning.

Thursday afternoon, the private members' public business will be Bill 89 standing in the name of the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy); and ballot 24, being a resolution standing in the name of the member for Beaches-Woodbine (Ms. Bryden). In the evening on Thursday we will continue with legislation not concluded on Tuesday, following which we will then call the 21st order, as it's recorded on today's order paper, being the adjourned debate on the report of the standing members' services committee. On Friday the House will be in committee of supply, again considering the estimates of the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

If there are no further questions on that, may I call, then, for the evening attraction, the third order?

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

HURONIA REGIONAL CENTRE

51. Mr. R. Mackenzie (Hamilton East): Would the Minister of Community and Social Services please provide the following information concerning the Huronia Regional Centre: One, how many people have been hired to date for 1978 summer employment at the centre; two, how many of those hired were taking community college or university courses in mental retardation; three, how many were from other courses; four, how many of those hired were from Orillia; five, how many from other parts of the province; six, how many of those hired had previously worked at the centre, voluntarily or on payroll; seven, how many who had previously worked at the centre, voluntarily or otherwise, who had applied for this year, were not hired; eight, how many of those in number seven were from Orillia. [Tabled May 10, 1978.]

Hon. K. Norton (Minister of Community and Social Services): I have attached on the following page information responding to the eight questions raised by Mr. Mackenzie in question 51, order paper 51. For your information, the ministry operates three summer employment programs at the Huronia Regional Centre, namely: SSPR for high school students; task-based summer employment for university or college students; and Experience '78. Mr. Mackenzie's questions would appear to be directed primarily towards the task-based summer program, which was the subject of some local controversy.

	(a) SSPR	(b) Task- based	(c) Exp. '78
1.	78	168	20	266
2.	N/A	58	0	58
3.	N/A	110	20	130
4.	74	135	16	225
5.	4	33	4	41
6.	48	82	7	137
7.	16	21	0	37
8.	16	0	0	16

(a) SSPR (high school students): (i) Re number five, this program did not have the specific criteria of preference to local high school students. However, all 78 positions were offered to local students who performed well on the criteria established for selection. Four students declined the positions and the next four who met the criteria were from outside the immediate hiring area.

(b) Task-based summer program (university and college students or grade 13 students accepted into college): (i) Local hiring area defined in terms of Orillia, Barrie, Midland and Gravenhurst; (ii) Re number five, includes 21 MRC students from Cambrian College who were given first priority along with Georgian College MRC students. The remaining twelve (33-21) in number five were recruited from outside the area because their specific training was not available locally.

(c) Experience '78 (experience-based university student program): (i) Re number five, four students were recruited from outside the immediate area because of their specific expertise and experience; (ii) This program did not attract very many applicants, probably because of the low pay scale in relation to university students' needs.

WORKS PROJECTS FOR INMATES OF INSTITUTIONS

52. Mr. E. Ziemba (High Park-Swansea): Will the Minister of Correctional Services list the works projects undertaken or projected for convicts. Which of these tasks were performed by the public or private sector in the past. [Tabled May 11, 1978.]

Hon. F. Drea (Minister of Correctional Services): The attached is a list of work projects which have been undertaken by or are planned for inmates of the Ontario correctional system. A basic condition placed on each project before its inception is that no wage-paying jobs in the community may be replaced due to these projects. Most of the listed projects simply augment and enhance ongoing programs of the relevant municipality, ministry or organization. The remainder of the projects are new initiatives. In summary, since the listed projects either augment established programs or may be viewed as new initiatives, they were not in the past performed by the public or private sector.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, MAY 25, 1978

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

CORRECTION OF PRESS REPORTS

Mr. Handleman: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege, and I want to say, I do so reluctantly. This is the first time in my six and a half years in this Legislature I have felt constrained to correct a press report.

Shortly after the routine proceedings this afternoon, the four-star edition of the Toronto Star came to my attention in which there is an article dealing with a speech I made in St. Catharines last night. I want to say the reporter is known to me as a normally conscientious, accurate and competent reporter, but unfortunately in this case there is an impression left that I was criticizing what has happened to the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations since I left it.

Mr. Laughren: Heaven forbid. You wouldn't do that, Sid.

Mr. Handleman: I want to make it quite clear that the statements in my speech referred to the situation in the ministry—and I referred to the date when it was formed—in 1972. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to correct the record by reading a very short portion of that speech.

I said, "The government of Canada and all of the provinces have established vast bureaucracies to develop and administer the rapidly expanding body of legislation designed to improve consumer rights. What we now have are bureaucratic mazes, like Ontario's Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations. It was created in 1972 out of a number of regulatory bodies." I want to make it clear that I was referring to what I consider to be the situation of the ministry since its formation and while some may disagree with my description as a bureaucratic maze, I stand by that description.

While I am on my feet, I also would like to draw attention to what may be perpetuated as a misconception of the position I took earlier this week. The same reporter says I had criticized the Premier (Mr. Davis) for holding a reception for the Premier of Quebec. I want to make it quite clear—and it was corrected later on in the Sun—that I said that the Premier did what the Premier should do, act as a courteous host to a visiting premier, but that I did not feel constrained to attend. I think that there is a great difference between criticizing the Premier for holding the reception, which I did not do, and myself refusing to attend, which I did do and that is well known.

Mr. Warner: Boycotting it.

BUDGET DEBATE

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the amendment to the motion that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, obviously not all the members of the assembly were aware that I would be speaking this evening—

Mr. Handleman: I wouldn't have been here.

Mr. J. Reed: If I had known, I wouldn't be here.

Mr. Warner: —otherwise we would have filled the benches immediately.

There is a very important matter which I wish to address myself to but before I begin I can't help but comment upon the boycott by the member for Carleton of the—

Mr. Handleman: That is your word, not mine.

Mr. Warner: Yes it's my word, but it's a very sad commentary when a member of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario will not attend a very important official function to welcome the premier of another province into our midst. Although it got buried somewhere in the pages of our local papers, members must remember it was up-front news in Quebec.

Mr. Handleman: Show me where. Which paper?

Mr. Warner: That kind of action does nothing but deteriorate the situation between Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. Handleman: Tell me one paper it was in.

Mr. Warner: It weakens the opportunities for us to try to reach out to those people in Quebec who are federalists and say to them that it is important for Quebec to remain as a member of this Confederation.

Mr. Handleman: It certainly is.

Mr. Warner: Surely, it behoves every member of this assembly to make every effort to try and save Confederation and that includes extending the courtesies to the Premier of Quebec when he comes to visit here in Toronto.

Mr. Handleman: You do it your way, I'll do it mine.

Mr. Warner: I put the boycott of the member for Carleton in the same category as those bigots who booed at the CNE when our national anthem was sung in our two official languages. A very sad comment.

Earlier today, I found it necessary to take what I believe to be a unique approach to the assembly in petitioning the government on behalf of another member of the assembly. I did so in the long-standing tradition which dates back to 1669 in the Petition of Rights in the British House of Commons. It was on the basis, as stated in 1669, that it is the inherent right of every commoner in England to prepare and present petitions to the House of Commons in case of grievance, and incumbent on the House of Commons to receive the same.

Further, as stated by Sir Valentine Blake on August 30, 1841; Sir James Graham, April 30, 1846; and Fergus O'Connor, July 9, 1850; "A peer or member may petition the House to which he belongs; but if a member desires to have a petition from himself presented to the House, he should entrust it to some other member, as he will not be permitted to present it himself."

I petitioned the assembly today because of the block that took place yesterday by both the Liberal and Tory members in the rent review committee when they rose to block my motion to have an extension of the present rent review system, due to the pending legal problem which will face both tenants and landlords as of September 30.

Mr. Haggerty: You are premature.

Mr. Warner: Particularly for the edification of the Liberal members who happen to stumble upon the House this evening, I would bring to their attention that—

Mr. J. Reed: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Warner:—the rent review committee is directed to report back to the House no later than June 15. It is anticipated that the assembly will rise on June 23 and will not sit again until October. That means that in keeping with the legal restriction of September 30 for new legislation the government must then take the committee's report on the 15th, digest it, have adequate discussion of their drafted legislation, have it fully debated in the assembly and out in committee, where the public can take part, and have it passed within eight days.

Mr. Speaker, I can readily appreciate that that is not likely to be physically possible and, therefore, when we reach September 30, at which time the House will not likely be sitting, we have reached a very serious legal problem for both landlords and tenants in the province of Ontario because of the 90-day provision of the Landlord and Tenant Act and of the parallel feature in the rent review act—

Mr. Kerrio: It's all your fault.

Mr. Warner:—which is to expire on December 31. So therefore my motion yesterday was a very reasonable one—

Mr. Hodgson: I think it was a terrible motion.

Mr. Warner:—that while the government is considering its legislation, whatever that is going to be, they simply extend the present legislation for a period of up to six months, during which time they can obviously introduce whatever legislation they deem to be fit and necessary. A perfectly reasonable motion. The Liberals joined with the Tories to block that motion—

Mr. Hodgson: It's a good job common sense prevailed.

Mr. Warner:—and obviously the only comment that can be made is that they care not about the tenants of Ontario. That's a very sad comment. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I guess you could say that they care not about the landlords of Ontario either, since they will be equally affected by the legal impediment which would be placed upon them on September 30.

Mr. Kerrio: We care not about the socialists of Ontario.

Mr. Warner: In questioning today in the House, Mr. Speaker, you will recall that the minister of corporate protection indicated that he was not ready to extend the rent review legislation, but what he was considering was shortening the length of time that is included in the rent review legislation for due and proper notice to the tenants. And that must signal a warning to the tenants of Ontario that while this government remains in power the security of tenure for the tenants of Ontario is in jeopardy.

Yesterday I also had the pleasure, along with my colleagues, to place before the committee a proposal, a lengthy proposal, an in-depth proposal containing at least 30 major points on the future operation of rental protection for the tenants of Ontario. And I think what is important to note is that there is a basic fundamental difference with respect to our position and that of the other two parties. And it is included in the very first sentence of our proposal which reads, and I quote: "That the recognition of decent and affordable housing as a social right in Ontario is long overdue." The essence of it being that decent, affordable housing should be in fact a social right and not some sort of privilege granted to those who happen to earn a sizeable sum of money. And that point, that very basic philosophy, is the point of departure between the New Democratic Party of Ontario and the other two parties in this assembly, both of them of course sharing a different kind of philosophy—if we indeed raise the Liberal party to that high elevation of having a philosophy—but both of them are in opposition to the basic philosophy which I've enunciated. That was brought in a dramatic way to the committee yesterday afternoon when they rose to block that.

They also indicated they didn't appreciate having a position put in front of them. In fact, I was accused by a Conservative member of making this a political issue.

Mr. Hodgson: He was so right, wasn't he? He was so right.

An hon. member: Horrendous.

Mr. Warner: Making it a political issue? Mr. Speaker, can you think of any other issue in the last three years which has not been so political as this one?

Mr. Hodgson: That's all you use the rent committee for, political purposes.

Mr. Warner: The tenants of Ontario cried for protection in 1974 and 1975, and the government denied them protection.

Mr. Kerrio: Come up with a plan.

Mr. Hodgson: You haven't got a plan, you haven't got a policy.

Mr. Kerrio: You haven't got a plan; you make a lot of noise.

Mr. Warner: The tenants were exploited during those years with skyrocketing rents, and in response the government said nothing and did nothing. It was only when it was fully developed as a political issue during the election of 1975 that it got resolved in a political way, with the government brought screaming and kicking into a rent review program.

Mr. Hodgson: Tough, David; tough, tough; you teachers have it so tough.

Mr. Warner: A member of that government had the nerve yesterday to say I was making this into a political issue. I don't know what kind of a gentlemen's debating society he thinks this place is, but this happens to be a political arena and this happens to be a place where political issues are brought before the representatives of the people to be debated in a very open and forthright way, but in a political way.

Mr. J. Reed: Oh, wonderful revelation.

Mr. Kerrio: Open, yes; forthright, I don't know.

Mr. Warner: I don't know what the government of Ontario intends to do with respect to the rights and privileges of people in this province who happen to be tenants, I have no idea.

Mr. Haggerty: Keep them guessing, Bill. Keep them guessing, it will confuse them more.

Mr. Warner: I do know a committee sits right now and it discusses items. It rarely debates issues, but it discusses items.

Mr. Hodgson: Got to get a quorum call in; time!

Mr. Warner: It will complete its work no later than June 15, as per the direction of the assembly, and it will report back here. Then the matter rests squarely with the government, because as we all know, there is no obligation upon the government to adopt any report. The government is certainly free to bring in any legislation it cares to, and it doesn't have to be in accordance with a report.

Mr. Worton: Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt the speaker? Now we've lost one more member, could we have a quorum call?

Clerk of the House: There is not a quorum, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Acting Speaker called for the quorum bells.

On resumption:

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Scarborough-Ellesmere may proceed.

Mr. Warner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We still don't have 125, but we are working on it.

Mr. Kerrio: Be nice, don't drive everybody out again.

Mr. Sweeney: That did it.

Mr. Warner: Before I continue, I would like to relate an interesting little anecdote which the member for Sudbury (Mr. Germa) was sharing with me while the bell was ringing and which the member for Carleton (Mr. Handleman) may be interested in.

Just prior to the official visit here at the assembly by the Premier of Quebec, my good colleague the member for Sudbury (Mr. Germa) encountered the Premier of Quebec in the Yorkville area, north of Bloor Street, and stopped to chat with him. He mentioned casually that he would be seeing the Premier later on down here at the assembly, to which the Premier responded, "Oh, you are not boycotting me?" The news had travelled so fast.

An hon. member: He is boycotting the speaker.

Mr. Warner: My good colleague responded that of course he wouldn't be boycotting him; the Premier of Quebec would receive a good reception, at least from the NDP members of the House, who are always delighted to have a visitor from another province come to be with us at Queen's Park.

Mr. Foulds: Even if it was Peter Lougheed.

Mr. Warner: So the boycott rumours had spread pretty quickly.

I have a feeling that the member for Carleton didn't realize at the time that his singular act was such a loud alarm throughout quite a portion of Ontario and Quebec, and his inappropriate action was causing concern—

Mr. Handleman: I didn't know that anybody had heard about it.

Mr. Warner: —in that it wouldn't just be him; it signalled an attitude of the government of Ontario, perhaps even of Ontario itself, with respect to a visit from the Premier of Quebec. A very sad thing.

Mr. Kerrio: That's like inviting to dinner the guy who's going to break up your marriage.

Mr. Warner: Perhaps, if we are lucky, the member for Carleton will apologize at some point to the Premier of Quebec and to this assembly for his actions. I certainly hope so—

Mr. Handleman: Don't hold your breath.

Mr. Samis: You are a great Canadian, Sidney.

Mr. Warner: —because his efforts weaken Confederation, not strengthen it.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, I would be quite happy to yield temporarily if the member for Carleton is ready to apologize to the House.

Mr. Handleman: I have no intention whatsoever.

Mr. Warner: The member has no intention to apologize?

Mr. Foulds: You and Jack Horner. Since Stevens had more grace than you have.

Mr. Samis: You're a great Canadian, Sidney.

Mr. Germa: You probably boo at the ball park too. Do you boo at the ball park?

Mr. Handleman: Yes I do.

Mr. Warner: Yes he does. I hope that Hansard picks that up. The member for Carleton—

Mr. Handleman: I go to the ball park.

Mr. Warner: The member goes to the ball park.

Mr. Breaugh: What do you do when you are there?

Mr. Warner: And when our national anthem is sung in both official languages, the member boos when it's sung in French, is that correct?

Mr. Handleman: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Handleman: I would like the honourable member to withdraw that accusation. I do not boo. I disagree with those who boo. I think they're boorish, that they shouldn't do it, but I don't think you just leave it at that. You find out why they do it. But I do not boo, Mr. Speaker, and I want the member to withdraw that comment.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order. Would the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere continue, please?

Mr. Germa: It was not a point of order?

Mr. Warner: Yes, I asked a question. It was not an accusation.

Mr. Acting Speaker: It was not a point of order.

Mr. Germa: Oh, good. I think he was a boor by boycotting the Premier of Quebec anyway.

Mr. Warner: The member for Carleton missed it. I asked a question. I did not make an accusation. That is not the way in which I do things.

Mr. Hall: Back to the budget, David.

Mr. Warner: I think the really important part of the budget is our response to the Confederation crisis. Mr. Speaker, as I was saying prior to the ringing of the bells—

Mr. Hodgson: There goes the member for Oshawa. He is not going to listen to you any more.

Mr. Warner: I think it should be on the record, as I indicated earlier today, that I certainly welcome the overnight change by the Liberal Party with respect to their position on rent review.

Mr. Kerrio: Baseball? What are you talking about?

Mr. Warner: Mind you, that was today's position. Who knows what bright things tomorrow holds.

Mr. Foulds: Or even this evening.

Mr. Warner: Or even this evening. Yesterday's position was repudiated by the leader of the Liberal Party today. We don't know, of course, how deep the rift goes in that party with respect to rent review. We do know that not all of the members are in favour of rent protection for the tenants of Ontario. We do know that the Liberal Party does not have a position on the subject—

Mr. Hall: Back to the budget, David.

Mr. Warner:—nor do they feel compelled to even discuss it. However, I'm sure that all of that will sort itself out, as it must before June 15. It should also be noted that one of the suggestions which came out of the Liberal Party—

Mr. J. Reed: Of all the members of the House you are the one that should talk.

Mr. Sweeney: Not necessarily from you, David.

Mr. Hall: You don't know much about the committee system do you, David?

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, would you bring this House to order?

Mr. Warner:—was that rent review might be valuable for Metro Toronto but no other location in Ontario.

Mr. M. Davidson: That is the Liberal position.

Mr. Warner: That seems to be rather strange. Those of us who live in this area and understand the nature of the urban centre, knowing that it encompasses areas to the east, Pickering, Durham, Oshawa and Mississauga to the west, know that we have developed a large urban complex that goes beyond the political boundaries of Metropolitan Toronto. We know there are a great number of people who reside in those communities but work within Metro Toronto, and they commute daily.

Mr. Hodgson: That is where they get all the work.

Mr. Warner: If there was rent review simply for Metro Toronto and no other locality you would see a shift in the problem out to those outlying areas which now are experiencing an increase in their population and an increase in the building of apartment buildings. We don't know, of course, whether or not that is the Liberal position because no position has been stated. But rumour has it that is what they're looking for.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege.

Mr. Germa: Come on, Margaret.

Mrs. Campbell: A statement has been made that the Liberal Party has no position. It is quite a different point of view. We will be announcing a position after we have heard from everyone. We do not believe that we should issue a report before we have the deliberations of a committee of this House. But it certainly can't be said that we don't have a position.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that. The Liberal Party will now run out and formulate a position.

[8:30]

Mrs. Campbell: Oh, come on.

Mr. Kerrio: When is the NDP going to start formulating its?

Mr. Warner: One of the things that certainly has troubled me over the last little while, certainly prior to the inception of rent review and through the rent review procedure—

Mrs. Campbell: Who introduced rent review? Not the NDP.

Mr. Warner:—is that somehow the government—

Mr. Haggerty: Take it easy, Maggie. He's only an overnight guest.

Mr. Warner: One down, 31 to go.

Mr. Foulds: Has the member for St. George gone out to formulate a position?

Mr. Warner: One of the things that has troubled me for some time over the business of rent review, certainly through the years of 1973, 1974 and 1975, and during the present time of the rent review process, was that somehow the government divorced the rent review procedure, protection of rents, from the housing situation, and have pretended that if they imposed rent review it would somehow have an effect on the housing market. What's interesting is that in Metro Toronto, the housing starts and the vacancy rates were down prior to the inception of rent review and haven't altered significantly during the period of time in which rent review has been invoked. Further, what we have discovered in the committee—

Mr. Hodgson: Tell us, though, before you start—which are you, a tenant or a landlord?

Mr. Samis: What are you, Bill?

Mr. Hodgson: Neither one.

Mr. Warner:—by way of a consultant and his investigation is that rent review has had no visible effect on the construction of new housing. That's not just from this party which always believed that. That's from the consultants who have studied the positions and the information put forward by the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, the Ministry of the Attorney General, the Ministry of Housing, the Conservative Party, the Liberal Party, the New Democratic Party and the public hearings which we held around the province.

The consultants have drawn the conclusion from all of their information that the rent review procedure does not have any discernible effect upon the housing situation and the production of new housing.

You will find this interesting, Mr. Speaker, as it gets a little closer to your home turf. When we were in Thunder Bay we had a presentation made to us—

Mr. Cureatz: That's a thousand miles away.

Mr. Foulds: That's to the left of Sudbury.

Mr. Warner: To the left and a bit to the right.

Mr. Cureatz: You're all wet.

Mr. Foulds: Sam, just be quiet and sign those first-time home buyer grants, will you?

Mr. Warner: It's interesting that the member for Durham East talks about being all wet, climbing out of his home-buyer-grant pool.

Mr. J. Reed: You're driving everybody away.

Mr. Warner: When we were in Thunder Bay the presentation made to us was to the effect that since the inception of rent review some new buildings—

Mr. Haggerty: You've lost all your audience now.

Mr. Warner:—had been constructed. They were about to be completed. They had begun after 1975 and they're now about to be completed. The people who were responsible for that—

Mr. M. Davidson: Good job.

Mr. Warner: As Acting Speaker the member for Nickel Belt has performed his duties as usual in an excellent fashion.

Mr. M. Davidson: As all New Democrats do.

Mr. Warner: What we were informed of was that the production of rental housing in the city of Thunder Bay had not been affected in one way or another by the rent review procedure. The problem which appears to exist in Thunder Bay is that there are a large number of small units, a sixplex, perhaps buildings with 10 units or less, where maintenance is a problem, and where it's not possible for the tenant to get the owner to make the necessary repairs. Maintenance is a passthrough cost in the rent review procedure and there is no reason why the landlord should not make the repairs. It's not costing him anything, and yet despite that, there was a difficulty for the tenants in Thunder Bay to get those repairs made.

What we discovered was there are approximately 15,000 families in Thunder Bay who live in rental accommodation. In one year, the number of complaints received by the rent review officer who testified before us, and the city social services department which operates a landlord-tenant bureau, totalled more than 4,000 complaints in a year, out of a total of 15,000 families. It seems to me there is a pretty severe problem in Thunder Bay with respect to the maintenance difficulties, the rights of tenants and other related matters. The tenants are unable to do much about it because they're not organized. They live in small buildings, there aren't many of them in a building and so they are not able to be organized.

Mr. Haggerty: Your former leader found it cheaper to rent than to own a home.

Mr. Warner: The plea was quite clear and quite desperate: If you leave, if you abandon rent review, the tenants will be abandoned.

Mr. M. Davidson: Can you justify that in Fort Erie?

Mr. Warner: I think the member for Fort Erie can appreciate if you abandon rent review, you abandon the tenants of Ontario. What will happen is we will see skyrocketing rents as we saw in 1973 and 1974. The gouging by the landlords will take place as it did in 1973 and 1974 and early in 1975. There won't be any protection for the tenants. I think it's important here, Mr. Speaker, to point out the basic differences as we now see them emerging. The Conservative Party, through its green paper, in the red cover, indicates it wishes somehow to slide out of rent review.

Mr. M. Davidson: End it, end it.

Mr. Warner: Decontrol is the little word, the term that is used quite often. What that means, in more understandable language, is cut off the protection for tenants—

Mr. M. Davidson: Sid knows all about it.

Mr. Warner: —and let them be the victims of the so-called free market.

Mr. M. Davidson: Sid Handleman knows all about that.

Mr. Warner: I think the ex-minister of corporate protection understands that quite well. He didn't want to administer the program. One of the reasons he didn't want to administer it is, of course, because he didn't believe in it. He believed in the viciousness of the so-called free market. Let the tenants be at the mercy of those landlords who charge whatever they want to charge with no accountability. That's what the member for Carleton believed in. I give him credit for it, at least he stood up and said, "That's what I believe and therefore I don't think I should be operating the program." I give him credit for that. It's pretty straightforward. His views may be wrong, misguided, but at least he was straightforward about it. I appreciate that.

Mr. Handleman: Thank heaven for small mercies.

Mr. Warner: I like to be fair and reasonable about things. I give you credit.

Mr. Handleman: It's very much appreciated.

Mr. Samis: You must feel uncomfortable sitting with the Tories.

Mr. Warner: You know by what that has been replaced. The member for Carleton at least dealt with it in a straightforward manner. There is some slippery language in that green paper, a sleight of hand, Mr. Speaker, because while some alternatives are provided, the message runs like a thread through the entire paper and the end line is "get rid of rent review." That's the bottom line for the Tory Party, get rid of rent review

Mr. M. Davidson: Well, it was Sid's policy.

Mr. Warner: This party has clearly stated, not only on previous occasions, but again yesterday in a comprehensive paper filed with the committee and its adoption moved, that the tenants need protection. They need better protection than what they've got now, but we've got to find some ways to clean up the bureaucratic problems. That's why we suggested you take all the landlord and tenant matters, the rent matters, the housing standards matters and put them under one umbrella.

Deal with them with a tenancy commission and make sure you have all the hearings for one building held on an annual date. Once a year you're going to determine the problems in the rents, et cetera, for all the units in one particular building. That, in itself, would cut down on the bureaucratic problems which have plagued the rent review offices over the last couple of years and cut down on the cost that's involved, since we're conscious of the cost-saving effort which is needed. It's been our position, a very strong one, a very forthright one.

Now we come to the Liberal Party.

Mr. J. Reed: Hurray.

Mr. M. Davidson: Spare us.

Mr. Warner: I've now discussed their policy.

Mr. Speaker, it's clear that before we can make any meaningful progress on the rent review problem and the protection of tenants with respect to the Landlord and Tenant Act by way of legislation in this assembly, a statement of principle should be made. That is, that housing—decent, affordable housing—is a social right. That's the place from which to start. That's the base. From that base, you look at the rental and ownership policies.

How are we going to solve the problem of not having an adequate supply of affordable housing? This government throws up its hands and says it can't do anything. It's all up to the private market, which up to now has not been able to supply decent, affordable housing in an adequate amount. This government doesn't have the leadership, doesn't have the programs or the policies. For example, I look at one extremely important segment I recall raising in the 1976 estimates of the Ministry of Housing, where they supposedly had allocated, it said so in their budget, a sum of money for the support and the development of non-profit co-operative housing. I'd like to know where it is. I'd like to know where all these units of non-profit co-operative housing have been developed.

Aside from the units developed by the city of Metro Toronto and a few other scattered units around the province of Ontario, there is no evidence of government leadership in that field, none whatsoever. One of the reasons the same problem is not so acute in Sweden is that approximately 40 per cent of their housing stock is in co-operative non-profit. They've had government leadership. The people are able to obtain homes at a reasonable cost and in line with their salaries. It doesn't happen here. We view it as some sort of privilege.

If I could digress a moment, the part I know best is my own early life. I grew up in a duplex and my parents had the opportunity later to purchase a small five-room bungalow. There are no five-room bungalows any more. They've disappeared. That was a house developed for a specific market, working people and veterans from the Second World War. Those people could afford to move into the bungalow.

Not only is the bungalow gone now, but the people can't afford to buy the replacement for the bungalow, which has been the larger house and the townhouse. In Metro Toronto the cheapest townhouse you are going to find, that is decent, is somewhere around $36,000 to $39,000—and with a high mortgage, because the government doesn't even have the leadership to guarantee low mortgages. That is incredible, absolutely incredible.

The government fully realizes that the credit union league of this province made a proposal to handle housing mortgages at eight per cent and a bookkeeping charge of perhaps a quarter of one per cent; to turn over money which this government is able to get on the market in New York or other places at eight per cent, sometimes a little less, sometimes a little more, but around the eight per cent mark—and the credit unions in Ontario were quite willing to handle that money and put it out as mortgage money for houses.

This government is not interested. Of course, they are not interested because their corporate friends are in the established banks, the national banks, the established ones. Without a federal government committed to low mortgages for housing, nothing is going to be done. Contrast that with the United States, where even in that extreme capitalist country, the federal government guarantees seven and three quarters per cent for housing. They even go so far as to deduct that mortgage interest payment from the income tax.

This province shrugs its shoulders and says: "Well, if you can accumulate enough wealth, go ahead and buy yourself a house." A single-family detached home in Metro Toronto: a new one is going to cost you somewhere around $70,000; a used one something like, I suppose, at least $55,000. Working people don't have that kind of money. They can't afford the down payment, they can't afford the carrying charges, they can't afford the high interest rates, they can't afford this government. That goes on unabated; there is no change.

What bothers me is that when the report comes in from the committee about rent review, and the government then comes back with its legislation, we are still not likely to see any initiative in housing. We are not going to see any commitment to land banking, making sure that land is available at a reasonable cost. That is part of the route; the government was told that more than 20 years ago: that the government should land bank, hold on to the land, release it as it is needed for the development of housing, at cost, so as to reduce the overall price of the home. But their faith in the corporate sharks wouldn't allow them to embark on a program of land banking.

The only major effort was in the Malvern area. You know, if we wanted to spend the rest of the night talking about it—and two or three days—we could try to unravel the mess that was created in Malvern, starting with the hassle between the federal government, the provincial government and the municipality over who should pay the taxes on the vacant land before it was developed. That went on for several years.

Then we reached phase one of Malvern where some people had the bright idea that you land bank, allow people to move in and then sell it on speculation. That is incredible. That is not a commitment to housing; that is a commitment to personal greed. If it was a commitment to housing, they would have guaranteed that there wasn't going to be a speculation and they would also have protected those first-time buyers from having to meet a new interest rate and cost of land at the five-year level. They didn't do that.

Some of those new buyers then got stuck at five years when the mortgage opened and went to the bank rate; then they had to make up for lost time and lost money. It created real financial pressures. The Malvern project could have been extremely successful. It has not accomplished what it should have. And that was the so-called flagship of the Tory housing policy, as I could see it, and they have no other successful housing project in large scale which they can point to.

If that isn't enough, this government has decided to get rid of its Ontario Housing Corporation stock. It starts in an insidious way by turning the projects over to Royal Trust, allowing Royal Trust to manage what is really their responsibility, the government's responsibility; and making sure that no more units are built in Metro Toronto. We have a waiting list right now of more than 10,000 people in Metro Toronto who qualify for Ontario Housing and are waiting—10,000.

Many of those desperate problems come in to my office and into the offices of other members of this caucus who are in Metro Toronto. Their situations are desperate. All I can say is: "I will do the best I can for you but the present government is not building any units. They are trying to get out of their housing responsibilities. They have a very serious responsibility for housing and they are trying to get rid of it."

The government was given, a few years ago, an excellent plan. It was suggested to them that instead of building ghettos as they had done in some areas—and the former Minister of Housing, Mr. Rhodes, would be aware of the 400 McCowan area which was developed as a ghetto; there's no other way to describe it—they should embark on subsidizing the rents of some tenants in a building. Maybe they would take a building and 10 per cent of the tenants would have their rent subsidized. That would be preferable to building ghettos. Well, that kind of a program takes a lot of initiative; it takes a lot of good planning and it takes some dedication. Housing is the responsibility of this government and it is a social right for people in the province. But no such commitment exists. So that program of subsidization lags far behind the pace that it should be going at.

Meanwhile, no more housing is being built by Ontario Housing Corporation. They are turning over their responsibility to Royal Trust and, I assume, other trust companies as well. I don't know how the government has the conscience to live with that, knowing that there are at least 10,000 people in Metro who need housing and can't get it. Many of those senior citizens, obviously, many of those single-parent families, people who are disabled. It's an incredible mess. This government is responsible for it. I don't see any leadership to clean it up.

I guess what I am saying is that the housing situation in Ontario is indeed a very complex one. There are many components to it, the rental being part of it; the construction of new housing being part of it; the reconstruction of urban centres being a part of it; the first-time ownership of resales being a part of it.

I would digress there for a moment, Mr. Speaker: I don't understand why the federal program—and, of course, that program being plugged into by the provincial government—was just for new homes for first-time buyers. Young couples who are looking for their first home would be quite happy with a resale but the advantage lies in purchasing the new home—or did before they started terminating the program—not in purchasing a resale.

Surely the advantage should have been towards the resale, for several reasons.

In Scarborough, where we are having a decline in the school population, we are getting an increase, obviously in older citizens who don't have children in school, and that is an area where the older homes are. If the government had an active program whereby young couples would have some advantage in purchasing resales, they would be moving into those older areas. Instead of having to close out a school, as we're now having to do, the schools would still have their population of children in that area. But that's not happening in Scarborough. We're closing out schools in the south part of the borough and building brand new ones in the north part. In some small measure, the housing policies with respect to assistance on first-time buying is helping that process along. It could have done the reverse.

So there are many aspects. Unfortunately, what the government has chosen to do is fragment the housing policy into several little areas and not co-ordinate them in any way, not have any overall plan for them, and somehow think they can deal with rent review in isolation. They do that, and then blame the lack of housing on the rent review program. That kind of nonsense just won't be bought by almost anyone. It just won't sell. It's not true. You can't look at rent review in isolation, just as you can't look at the development of single-family dwellings in isolation. It's a complex package and you have to look at every aspect of the housing market, every single one.

I will terminate where I began. We won't make any progress in this province until the government acknowledges that decent, affordable housing is a social right and not some sort of privilege for the rich.

Mr. Handleman: Mr. Speaker, there are really only two times during the session when a private member may address this assembly on matters of urgent concern to him and his constituents. One of them, of course, is the debate on the speech from the throne. I was able to participate in that and—

Mr. Philip: Going to help the separatist cause here tonight?

Mr. Handleman: —I am very pleased to take this second opportunity, because there are some matters of great concern to me and to my constituents. I intend to deal with that particular topic tonight. I hope to do it systematically, without rambling. I had hoped to do it last Thursday prior to the meeting between the two Premiers. My colleague from Oriole (Mr. Williams) had some important statements to make that night—

Mr. Samis: Important!

Mr. Handleman: —and I deferred to him. I make my comments tonight, first of all, because Mr. Hoy in his column last Sunday in the Sun said I had made them and I certainly wouldn't want Mr. Hoy to be guilty of a misstatement. I'm making them after he has written about them.

For many years, the people of eastern Ontario have felt victimized by the Quebec government in a variety of ways. Since the Quebec election of November 15, 1976, people in my area have spoken out with increasing frequency of their concern about this feeling of discrimination and the feeling that they have been abandoned by the Ontario government.

Mr. Samis: That's right.

Mr. Handleman: I don't suggest for a moment those feelings are well-founded, but there is that feeling and it must be dealt with.

The situation has been described by me as the Quebec-Ontario interface. It has been described by other people in the media as the Quebec curtain. Some people have demanded certain actions, and the member for Cornwall today reluctantly introduced, and I agree with his reluctance, legislation which I think reflects that feeling.

All too often those feelings have been met by people in the media, and some politicians who are sheltered in their little suburban ghettos in Scarborough, with the plea to exercise moderation in the interests of national unity, because if we criticize that government we are destroying the country.

Mr. Warner: I didn't say that. I said it was your boycott.

Mr. Handleman: I have to come to the conclusion that emotional cause of national unity is being misused. It's being thrown around carelessly when a logical argument cannot be developed to defend the actions of the government of Quebec. "Be nice to them. We don't understand why they're doing that, but for goodness sakes, don't criticize them, because our country may come to a halt."

Mr. Samis: He didn't say that.

Mr. Warner: I didn't say that and you know it. It was your boycott I was upset about.

Mr. Handleman: The actions I speak of tonight have nothing to do with language; they have nothing to do with culture; they have nothing to do with constitutional reform.

Mr. Kerrio: I like the way Sid says it.

Mr. Handleman: They are entirely in the area of economics, employment and the quality of life for the people I represent.
[9:00]

Mr. Samis: That is still no reason for boycott.

Mr. Handleman: The genuine concern of Canadians for the future of our country can result in the overuse of the words "national unity" and can become a buzz word without meaning.

Mr. Laughren: You are not kidding.

Mr. Handleman: I deplore that tendency to keep using it in spurious causes.

Mr. Samis: Do you remember the last election?

Mr. Handleman: Yes, and shortly after the last election I urged the Premier at that time—

Mr. Samis: Remember those ads on TV, Sidney?

Mr. Laughren: What about your ads?

Mr. Handleman: I urged the Premier at that time to meet with Premier Levesque.

Mr. Laughren: Tell us about your ads.

An hon. member: Disgraceful.

Mr. Warner: Disgusting.

Mr. Handleman: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would defer to the member from the Lakehead and ask if he would quote ads that I used in the last election dealing with national unity. I deny it categorically. If he can find one, I will be glad to apologize to him.

Mr. Samis: I am not referring to you.

Mr. Kerrio: You're like Sinclair Stevens, you don't have any evidence.

Mr. Handleman: The list of actions by the Quebec government which have impacted adversely on the people of eastern Ontario is very long. Many of my colleagues from eastern Ontario are fully familiar with them and I want to put them on the record. Each of the items on the list would provide material for at least a half-hour speech so I have no intention of dealing with each of them at that length.

Mr. Philip: You could have talked to Levesque himself. You are responsible.

Mr. Handleman: Following the Premier's meeting with Mr. Levesque this week, I should put forward at least a short list of those problems which the people of eastern Ontario want solved as quickly as possible.

Mr. Samis: You could have done it directly.

Mr. Handleman: Having read the communique, Mr. Speaker, I find we are not that much closer to solutions today than we were on Tuesday.

Mr. Warner: You won't even talk to him.

Mr. Handleman: Mr. Speaker, I have asked the Premier to meet with Mr. Levesque. He has done so. I have asked him to put these items on the agenda. He has done so. I really feel that we must continue to talk to the people of Quebec and their government. That doesn't mean we have to fraternize with them, and there is a great difference.

Mr. Samis: Ah, get off the pot.

Mr. Handleman: There is the question of the effect of the new automobile insurance legislation which I am sure my friends in the New Democratic Party completely endorse. However, the people in eastern Ontario are concerned about the effect of that legislation on them because they do not have equal rights in Quebec with Quebec drivers, and something must be done about it.

I have drawn these problems to the attention of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Grossman). It is in the communique. The minister has promised to take it up with his counterpart in Quebec. I must say that I found his counterpart in Quebec to be most non-cooperative in dealing with these matters.

Mr. Warner: The member for Cornwall raised that too.

Mr. Philip: She's a heck of a lot better minister than you were.

Mr. Samis: Madame Payette is more constructive than you are.

Mr. Handleman: I hope he will have more co-operation from her than I have.

I would just like to read the communique on the question of automobile insurance: "The Premier has noted that officials of both provinces have met recently to consider possible ways of resolving this problem." Having participated in the drafting of communiques, it isn't difficult to interpret that to mean that no progress was made.

They noted that they had met and they hoped the ministers would make an early recommendation to resolve the situation. Well, I hope so too, because there may be a very tragic incident involving an Ontario driver in Quebec very shortly and then perhaps our friend Jonathan Manthorpe won't consider these matters to be trivia. They are quite important. They are not trivial, and I hope that matter is resolved. I must say that I am not very confident they will be resolved, but certainly hope they are.

All members in this House are aware of the actions that were taken several months ago by the Quebec government in collecting gasoline taxes from Ontario-based commercial vehicles. The information from the Ministry of Revenue that I have been able to obtain is that the activity has slowed down or even ceased, but I still receive complaints of harassment from my constituents, from Ontario businesses who receive demands for payments of these gasoline taxes.

Calls for reciprocal arrangements do not appear to have been responded to with any sympathy by Quebec officials, other than to say they really don't consider it to be a major problem and they don't have a police force watching for Ontario drivers on Quebec highways. I must accept that as their word. However, we still keep getting complaints about activities in this area.

We are aware of the problem involving transport licensing and the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) in this House announced a few weeks ago that he had reached a reciprocal agreement. However, the minister said there were a number of items of concern to him which still remained unresolved: The very fact that an offender from Ontario is still subject to be thrown into jail and held for ransom while a Quebec driver who offends our legislation is issued with a summons.

Mr. Philips: That isn't true. He loses his plates now under the new legislation. Why don't you read your own legislation? He can have his plates taken away.

Mr. Handleman: The new legislation has not yet taken effect.

Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister of Transportation and Communications to come to grips with this matter forthwith and the first time this ever happens again I suggest that our minister let them know that we won't stand for it, and it's been reported widely in the press.

Mr. Philip: Why don't you learn the facts?

Mr. Warner: You should join the diplomatic corps. You would be a smashing success.

Mr. Handleman: At one time, Mr. Speaker, in order to protect Ontario residents against the sale of uninspected vacation properties in Quebec, it was necessary for this province to send inspectors into that province and, ironically, it was done under the authority of the foreign land sales legislation. That really is ironic when we're trying to keep Quebec non-foreign and yet we use foreign land sales legislation in order to provide some protection to land buyers in Ontario.

Mr. Warner: Maybe you can get posted in the Paris office.

Mr. Handleman: At that time, the Quebec minister refused even to certify that the properties were in accordance with certain standards. He could very easily have stopped this nonsense about going into Quebec to inspect properties, the inspection being required under our act.

It is not unknown for the Quebec government to retaliate against actions taken by the Ontario government which they consider not to be in their interests. As many members know, the Quebec liquor commission has opened a massive bottling plant in Montreal where they import European wines and bottle them under their own labels.

At one time, they asked the Liquor Control Board of Ontario to list those house brands. It has been the policy of this province not to list house brands at all, regardless of where they come from. It had nothing to do with Quebec. The standard is that the vintner's label must appear on the bottle. However, when this policy was conveyed to the liquor commission in Quebec, very coincidentally and very shortly thereafter, the products of two Ontario wineries were delisted in Quebec.

It was coincidental, of course, that both those wineries happened to be the wineries that do not have plants in the province of Quebec. They're not about to make a public complaint and I'm not about to identify them because their view is they don't want to invite further retaliation.

The dairy farmers of eastern Ontario are up in arms. I'm sure many of my colleagues are more knowledgeable in this area than I am. They're concerned about the sales of Quebec powdered milk in eastern Ontario. I've never been a strong supporter of marketing boards or supply management and I don't want anybody to get—

Mr. Warner: It's a free market.

Mr. Handleman: I'm sure that message is quite clear.

Mr. Warner: It is clear.

Mr. Handleman: But there is an agreement designed to bring orderly marketing to a particular industry and that agreement is being unilaterally ignored by one component of the industry at the expense of another. I expect our government to take action in such a way as to protect the residents of this province. I'm sure that other members from eastern Ontario who, again, are more knowledgeable and have a much larger dairy farming constituency, will continue to bring our constituents' complaints to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) with the expectation that he will forcefully carry their message in discussions with both the federal and Quebec authorities.

For quite some time we have had a contract wall between our provinces. Small businesses in Ontario cannot look forward with any degree of confidence to obtaining contracts from school boards, municipal governments, or any activity at all in the province of Quebec which is supported in any way by provincial funding.

I ran across a very short newspaper clipping which reflects this in a short and concise way. It is dealing with the matter involving the Hull Catholic school board which, like school boards everywhere, is mindful of dollars and cents in education. They did what they thought was best for their rate-payers and awarded a lunch milk contract to the lowest bidder. It happened to be Sealtest Dairies of Ottawa. "Oh, no," said the PQ government types in Quebec City. "Have our kids drink foreign milk? Never." They overruled the school board and awarded the bulk of the contract to Chateau Dairy of Buckingham which buys milk from Quebec farmers.

It's the kind of thing that we have. It's insidious, Mr. Speaker. We have complaints from a variety of businesses in eastern Ontario. I'd like to quote briefly from a letter which was sent to the then Minister of Industry and Tourism by Fentiman and Sons Limited, a window contractor well known in the Ottawa area., having been there for many years. Their letter reads in part:

"Approximately three months ago we were invited by CEGEPs, which is the equivalent to our community colleges, in Hull to submit a price for changing over certain windows in a building under their jurisdiction. Prices were submitted and after many hours of discussion with the people from CEGEPs responsible for this project, it was decided by them to cancel the project. The project was cancelled, not because it was over budgeted or for any other reason, but because the low bidder, F. Fentiman and Sons Limited, did not have their head office in the province of Quebec." They went on further to say:

"Our company must now follow their new hiring practices in regards to all construction workers," because, being in the window business, they're considered to be in the construction industry, "which means that people we have trained over the years will probably never be allowed to work in Quebec because they will not have sufficient hours to qualify?" It goes on in that vein.

There are many other instances of this type of thing. It was interesting to note that the Premiers dealt with this problem in their communique as well. I would like to talk just very briefly about it. It's under heading "A-2—government purchasing policy. The Premiers discussed the government sector purchasing policies of their respective provinces, the economic impact of these policies and the way they are perceived by the general public and the private sector."

I don't think there's any mistake in the way they're perceived. They're perceived that there happens to be a loss on the inside door facing Quebec in terms of contracts. You can go through it one way but you can't go through it the other way. That's hardly reciprocity.

The items I've listed indicate quite clearly, to me, anyway, perhaps not to others—that our sense of nationhood, our feeling of togetherness, is being destroyed systematically and continuously and very successfully while we continue in the cause of national unity to deal politely with our friends in Quebec.

Mr. T. P. Reid: But do you feel that pushing from the other side is going to solve anything, Sid?

Mr. Handleman: I think it has to be made clear to our people in eastern Ontario that we disapprove of these actions. We should say that we would very reluctantly take the action which was taken today in the private member's bill introduced by the member for Cornwall. I certainly feel that if we lock the door from our side we will have achieved a de facto separation. I have been criticized—all the members from my area have been criticized—for not speaking out strongly and voicing the views of our constituents in this matter.

When a man is out of a job and he sees somebody from outside taking his job while he has no opportunity to go over and take a job in the other jurisdiction, national unity descends in his list of priorities. I deplore that tendency. I don't think it's right. But it's pretty difficult to tell a man out of work that he should put national unity ahead of putting bread on the table for his family.

I have always felt that one of the tests of a nation is that a resident, whether he's a citizen or a landed immigrant, should be able to get anywhere in that country to seek employment—anywhere. A Newfoundlander should be able to go to Quebec City and seek employment without any bar.

Once that free flow of labour is destroyed, you've destroyed one of the bases of nationhood. That's what's happening in this country today. I think we have to speak out against it. Let the people of Quebec know that we feel this way, that we want them to stay with us—

Mr. T. P. Reid: And they are fair people. It is the government that is doing it.

Mr. Handleman: Exactly. But we have to let them know that their government is systematically doing this with intent. I don't want to be paranoid but there's nothing—

Mr. Samis: They had the same problems with the Liberals.

Mr. Handleman: —accidental about this program that's being undertaken by the Quebec government. I have warned all my colleagues—

Mr. Samis: And the Union Nationale.

Mr. Handleman: —that when Claude Ryan takes over, as he will, I hope, in the very near future, he's going to be tougher to deal with than Mr. Levesque.

Mr. Levesque doesn't want to deal with us. He wants us to get mad. He wants the English separatists in eastern Ontario to say "Go, Quebec. Who cares?" That's what I find frightening; he's being very successful.

Mr. Samis: Your boycott helped his cause, Sidney.

Mr. Handleman: There is one issue discussed by the two Premiers and which was brought up in this House on May 11—

Mr. Germa: You are playing into his hands—redneck Sidney.

Mr. Handleman: —and if it wasn't so tragic it would be comical. That is the long history of pollution treatment on the Ottawa River.

I often wonder how our friends in the media can talk so sincerely about the English and Wabigoon problem which affects a few hundred people, even a few thousand, when what we have are half a million people in eastern Ontario whose quality of life, whose very essence of life, their drinking water, is in danger. That's not trivial. If Mr. Manthorpe thinks so I'm prepared to take him on any day in an argument. That is important: it is critical and it is crucial.

Mr. Warner: Why don't you boycott him too?

Mr. Handleman: Before I came to this Legislature, before I had any thought of coming here, I was somewhat involved in local affairs. I recall in the late 1960s, around 1967 when Mr. Pearson was still the Prime Minister, reading Mr. Robarts on the occasion of his signing a tripartite agreement with Mr. Johnson, the then premier of Quebec, and the Right Honourable Lester Pearson to clean up the Ottawa River.

Four years later, in 1971, the terms of reference were eventually finalized. They are now in written form. Since then we have spent hundreds of millions of dollars in an attempt to clean up half a river. That's quite a trick, if you can do it. In the meantime, 98 per cent of the effluent into the Quebec side of the Ottawa River is raw, untreated sewage. [9:15]

Every time this is brought up in a provincial conference, the minister responsible, whoever he may be—and I'm talking about Victor Goldbloom and on—has said, "Yes, we've got to join in on this," but they haven't got any money. There are other priorities, Expo and quite a few other things that took place. They can't treat the river, one of the great rivers of the world, not a little creek—

Mr. Samis: No better than the St. Lawrence, Sidney.

Mr. Handleman: Your part of the St. Lawrence is looked after.

Mr. Samis: You mean the Quebec side.

Mr. Handleman: Yes. We have this problem and we've got this long history of negotiations. I thought I might take a few clippings of very recent vintage from the two Ottawa papers, because just the reading of the headlines is almost hysterical.

This is from the Citizen of May 3, 1978, "Sewage Treatment a Political Football." From the Citizen on April 22, "Sewage Treatment Plant Delayed Again." On May 9, 1978, "Sewage Plant OK'd." The Ottawa Citizen, editorial: "A scandalous disgrace. That harbinger of spring, the annual bad news about pollution in the Ottawa River has arrived." There we see it again.

May 12, "ORC"—that's Outaouais regional council—"Expects Sewage Plant Start in the Fall." May 12, 1978, by Dan Kearns, a Citizen staff writer, "Sewage Plant Delay Looms." As well the Ottawa Journal, "Pollution's Murky Politics." The citizens on both sides of the Ottawa River did not need to be told what was wrong by a committee of public servants representing three governments. The Ottawa Citizen on May 9, 1978, "Sewage Plants Urged for Ottawa River"—after Mr. Johnson, Mr. Robarts and Mr. Pearson in 1967 agreed that we needed some sewage disposal plants.

On May 11, by Mr. Kearns again, a good reporter who seems to have specialized in this, and it might be a lifetime career for him: "Sewage Treatment Approval Postponed."

Then the report of the tripartite committee, "Quebec Singled out in Report on Ottawa River." Of course, at the request of the government of Quebec, certain deletions were made and questions were asked in this Legislature.

I have received a response from the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McCague) which I will read verbatim, because it is in reply to a question that was asked in this Legislature: "The report originally included a full outline of the terms of reference for the federal-provincial working group." Those were the terms of reference that were finalized in 1971. "In view of the fact the report only deals with the first term of reference, namely an update of pollution control along the Ottawa River, Quebec was reluctant and in fact insisted on deleting reference to the remaining four terms of reference." These are the minister's words. "It appears that the province of Quebec is not prepared to commit itself at this point in time to any additional triparty"—probably meaning tripartite—"review of the Ottawa River."

He goes on to say: "In the summary of findings as well as in the text of the report, Quebec requested deletion of specific dates by which requirements for waste control of the pulp and paper industry are to be met—1978 and 1980 for non-sulphite and sulphite mills respectively. Quebec requested this change in light of the fact that a parliamentary committee had been formed which is in the process of reviewing these dates." These are dates that had been agreed upon.

I suppose the most scary headline of all, on May 10 in the Ottawa Journal, is, "Ottawa River Drinking Water Potential Hazard." I live on the Ottawa River and I was one of those who praised the first ministers for coming to the agreement. It took them four years to finalize the terms of reference. I still held out hope. But when my drinking water and the drinking water of half a million people on the Ontario side of the river is a potential hazard because of lack of action on the part of Quebec, then I say it is time to do more than what the communiqué says, which is that the ministers will meet again and discuss this matter.

Mr. Warner: Sure helps to boycott them.

Mr. Handleman: I have suggested, and I suggest again here tonight, that this has got beyond a joke. We can no longer continue to negotiate this kind of thing. I suggest that since we have no jurisdiction in the province of Quebec, the federal government can build that plant. They can let that contract to an Ontario contractor who was turned down by the Quebec government because he happened to be in Ontario, the low bidder. They can award it to him immediately and deduct the Quebec share of the cost from funds owing to Quebec. If it requires legislation—

Mr. T. P. Reid: What do we do with the Great Lakes, which the Americans are polluting?

Mr. Handleman: My friend can deal with that. I'm talking about my river; the one I live on, the one my constituents live on. Whatever he feels like doing with the United States is his problem.

Mr. Warner: If you think it is your river, go live in it.

Mr. Handleman: If the federal government does not wish to do that, then obviously there is no early solution to the problem. But at the very least—and I know how long these things take—we should launch a civil action against the government of Quebec for damages on the principle, which I think my friends agree with, that the polluter shall pay. There's no question about who's polluting the Ottawa River; it is the government of Quebec.

Mr. Warner: You're a great help to Canadian unity.

Mr. Handleman: Mr. Speaker, I've dealt with these points not at great length; I thought I might take longer than that. But before I concluded I did want to tell the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere that I see no need to apologize either to the members of this assembly, who I don't think were offended—

Mr. Germa: I do.

An hon. member: Who was offended?

Mr. Handleman: On many occasions I have been invited to functions and on many occasions I have turned down the invitation, sometimes because I didn't want to go and sometimes because I was otherwise occupied. I think I've generally told the truth about why I haven't gone, and in this case I told the truth why I wasn't going to go. Despite the statement made by the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere, and I have searched for it, I don't think it even created a ripple in Quebec. If he can show me one Quebec paper that featured my actions of last Tuesday, I would be prepared to apologize to him for saying that there wasn't any such reaction in Quebec.

Mr. Warner: Oh, you would?

Mr. Handleman: They don't care, and it's about time you found out down there in Scarborough-Ellesmere. We live close to the problem—

Mr. Warner: Baloney! You don't understand Quebec and you don't understand how deep the problem is.

Mr. Handleman: I haven't seen it. They don't care.

Mr. Warner: You don't think they care.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Haggerty: The member for Scarborough-Ellesmere has become an expert overnight.

Mr. Handleman: Mr. Levesque himself said many of the things that we dispute here are irrelevant in terms of the national unity debate, and to that extent I think he's right.

I just want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I think I speak for my constituents. The member for Scarborough-Ellesmere may be speaking for his. I suggest he discuss it with them.

Mr. Kerrio: No, he is not. He's speaking for himself.

Mr. Handleman: I want to read a very short portion of a letter I received which I think reflects some of the feeling in my area. It's quite articulate and very well put. It's from a man who is dedicated to the cause of national unity. He says this:

"However much one would wish, one cannot be friends with muggers on the national scene. Those who would clobber the whole country for their own short-run provincial or quasi-national ends, as the Quebec separatists would court us to do. Surely now is the time to spell all this out to the Laurins, the Levesques and all of their kind. Let them all know that we know exactly what they're doing and how they're doing it."

We aren't being taken in by it, Mr. Speaker. I'm not being taken in by it, my constituents aren't, and I hope that the members of this assembly aren't being taken in by the hand of friendship while at the same time they're seeking to destroy this country.

Mr. Warner: You want a new Plains of Abraham. We beat them once; we'll beat them again. Shameful.

Mr. J. Reed: Mr. Speaker, I first of all have to express a debt of gratitude to the nine or 10 members who were courageous enough to stay here and wait.

Mr. Germa: I have been waiting all night for you.

Mr. J. Reed: I realize that the previous speech was most scintillating and energizing, either in a pro or con way, depending on how one viewed the remarks that were made. I will try to follow on without putting too much of a priority on what I know is going on on television tonight and driving members there as the more interesting alternative.

If I may, I would like to deal, in this reply to the budget, on perhaps a little broader base than that of the member for Carleton, who spoke about his own constituency and the people from eastern Ontario; and rightly so, of course, because he is elected by them and serves that constituency.

I would rather spend the time in my capacity as the Energy critic for my party and perhaps try to take the House through what I view as a basic economic issue that we're facing in Ontario; that is, the subject of energy, our energy state at the present time and our energy future. As time has gone on, I've come to believe more and more that one of the links in the chain of our economy in Ontario is our energy—the way we use it and the way we supply it to ourselves. It has been stated many times before that in terms of traditional energy forms the province is quite devoid except for a limited amount of hydraulic power and a certain amount of nuclear power. It has been stated that there is a little bit of lignite in northern Ontario but in the long term that does not represent a very large amount of energy supply. In fact the people of Ontario now import about 80 per cent of their requirements from outside the borders of their province.

What this does is give us a deficit budget position of about $5 billion every year, and it is a tremendous challenge. It is a challenge I believe we have to meet if Ontario is going to maintain its very important part in the industrial life of this country, and I believe it is a challenge that we can meet. There are all sorts of purveyors of doom and gloom in the energy picture. From week to week, we find ourselves dealing with a new challenge and a new revelation and it is very difficult sometimes for those of us who are keenly interested in the subject to get a handle on exactly what is happening. But there are some fundamentals I think we can understand and some directions we can take the province that will provide us with a healthier economy that is going to result in fuller employment and a better life for the people of Ontario.

There are some questions that somehow or other in this new era that has come upon us since 1973—since the Yom Kippur War and the oil embargo and so on—we still haven't asked ourselves in this province to any deep degree. I think that if we ask ourselves the questions and ponder where the answers can come from, it might give us a base or a springboard to start from.

The first question would be what kind of energy do we actually need in Ontario. One of the big mistakes I think we tend to make is that we say a Btu is a Btu is a Btu. It is like a rose is a rose is a rose. It is interesting to point out that in terms of energy consumption that is not the case. The kinds of energy that we utilize go to a different end use and they come from a different source. Each of those has its own translation in terms of the kind of lifestyle it gives us and the kind of utilization we have of it in a different way.

Another question would be who actually requires the energy in Ontario and how much. We know that the householder seems to require a certain amount, and industry requires a certain amount, and so on; but when we stop to think of it, we really haven't rationalized just how much each of us require and who will require what, for what purpose and to what end use.

We are using electricity at the present time to heat homes, to turn wheels and so on. We use natural gas to make electricity. We use all sorts of things and we have never stopped to ask ourselves for what purpose are we using this particular energy? We should ask ourselves for how long we need a particular kind of energy and in the end how much. Our domestic consumption of energy in Ontario has doubled since the late 1960s and yet it has not resulted in any increase in our standard of living. It hasn't improved our economic position. Indeed, the only accomplishment that has been made with it is it has required we pay a larger percentage of our income for energy as the years go on.

We have adopted, in the province of Ontario, a consumptive—perhaps one should use the word “consumption”—philosophy. It is really a consumptive philosophy, because it is a self-defeating kind of thing. We toy with the philosophy that all we have to do is continue to expand our energy systems and they will meet our needs. We continue to believe that what we are consuming we need.

There are some old fallacies which have given us, in the province of Ontario, the dubious record of being the highest per capita consumers of energy in the whole world. It is a very interesting observation. The fallacies go something like this; using less energy is going to mean we are going to suffer from a lower standard of living. That's a philosophy that I think has been ingrained into every one of us. In other words, we parallel a lower standard of living, possibly, with driving in an automobile with a more efficient engine which will get us from point A to point B on half of the Btu's.

Another of the fallacies we deal with would be the huge, capital-intensive projects we are engaged in at the present time in Ontario relieve unemployment. This is a fallacy the Minister of Energy (Mr. Baetz) has alluded to in recent months. It has been his excuse for continuing on an expansion program in Ontario Hydro that is related to the kind of growth that took place in the utility up until about 1974 or 1975, by projecting backwards because that was really the only way a load forecast could be predicted. What we said was and I think the ad is still on television from time to time, it may even be on tonight, traditionally our utility has grown at the rate of seven per cent per year.

Yet when we look at what actually happened in the last year and at the beginning of this year, we find some very startling changes. The growth rate has dropped. It has dropped to a rather startling degree; last year 2.2 per cent in total growth in the system, and this year a real growth of one per cent so far. On a temperature-corrected basis—that is if you consider the fact we had a very cold spring and so on—you could actually say the growth of consumption in the utility had fallen to zero. Yet the government has continued with these capital-intensive, large, centralized projects, because it is said if we don't have them we won't have the employment. What I hope to do tonight is to try to establish, that in my own view, the development of large, centralized energy-producing utility sources in the province of Ontario is not, indeed, employment-producing at all but on the other hand is employment negative.

There is another fallacy we have come to live with regarding our energy consumption. That is when some of us say we should be developing renewable energy resources with at least the equal of the interest, both from a financial viewpoint and in terms of brain-power input and so on, that we have shown in the nuclear program in the past years. The fallacy is that renewable energy technology is not well enough developed. Two years ago, or a year and a half ago, sitting on the select committee on Hydro one heard predictions that renewable energy technology, if applied beginning now, could account for no more than two per cent of the energy requirements of this country, or of North America if you like, by the turn of the century. Another one of the great fallacies.

Let's look at some of these fallacies and these concepts and find out, if we can, or get a bit of an insight, into just what we're dealing with in the province of Ontario; what the potentials are and what challenges lie ahead.

One of the fallacies I alluded to is that renewable energy is not well enough developed and we have to continue to expand this present system. What are renewable energies? We have all heard the term solar energy, and some of us tend to think about solar panels on top of the roof and the retrofit in buildings and so on. But when we take stock of just what we have available to us in terms of what I like to call, instead of solar energy or renewable energy, energy income, it covers a much broader base.

For instance, we have growing in our province a potential from biomass—that's one of the buzz words we learn when we get interested in the subject—which far exceeds the demand for heat that is required by the population of this province, on a renewable basis and on a perpetual basis. There are some who criticize, for instance, the use of forest products or forest waste, or even I suppose the growing of agricultural crops for the use of energy in the future. We've heard some naturalists criticize this concept because they believe we would advocate denuding the province of its forests. Nothing, of course, could be further from the truth. All we're doing is recognizing that the growth caused by the process of photosynthesis, and the sunlight falling on our great province, gives us a certain potential from that area which can be of great benefit.

If we look at it just a little more deeply, without passing on to other areas just yet, we find something else that is very significant in terms of the utilization of biomass. First of all, the competitive nature of the end products of biomass—that is wood, alcohol and so on that can be used as very adaptable, storable energy forms—have as their base a very employment-intensive industry. The harvesting of the product, whatever it is, whether we are going to grow a special crop on the farm and harvest it or whether we're going to take it out of the forest; or whether it becomes part of the mill waste in our lumbering industry—and each of these, of course, has a contribution to make—we find they are labour-intensive.

Another thing we discover about this kind of technology is that while it may be sophisticated to a certain extent, it doesn't have the demand of sophistication that the nuclear program has in Ontario. That means, then, that the opportunity for employment is spread among a much larger body of people. I certainly am not, and most of us certainly are not, nuclear physicists or whatever, nor are we trained to operate the great atomic engines in Ontario, but we can all learn and have the ability to harvest wood products or grow agricultural crops or participate in that kind of thing.

If you look at the economics of that biomass energy, methanol—and I'm glad the Minister of Transportation and Communications has come in on his duty-time tonight, taken time from the the hockey game to come in.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I heard you were speaking. I tried to stay away.

Mr. J. Reed: What we're finding right now is that the cost of production of some of these fuels is on a line which is very close to being competitive with the price of petroleum-based motive power. When we reach that point, we know then that Ontario has an incredibly interesting transportation fuel available to it where the money spent can be turned over inside the borders of the province; and that can amount over a period of time to many billions of dollars.

Of course, we have the direct use of biomass energy which many of us grew up with when we were young people, and that's the burning of wood directly. I had the pleasure of being up in Bobcaygeon a week ago, in the fair riding of Victoria-Haliburton with my colleague the member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Eakins), and we visited a wood-stove manufacturer—

Hon. Mr. Snow: There's a lot of biomass from there.

Mr. J. Reed: —who is not manufacturing the kind of wood stoves that we thought of in the old days, the thing that we had to stoke up every three or four hours or it would go out, and whose heat rose and fell depending on how we managed the draft.

Hon. Mr. Snow: It used to get damn cold in the morning.

Mr. J. Reed: Well these stoves don't get cold in the morning, I must inform the minister, because wood-burning technology has taken on a whole new significance.

The interesting part of it is that the markets for these wood-burning products are widespread across North America now. We have a whole new technology developing in the use of that biomass.

As the years go by, within the next eight or 10 years, with or without the help from any government, that is going to take over, perhaps a small but certainly a significant amount of our low-temperature requirement in the rural areas.

On that trip I was also intrigued to see the first really competitive solar-heated greenhouse industry in North America.

Mr. Gaunt: It makes the waste heat concept obsolete, doesn't it?

Mr. J. Reed: It not only makes the waste heat concept for use in greenhouses obsolete, but it makes the whole business of greenhouse growing so much more flexible than it has ever been before and it means that these greenhouses are consuming only about five per cent of the added energy of the traditional greenhouse.

The frustrating part for the manufacturer, of course, is that the government of Ontario does not see fit to help with the research and development of this great industry.

Mr. Cureatz: What about Durham East?

Mr. J. Reed: If we talk about the employment potential in energy, we have to look at the employment potential for the manufacturer of this new technology in greenhouse development as one example.

If we were to relate the comparative energy consumption between the traditional greenhouse that we have at the present time and, say a province or a continent of North America that would gradually convert to this kind of technology, the impact on our energy consumption suddenly becomes enormous and it is a very significant breakthrough.

I might add that Victoria-Haliburton, Lindsay and Ontario can be proud that this technology is well ahead of any of its competitors, certainly across North America. So we know that from an employment point of view, renewable energy really does have a place.

It is also interesting to know, when we do the numbers on the cost, that the time is quickly approaching when Ontario will be in a position to be able to raise all of its own vegetable products on a year-round basis and they will be competitive with products we import, as we do at the present time, from California and Mexico and so on. It also will enable us to grow some of these vegetable products in the mid-north and in the farther north because, as many of us know, while we don't have as high an ambient temperature up there we do have much more sunlight in some areas than we do here. The sunlight, the insolation if you like, is greater in northern Ontario than it is in southern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Snow: There are pretty long nights up there.

Mr. Eakins: Great nights in Lindsay.

Mr. J. Reed: There's another area that we pay very little attention to and—

Hon. Mr. Snow: I didn't know that Lindsay was in the north.

Mr. J. Reed: —that is what I suppose I like to call end-use conservation.

As the members know, there are two kinds of conservation when it comes to energy consumption. One is the conservation of quantity. That's where we use less; where the little dog on television says turn it off, and so on—the message from your Hydro. That's quantitative conservation and that's the kind all of us can practice very easily in Ontario, because we have so much to practice with, being the biggest wasters of energy in the world.

It's perhaps no wonder that our utility growth has slowed down naturally, as a result of a number of factors; the economic downturn in the province, perhaps a certain downturn in the growth in population, but also the fact that by simply becoming a little more conscious of energy conservation we have had a significant impact on the growth of our utility.

But there's another kind of conservation. This is the end-use conservation, or if you like the qualitative conservation, Mr. Speaker. It's the kind of conservation that has probably more potential for realization, more potential for actual reduction in energy consumption than the other kind of conservation.

When I think of it I think of the fact that Ontario Hydro, for instance, is now about 70 per cent a thermal system. That is, about 70 per cent of the power generated is generated by the production of heat and the conversion of heat into steam. What happens during that conversion is that two thirds of the energy that is put into the system is simply delivered into the biosphere, or into our environment, without doing any work. In the process we call it cooling water and—

Hon. Mr. Snow: I thought it was the troposphere.

Mr. J. Reed: It's the biosphere, and perhaps the minister might make himself familiar with some of these terms as we go along.

Hon. Mr. Snow: The troposphere goes up to 39,000 feet.

Mr. J. Reed: This is an educational speech as well as for the record and I'm trying to do my best for the minister.

Mr. Eakins: An excellent speech.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Everything under 39,000 feet is the troposphere.

Mr. J. Reed: But with that 70 per cent that is converted thermally, our utility puts two thirds of the energy that it consumes in the production of that electricity into the biosphere as waste water.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I think it's the troposphere.

Mr. J. Reed: That means for every 10,000 Btu—or let's say to make it simpler, for every three shovelful of coal that goes into the furnace, the equivalent of only one shovelful comes down the line in the form of electricity and the heat from the other two shovelful goes into the Great Lakes.

In my mind, that is a potential for tremendous conservation. The challenge is, how do we accomplish it? Do we accomplish it by using the waste heat? That's perhaps one way. But one of the other ways of accomplishing that conservation is not by using that kind of utility at all.

I wonder if any of us has considered that if we just used electricity to its highest end use, and applied the other available energy forms for those end uses for which electricity was not needed, what the outcome would be.

Some of the most prominent people in the world who have studied this subject have told us that electricity used to turn a wheel or to turn a motor is a very high end use. They've told us that electricity is necessary in electronics. Electricity in lighting is a very high end use. Electricity to produce high temperature heat is also, surprising to me, a very high end use; but nonetheless, it is.

Where do we use a lot of our electrical energy? A tremendous amount is used to produce low-temperature heat. That is one of the worst end uses to which we can put this high-grade form of energy. As a matter of fact, Amery B. Lovans has told us that if we used electricity exclusively to its highest end use and chose the other forms to their highest end use, our consumption of electricity would drop by 90 per cent. It's quite an interesting observation. We know that in the real world and in the practical world that bottom line is probably not possible. But we know it's a goal we can strive towards; and we know that considering where we are and where we can go, the opportunities are tremendous.

When we go back and ask to what end use are we going to put these energies, it becomes very interesting when we reconsider the potential for the soft technologies. I mentioned one of them, the biomass. We have mentioned solar energy. We can mention, probably, the potential for the remaining small potential for hydraulic power that is available in the province of Ontario. I know I've been accused by certain people of wanting to dam up every stream and extract power from heads as low as three feet. The truth is that the application of small hydraulic power and its conversion to that great form of energy is a very important contribution in the province of Ontario.

If we accept that, if we know that if we're going to become self-sufficient in energy in Ontario we've got to go in that direction, if we know that is the ultimate down the line; the challenge then becomes how to undergo the transition. I would submit to this House that one of the things we do not need to do, that we should no longer be doing, is simply trying to amplify our existing hard energy systems.

In terms of our electrical utilities, we're well overbuilt. As of right now, our thermal system is overbuilt about 49 per cent. At the rate construction is going, our overbuilding, if the growth continues on a pattern similar to what it has been in the last few years, we will have an overbuild of about 60 per cent or so by 1985. One wonders if the people who pay for that electricity can stand the gaff. One also wonders if we're not committing ourselves to one of the great dinosaurs of our age.

The challenge is what do we do in terms of the transition; how do we get from here to there if we accept the fact that there is the place we have to be? I think even the Minister of Energy has accepted the fact that we are going to leave the era of hard technology and probably move toward the era of soft technology, but he projects it over a period of half a century.

One wonders why the ministry and all the brains behind the ministry would take such a very narrow and protracted view of the future, first of all, in order to convert a megawatt of consumption from one form to another form—for instance, from the hard nuclear form to a solar form in terms of a solar greenhouse and so on—is very much more quickly done in the soft energy term. It takes us now about 15 years to build a nuclear power plant from the time of conception to when the system is on line.

I would submit that 3,000 or 4,000 megawatts of equivalent power could be produced through soft paths in a very few years—in two, three, four or perhaps five years. When one does the costing of the relative expense and considers the capital demand and when the interest clock begins to go around and so on, it seems to me to be rather obvious that we must proceed down that path as thoroughly and as quickly as possible.

There are some very interesting side effects that can occur when we go down that path. First of all, we raise the potential for employment very markedly by transferring capital out of a potential nuclear growth or a large centralized growth into a more decentralized soft energy path. Indeed, it has been stated, and I think it's reasonably correct, that a job can be produced with about 10 per cent of the investment on a soft energy path as it can on the nuclear program; it works out to something like $25,000 per job versus about $250,000 per job in the nuclear area.

We can start with a program of very simple things. For instance, the potential of insulation alone in Ontario equates to roughly 4,000 megawatts of consumption. Another fallacy is that to undertake an insulation program is somehow our response to freezing in the dark as an alternative. That's a lot of nonsense. As a matter of fact, insulation programs are so successful that many of the American utilities, which have to operate at a profit and pay stockholders, and which pay taxes and so on, are undertaking insulation programs as part of their operations because they darn well make more money for the utility. There is more money in insulating a megawatt of electricity than there is in building a megawatt of generating capacity.

The actual capital requirement for insulating a megawatt of electricity, according to the provincial Ministry of Energy in its book Turn on the Sun, is roughly 50 per cent of that for building a megawatt of generating capacity. That means we have the potential in Ontario, with a concerted insulation program, of saving the equivalent of 25 per cent more than one Darlington at about half of the capital cost.

The other side effect is that we diversify our energy load demand in such a way that we don't rely as much anymore on the large centralized utility. The same can be said, I think, for virtually every kind of soft energy path. If we build a greenhouse, which we have the technology to do, that will use only fifteen per cent of the energy that was required prior, that means our reliance on the utility becomes markedly less. This in turn has an effect on improving our energy and employment security in this province and makes us much freer of and much less dependent on Big Brother. I hope by that to explain that I believe the transition can be accomplished more quickly than even the building of large-scale centralized nuclear plants.

Of course, as we go into the technology more deeply and as we begin the transition, we find that we develop more rapidly.

As a result I have in the last few months placed on the order paper a number of resolutions that I would like to read into the record tonight. They all relate to what I believe is that kind of transitional period we should get on with as quickly as possible.

Mr. Deans: Why don't you read Conway's as well?

Mr. J. Reed: The first one is that all of Hydro's future thermal expansion be tied to the utilization of cooling water. What that means—and I think it has some rather broad ramifications—is that in order for the cooling water to be utilized from the utility, it's going to mean that the utility will have to locate its facility in proximity to the point of utilization of that cooling water.

Mr. Gaunt: The government is just trying to bail out some of those defeated Tory candidates.

Mr. J. Reed: It seems rather ludicrous to me that the government would choose a site like Bruce, for instance, to build, already in the works, 6,000 megawatts—

Mr. Hodgson: Don't agree with you on that.

Mr. J. Reed: —of nuclear power where it is, incidentally, potentially spewing 12,000 megawatts into Lake Huron and not really being able to utilize that cooling water.

It's also interesting that if a resolution like this follows through, it would mean that the technology and the design of that nuclear reactor should be such that there would be a higher temperature discharge than there is at the present time; although I do know that by the use of heat pumps, or whatever, we can recover it, it could be done for much less cost.

There's nothing new or radical about that kind of idea. It's being used in Europe and has been used in those countries for many years, countries that have had to come to terms with the thermal problem from the beginning of their generating careers. We've had the Rolls-Royce of electric power generating in Ontario with our hydraulic power; we've gone on since then and tried to treat the thermal generation of that power in the same way that we treated the hydraulic, and they just don't compare. We've got to learn to use as much of the energy we put into the system as possible.

The second resolution I put in was that all homes in Ontario should be energy rated. When we first considered this as something to raise the consciousness of each individual consumer of electricity, I really thought of it as being something that was perhaps complicated and involved. I can't take the credit for this as being anything new. I understand Prince Edward Island has been doing it quite successfully for a couple of years. It's simply based on the Btu consumption that each individual home has had over the prior three years.

That does give the incentive to the home owner, in terms of the value of his home, to upgrade or reduce the amount of consumption per cubic foot, and that energy rating can then be tied to a listing if one is selling one's house. It can also be used by the purchaser when they're deciding how much they're going to pay for it. I think it's a rather valid resolution.

The third resolution we brought in was that in the opinion of this House time-of-day pricing should be incorporated into any rate structure changes by Ontario Hydro. As most of us here know, electric power is not purchased on a straight line. It's purchased through two peak periods that occur every day. We know now that every percentage point we can take off the consumption peak can save the people of Ontario $200 million in capital costs.

One of the ways that we can reduce the peak—I really have to say this is only one of the ways—is by incentive pricing. If we can provide enough incentive during those peak times so that people will see that it is to their advantage to store their energy over those times, whether it is through larger hot water heaters that are controlled to go off and on and so on, or whether it is home heating with built-in storage, I think it is immaterial. The fact is that if we can provide that kind of incentive, it will certainly happen.

We have presented a resolution that says the government should attach at least equal importance to the development of renewable resource technology in Ontario as it has to the development of nuclear power. The salesmen of nuclear power tell us that it is the only way to go. We have been getting quite a bit of it, especially if one is an energy critic or involved in debate with those people who are involved directly in nuclear technology.

It seems to me—perhaps I said this before in the House—that if the province had attached as much importance to renewable energy technology as it has to nuclear technology the nuclear debate would be academic. We would probably have some of it—it would take its rightful place in the province—but it would be in no danger of becoming Ontario's sole energy destiny.

We have to be very careful in this regard that the pressures to continue to expand and develop and participate in this nuclear proliferation do not overcome what we know, in the long run, is going to be the ultimate destiny of Ontario and for the world so far as that goes. That is the utilization of our energy income rather than our energy capital.

I brought in this next resolution because I felt that it was time the government undertake to lead the way. One of the very frustrating things about being down here is to see that the government talks a good line a lot of the time but never seems to follow through. We have great, grandiose statements from time to time connected with all sorts of things, I think it was the Minister of the Environment some years ago, the new Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman), who talked about resource recovery systems for Ontario. I think that was 1973, yet there isn't one now operating in an Ontario municipality successfully that I know of. So there is a good line talked.

We talk about the necessity to conserve energy and yet our building here doesn't have a storm window on it. If you look at the size of the windows—I haven't undertaken to calculate the kind of losses that take place every winter here, but it would be interesting to know just what could be saved if there were storm windows at Queen's Park. If you have an answer, Mr. Speaker, I would appreciate it.

Mr. Ruston: The hot air has to get out though.

Mr. J. Reed: My colleague talks about the hot air getting out, but one of the things we can do at Queen's Park is to save the hot air, we just might be able to heat the whole place. Thus this resolution calls for the installation of storm windows at Queen's Park so when anyone comes here and visits this building they will know the government is serious about energy conservation.

When I was in Winnipeg two years ago I was interested to see that the provincial government was installing solar water heaters on legislative buildings simply for the purpose of letting people know that they were interested in the subject. They were doing text work with it; it wasn't just a publicity stunt. It was, I thought, a very positive thing.

I went on to suggest in this resolution that the government also carefully examine all the costs in heating and cooling public buildings by solar means, and that a timetable be set to build all new buildings with solar orientation and to retrofit present structures for solar energy as it becomes economically feasible.

My colleague is just showing me a copy of the Toronto Sun which shows two beautiful ladies on the front page making very good use of solar energy—of course, this is the time of year for it. But the kind that I am advocating is also useful in the middle of winter.

We think that this kind of thrust on the part of the government could be an example to the rest of the citizens—to people who design homes, who design buildings—to get on with the job. Because the numbers are there. All we need is a little punch in the right direction.

The final part of my resolution deals with the obvious outcome of these kinds of initiatives; and that is, if you are going to utilize the sun you've got to have access to it, Mr. Speaker. So the resolution calls for the government to proceed immediately with the right legislation. The sun right, or the right to sunshine and sunlight, is traditional in British law. It was part of our law here in the city of Toronto until I believe 1885, when I suppose the pressures of the day and the high-rises of the day seemed to necessitate that sun-right laws be abandoned, or obliterated from the books.

If one goes to Tokyo and some other places around the world, one finds that even tall buildings have incorporated into their design shapes that allow the sun to shine on the fellow next door, so that he will have access to sunlight, too. The importance of having that access is accepted in most parts of the world. As usual, of course, especially with the modern-day government, Ontario may be the last to take up these challenges and deal with them. But we have to start in this direction.

The reason I injected this subject matter into the budget debate tonight is because I do believe that the development of our energy future in Ontario can have its base in economics; and if we do it in the proper way and in the proper direction it can be a very economically sound experience. It can result in much fuller employment than we have at the present time. It can result in a much wiser use of the energy resources at our disposal now. It can also give us the capability and the technology to take our rightful place in the world in terms of the ultimate use of energy income devices, and give Ontario its share of that kind of potential market.

As you know Mr. Speaker, the market in Ontario is dependent very much on export. We've depended on it since Ontario first became an industrial province and this is one way, through our energy utilization, that we can—

[10:15]

Mr. Haggerty: Export our natural resources, export our energy and export jobs.

Mr. J. Reed:—export our renewable resources and take our place and be recognized as being in the lead in renewable resource development around the world.

Mr. Foulds: I move the adjournment of the debate, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: If there are no other speakers—

Mr. J. Reed: Jack is going to speak.

Mr. Johnson: I'm sorry to hold the members up tonight. I realize they want to see the rest of the hockey game, but the score is four to one.

Mr. Kerrio: In no way are you holding us up.

Mr. Ruston: We're here to work.

Mr. Kerrio: We're here to listen. As long as you give us the score.

Mr. Foulds: It's okay. We'll just call a quorum, Jack.

Mr. Johnson: I had quite a few pages here tonight that I'll delete due to the lateness of the hour. I would like to mention a few things briefly and one point in detail. I did want to discuss our unemployment problem, the confrontation that seems to exist between business, labour and government, the reassessment of our expectations for youth and the tremendous need to improve our apprenticeship program, the need to preserve our agricultural community and the proposition that farmers deserve a fair return on the goods they produce.

Mr. Ziembra: Where do you stand on all those positions?

Mr. Johnson: I'll forgo that tonight and possibly speak about it at some future date, but I would like to dwell on one program. I would urge the government to consider it. It's an expansion of the farm vacation program.

The government's current involvement in this program consists of the distribution of some 1,000 pamphlets. The program has two purposes. First, it provides the urban dweller with an opportunity to vacation in rural communities and to acquaint himself and his family with life on the farm. Secondly, it provides an additional revenue to the farmer. This type of program is currently being carried on in Prince Edward Island where some 90 farmers participate in it. There was an article in the Saturday edition of the Toronto Star two weeks ago explaining the program, and it mentioned that was attracting guests from Europe, the United States, Japan and Indonesia. Similar results might be achieved if the government, on an experimental basis, provided long-term, low-interest loans for building accommodation for farmers wanting to participate in this program. This would benefit the farming community in two ways.

First, it would provide the farmer with an additional income on the farm rather than having him work in urban centres. If he needs an additional income, this would be one way of achieving it without his leaving the farm. Secondly, it would provide another market for the goods sold in the smaller communities. In addition to these factors, a week or two of vacation on the farm would help urban families understand the challenges that face the rural communities and, I might add, the joy of rural life.

I would also add that the purpose of the program would not be to turn a farm away from agriculture. As a matter of fact, it's the reverse. Its primary purpose is to provide an opportunity for urban families to gain an understanding of farming as a day-to-day business. In addition, I would emphasize again that the purpose of the program is to supplement the farm income, not to replace it.

Any time there is a question of priority between agriculture and recreation, we would surely all agree that we have more land suitable for recreation than for agriculture. Therefore, the priority must go to agriculture. I'm not promoting a farm vacation program at the expense of agricultural land, but indeed the opposite. It would be my hope that the young farmers and farmers on marginal land or operating on a very tight budget would be able to make extra income, thus making their farming operations more viable.

At the present time, if the farmer does not have sufficient resources to buy more land to enlarge his holdings, to buy better equipment, to improve his operation, to buy more stock to increase his profits, he is forced to take a second job and work off the farm. Under this farm vacation program, that meant to improve his operation, to buy more or three small cottages or cabins, a maximum of possibly five, depending on the location and his potential ability to handle the operation. In five or six years he could sell or transfer his operation to another farmer and the cycle could start again.

We have a type of farm vacation program in existence in Ontario today but there are fewer than 30 farmers in the program. They operate on a very modest budget and receive very little recognition or encouragement. They receive some support from both the federal and provincial governments but not enough from either.

In 1976 I was in Prince Edward Island and met with the Minister of Tourism; we discussed that province's program and I was told that several years ago it was not meeting with much success. They decided on a drastic policy. They prepared a questionnaire and asked farmers and tourists why the program was not working. The answer came back that the people involved, both the farmers and the tourists, wished to have some privacy. In many cases they did not feel comfortable sharing the same home.

Therefore, Prince Edward Island came up with the idea of separate, small cottages or cabins adjacent or close to the farmer's home. This worked and the program is now extremely successful. That is why I propose small, self-contained one- or two-bedroom portable cabins or cottages. They would have a Franklin stove or fireplace, heating and cooking facilities and be geared to family vacations. They must be portable so they can be moved from one farm to another or sold to private individuals to recoup the cost. They must be winterized so that the program can be extended beyond the summer months. There are many families who would like inexpensive winter vacations as well as summer vacations in Ontario if accommodations were available.

These cottages or cabins would be constructed on an assembly-line basis, identical one- or two-bedroom units. They could be tendered out to private enterprise or, better still, they could be built in our Correctional Services institutions; for example, the Guelph training centre.

I am sure the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Drea) could make use of such a program. In fact, I discussed it with the minister today and he offered his fullest support to the province.

This would create a job training program for these unfortunate young men. They would receive beneficial training as carpenters, a trade they might continue to pursue in the future. They would provide inexpensive units that could be purchased by the Ministry of Industry and Tourism and leased to the farmers engaged in this program.

Mr. Foulds: Undercutting free enterprise.

Mr. Kerrio: I thought you were a free-enterpriser?

Mr. Johnson: I am.

Mr. Kerrio: But you're going to have the state build everything.

Mr. Johnson: It would be hoped that after the first successful year's operation the farmer would purchase the units and perhaps add one or two more. The farmer's wife could provide some meals, if not all, sell some made-at-home produce, and provide employment for some of their neighbours, thus contributing to the general prosperity of the operation.

Mr. Foulds: Sounds like a socialist scheme to me.

Mr. Johnson: To be successful it would have to be an operating farm—naturally not a specialized operation like a dairy farm, but nevertheless an operating farm.

I would propose that my riding of Wellington-Dufferin-Peel be used as a pilot project. My riding is nearly as large geographically and in population as Prince Edward Island and could support 40 or 50 farm vacation businesses.

Within a two-hour drive, 100 miles, there are nearly four million people living in large urban areas in Ontario plus another 1.5 million in Buffalo.

Within one day's drive, 400 miles, there are approximately 20 million living in large urban centres; and this does not include Chicago, Cincinnati, Philadelphia, New York or Boston, which are not far outside this range—a potential 50 million customers for this farm vacation program.

When Canada faces a deficit of between $1 billion and $2 billion in tourist trade, any tourist vacation program deserves a trial period. The federal government asked people not to vacation in the south this winter and will likely try to entice the tourists not to travel to Europe this summer, but many will; and this is quite understandable.

But how about providing an alternative, especially for the young families with limited incomes and small children? Why not a family-plan vacation in Ontario, in Wellington-Dufferin-Peel? We're only an hour from the beaches of Georgian Bay, Lake Huron or Lake Ontario, an hour from the major Ontario settings, with dozens of arenas, curling clubs, swimming pools, golf courses, tennis courts, ball parks. We have the headwaters of several major trout streams and many small fishing lakes. We have the scenery that will match any in Ontario, the Elora Gorge, the Luther Marsh, the Caledon Hills, beautiful towns and villages and the friendliest people in the world. Come back to the land, back to the farm, back to rural Ontario and visit us in God's country.

Perhaps I'm a dreamer. Perhaps it won't work. Perhaps this farm vacation program is not feasible, but surely it has merit enough for us to pursue it, to investigate the possibilities and, indeed, to set up a pilot project. If it is successful in my riding it could be successful in many ridings across our fair province. Perhaps we can experiment in other ridings as well. I would encourage them to participate.

The Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Rhodes) has indicated his interest in this program. His ministry has been most co-operative, but to make this program a success we need the assistance, the advice and the co-operation of all members in all parties in the House. I hope the members would at least give serious consideration to these proposals.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, in my speech tonight I had intended to emphasize the need for business, labour and government to co-operate with one another to resolve our economic difficulties. I intended to emphasize the need for these sectors of the public to re-evaluate their expectations in terms of what they expect from one another and from society as a whole.

Expectations are a very precarious commodity. We all want a comfortable and prosperous life within the communities in which we live. But the time has come to establish priorities for ourselves as individuals and for society as a whole. Our expectations must be based on a careful assessment of what we want and what we can afford.

If we want a community free from crime and tension, for instance, then we must be prepared to support the fine efforts of our police departments who contribute so much to our society. All too often we expect perfection from our law enforcement agencies and when we find a flaw we dwell on it. Instead, we should remember their efforts and the dangers they face to protect us from those who threaten our property, families and way of life. Thus, our expectations must be realistic, whether it be in what we expect from the police, from government, business and labour or from society and the economy as a whole.

On motion by Mr. Johnson, the debate was adjourned.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Brunelle, the House adjourned at 10:20 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, MAY 26, 1978

The House met at 10:02 a.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY SCULPTURE CONFERENCE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform the honourable members that the 10th International Sculpture Conference is to be held at York University from May 31 to June 3. This year, 1978, is the biennial year of this major art congress, whose honorary chairman is Henry Moore. I am delighted that Toronto has been chosen as the host city, doubly so as this is the first time that the conference has been held in Canada.

The theme of the conference is Sculpture Today. Since preparations for it began two years ago, members of my ministry and its agencies have been extensively involved in the planning and co-ordination of a rich variety of international programs and exhibitions. The four-day conference will bring together over 1,200 sculptors and related experts from Canada, the United States, and 34 foreign countries to explore the full spectrum of sculpture today in a program of workshops, panel discussions and seminars to be conducted by over 150 world-renowned experts.

As part of the planned city-wide celebrations, the works of Canadian and international artists will be on display at the Art Gallery of Ontario, York University Galleries, the Toronto-Dominion Centre, the Ontario College of Art, Harbourfront and McMichael Gallery at Kleinburg as well as private galleries throughout the city.

Of special interest to the honourable members will be an exhibition of the works of 75 Canadian sculptors at the Macdonald Gallery here at Queen's Park. This show is sponsored by the Sculptor's Society of Canada in honour of their 50th anniversary. The cities of Dundas, Hamilton, Kingston and Ottawa are also participating with special shows and events.

The conference has the endorsement of the three levels of government, with funding by the Ministry of Culture and Recreation through a Wintario grant, Ontario Arts Council, Canada Council and Metropolitan Toronto. I know that the honourable members and indeed all the people of the province will join with me in extending a warm and hospitable welcome to this world community of artists, and that everyone will enjoy the aesthetic pleasures and educational values of this multinational celebration of sculpture and sculpture.

ORAL QUESTIONS

WASTE DISPOSAL

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. This has to do with the report that the ministry will be turning down the proposed Nanticoke waste disposal site for liquid industrial wastes. I trust the report is true because we don't think that's the proper place for the waste.

Can the minister say, given the rejection of this scheme, what policy is now going to be followed at long last by his ministry to deal with the enormous problem of liquid industrial waste in Ontario? Are we merely to save it in gallon containers? Are we merely to hope that unscrupulous people don't dump it down the sewer? What policy is going to be followed from now on with regard to liquid industrial waste?

Hon. Mr. McCague: First, there was an announcement that the director of environmental approvals had turned down the Nanticoke site. I think the Leader of the Opposition is aware of that. We are hoping that municipalities and industry will solve some of these liquid industrial waste problems.

Mrs. Campbell: That's right.

Hon. Mr. McCague: As the honourable member knows, we are having a hearing on the burning of PCB-contaminated materials at St. Lawrence Cement which we are satisfied, as a ministry, is a sensible way of disposing of them. There is solidification at the Ottawa Street site in Hamilton. We will be looking at deep-well disposal. There are a couple of areas in the province where it is felt that that can be done successfully, based on information we have and the results of a couple of sites in the United States.

Mr. S. Smith: Dealing first of all with the Nanticoke matter itself; is the article in the newspaper correct, to the minister's knowledge, that Mr. Drew and the Nanticoke company spent $125,000 on various fees and so forth? If so, did that money come from the Ontario Development Corporation loan of $500,000 which was made to the Nanticoke company? If so, can we be told whether the minister has any understanding of what security there is for that loan since I gather it was originally going to be a second mortgage, and I would like to know, a second mortgage on what? The company has no other assets.

Hon. Mr. McCague: I have no information as to the amount which was spent by the firm, nor do I have any knowledge of where the money that they did spend came from.

Mr. Cassidy: In view of the fact that there is still no space where some of the toxic wastes can be legally disposed of, can the minister say what steps are being taken to ensure that those toxic wastes are put into storage and are not dumped illegally into water or sewage systems across the province?

Hon. Mr. McCague: We have no knowledge of them being illegally dumped into water courses around the province. There has been a case or two where these substances have shown up in creeks. We don't know how they got there. We are trying to police it to the best of our ability. The honourable member may be referring to what is referred to as "midnight callers." We will try our best to catch them, but some get away from time to time, as you well know.

Mr. S. Smith: Would the minister be good enough to check with the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Rhodes) and report at some later date on the status of that ODC loan. It seems to have gone to Nanticoke Waste Management which will now presumably be repaid, or won't be. I don't know, but could the minister check on that?

Secondly, could the minister please elaborate on what he means when he says this problem of liquid waste management will have to be solved by the municipalities and the industries? What does the minister expect the municipalities of Ontario to do? What is his ministry prepared to do to assist them in this regard, or coerce them or help them or whatever, so that we have some policy to deal with liquid industrial waste?

Hon. Mr. McCague: In answer to the first question, I think it would be more appropriate if the honourable member were to ask the Minister of Industry and Tourism to get the details on that question for him.

On the second part, as the member knows, Metropolitan Toronto is one of the greatest producers of liquid industrial waste and there is a committee of my ministry and Metro working on solutions to this problem.

One thing I didn't mention is they are attempting to outfit the sewage disposal plant that is going to be surplus in Durham region for the treatment of waste. We are helping every municipality in the province with the latest technology, which isn't as good as we would like at this point, but on the basis of what we know and what the Americans know, we are trying to assist them to come up with solutions to this problem.

There have been some major advances. We now know that PCBs can be destroyed successfully by high heat, and they are making advances from day to day on solidification, as the honourable member knows.

Ms. Bryden: Now that the Nanticoke project has been turned down, does the minister still hold to the view that he gave in the House and in a speech recently, that the problem of waste disposal should be left to the private sector, or is he prepared to bring in a plan for government action beyond pilot projects in this field?

Hon. Mr. McCague: We still feel it would best be solved by private enterprise.

Mr. Gaunt: What additional incentive is the minister prepared to give industry to help them cope with this very serious problem, in view of the fact that D and D Disposal allegedly spent about $125,000 to promote their project at Nanticoke only to have it turned down? Would the minister not assume that other industries throughout the province would be discouraged in trying to come to grips with this problem, particularly if they have to put up any of their own money?

Hon. Mr. McCague: That may be so. As I said before, we are willing to assist them with the best technology we are aware of. We haven't had any proposals that I am aware of from any particular industry for assistance of any type, and if we received that, we would certainly look at it.

HEALTH RECORDS

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations: Can the minister tell us how he reacts to the charges by some of the witnesses in front of the Krever inquiry that the "real culprits" who are hiring investigators to obtain confidential medical information, sometimes by very questionable and possibly illegal means, that the real culprits are the insurance companies? What action can we expect from his ministry as far as activities of insurance companies to hire investigators to obtain this type of information by these means are concerned?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course, those were accusations made by some people, as I understand it, who were involved in getting the information. At the conclusion of that inquiry, if it turns out that insurance companies are the real culprits or if they're just one of the culprits, if they are at all involved in specifically asking for, seeking or knowing they were going to receive any of that information improperly, then I can assure the House that we'll have the insurance companies in and take all action appropriate.

Mr. S. Smith: Can the minister tell this House whether the ministry has ever received information which suggested that insurance companies were engaging investigators improperly to obtain confidential medical information? If so, what did the ministry do about it? Pending the final results of the Krever inquiry, does the minister not think that it might be appropriate to call the insurance companies together now to inform them that certain practices are contrary to the law and to caution them against engaging in such improper practices?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The insurance companies are aware that if they are at all implicated in that, it is an improper practice and there has been no shortage of publicity on the matter. We will be taking steps to confirm this in whatever way is appropriate. What was the first part of the question?

Mr. S. Smith: Did the ministry ever receive any information?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, I'm sorry. Last year I think we had just one instance reported to us where there was not an insurance company involved but only the adjuster. That adjuster was called in and a long discussion ensued whereby it was made pretty clear to that adjuster that his licence might well be withdrawn if that activity continued. That was, I must report, before I assumed this ministry.

As I understand it, there have been no further incidents reported either with regard to that adjuster or insurance companies or other adjusters from that date until the date at which this matter was brought up last week at the inquiry.

Mr. Cassidy: Can the minister, since it is investigators who often carry out these investigations on behalf of insurance companies, give an assurance to the House that the government intends to review with investigators and investigation firms and the techniques they use in order to stop the practice of pretext investigation in order to get at confidential data which those investigators should not be allowed to have access to?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I can assure the House that the government as a whole will react appropriate to the recommendations made out of that inquiry or any conclusions that we may draw as a result of that inquiry. The investigating firms, I think, would properly fall under one of my colleagues, not under my ministry.

But I can give this absolute assurance to the House: to the extent that any actions emanating out of my ministry by way of the insurance companies, their adjusters, or what those insurance companies or adjusters are seeking by way of information, or the methods that they are using to seek or obtain that information, we will come down hard and we will react quickly.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, and this is supplementary to the information the minister has kindly given us: Concerning the one case of an adjuster who, prior to this minister assuming his present post, was dealt with by the ministry, can the minister amplify this at all? Can he give us a report on that case or table it in the House? Can he tell us whether this is a case where the adjuster got the information himself or via an investigation agency or investigator of some kind?

Can he also tell us whether this information, this breach of confidentiality, was reported to the Minister of Health, who apparently as recently as the discussion we had regarding confidentiality some months ago knew of no such breaches of confidentiality in the medical system? If investigators were involved, can the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations table a report, and did the Minister of Health hear about it? What further information can the minister give us?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The matter specifically came to the attention of the ministry in June 1977, almost a year ago, in the form of a complaint. The adjuster was cautioned at that time, as I have indicated, to make sure that proper written authorization is obtained from a patient before any medical information is requested.

We turned the complaint over to the royal commission, upon its being set up. As I say, the adjuster was cautioned and this was reported to his solicitor on June 23, 1977. That information was turned over to the royal commission and I presume it will be dealing further with this specific incident and the practice.

Mr. Swart: I wonder if the minister is aware of a Medical Information Bureau disclosure notice which is sent out to at least some policy holders of the insurance company by the Manufacturers Life Insurance Company? I quote as follows two or three sentences from this notice:

"Information given in the application will be treated as confidential. The Manufacturers Life Insurance Company may, however, make a brief report to the Medical Information Bureau, a non-profit membership organization of life insurance companies which operates an information exchange on behalf of its members. If you apply to another member insurance company for life or health insurance coverage, or a claim for benefits is submitted to such a company, the bureau upon request will supply that company with the information in its file."

Is the minister aware of this Medical Information Bureau? Has he made any request to them or done any investigation to see whether they have information which is being turned over to other insurance companies but which should not be supplied to them?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Obviously, I am not aware of all the forms used by all the insurance companies throughout the province. I am not sure, from the member's quick reading of that statement, that it implies or permits the transmission of any information obtained illegally out of OHIP files.

Mr. Swart: Are you aware of the bureau?

Mr. S. Smith: It was raised in the House two years ago.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As I heard it, I don't think it did. However, since I can't report on one particular form being used by one or a series of insurance companies, I can't give the member a full answer on that. If he will send it over to me, I will be pleased to investigate it and report back.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I am not entirely satisfied with the answer I have received so far. Regarding the incident in 1977 with the adjuster, would the minister give a full report to the House? Would he provide to the House the same report that has been furnished to the Krever inquiry, allowing that there may be certain things that the public should or shouldn't have at this point, and I will rely on the minister's discretion? Would he, in fact, tell us whether investigators were involved and whether these investigators were themselves questioned to see how widespread the practice was—whether it was just the adjuster or whether investigators were also involved—and why was the Ministry of Health not informed of this particular breach?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will, of course, be pleased to provide all information. Offhand, I can't conceive of why any part of that should not be made available to the public. I will report that as quickly as I can. I should also indicate to the House that my reading of the information I have before me indicates that there was no investigator involved, but that the adjuster had acted on his own to obtain that information. However, I will be pleased to provide all the details to the House early next week.

GATT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question to put to the Treasurer, arising out of his visit to Geneva last week to consult with the Canadian negotiators in the Tokyo round of tariff cuts, and arising out of the visit in the same week by six representatives of the Canadian Labour Congress, who were also there to warn the Canadian negotiators—

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. Cassidy:—that there could be a loss of 350,000 jobs if the tariff cuts went through as proposed in the Swiss round.

I would like the Treasurer to confirm that there has been a document, The Ontario Government's Submission to the Federal Government on the Effect of the GATT Talks on the Ontario Economy, and that that document, as I understand it, confirms the job loss or the kind of job loss that was warned of by the trade union representative and warns of major deindustrializing effects of such tariff cuts on the Ontario economy. Is that what the document says and can the Treasurer elaborate?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I'm not aware of the document. Perhaps the Minister of Industry and Tourism is.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Will the Treasurer undertake to table that particular document in the House since it was prepared in his ministry? Can he give the House a report on these discussions in Geneva and on the effects in Ontario of the tariff cuts that are now being contemplated by the Canadian negotiators?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, I can't give a progress report per se. The negotiations are in the hands of the negotiators. It is fair to say that over the last year and a half successive Ministers of Industry and Tourism, myself and the Minister of Agriculture and Food

(Mr. W. Newman) have been keeping in touch with what is going on, making known our points of view and alerting the federal government to the impact of the tariff negotiations, specifically on Ontario but, hopefully, from a Canadian perspective as well.

On this particular trip I would only say I was somewhat encouraged that our point of view and our specific concerns have been recognized or are being recognized and, I think, are being borne in mind by our negotiators there, although most of the negotiating decisions are taken by the cabinet of the government of Canada in Ottawa, not in Geneva. I think representations properly should be put there rather than at Geneva. Obviously, it's a two-pronged affair, but the decisions, so far as I am aware, are very much taken by the cabinet and are taken on an ongoing basis.

Specifically, I think it is fair to say that with the very active interest of the Chairman of Management Board (Mr. Auld), among others, we have been keeping a close watch on the whole textile area. Our views in that area are well known to the government of Canada. I can only say that I think the concerns we have are recognized by the government of Canada.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary: When this matter was brought to the attention of the Minister of Industry and Tourism about a month ago, he indicated that he and a couple of his top aides were going to fly to Geneva to discuss the issue directly with the negotiators. Is it legitimate to ask the supplementary of that minister, Mr. Speaker, or do I have to stay with the original?

Mr. Speaker: If he's prepared to answer it.

Mr. Sweeney: I would like to know what were the results of those discussions which were about a month ago now.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: The results of the discussions have been fairly well put forward by the Treasurer. They're exactly the same. We go over with our thought to back up the reports we have had.

Mr. Sweeney: Did they give you any guarantees?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: How can they?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I thought your colleague beside you was answering. I didn't see him there but he might have been there.

Mr. Nixon: What is the matter with you this morning?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: We went over with the same proposals that we had made to them originally. We discussed our concerns as they relate to the negotiations, in particular as they relate to industry in Ontario. We talked about some specifics, one of those being the textile industry, which we're concerned with, and manufacturing in general.

We don't get any concrete positive response from them because they take their direction from the cabinet in Ottawa. I am satisfied, as the Treasurer has indicated, that they are taking our concerns into consideration. I'm optimistic that we will not find ourselves in any difficulty as a result of these tariff negotiations.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: At the Treasurer's invitation, I should also like to switch the question to the Minister of Industry and Tourism. Is the Minister of Industry and Tourism aware of the document called, I believe, The Ontario Government's Submission to the Federal Government on The Effect of the GATT Talks on the Ontario Economy? Is he aware that it warns of major deindustrializing effects, that is, large losses in jobs in Ontario because of the tariff cuts? Will he undertake to table that document in order that the Legislature and the public can know what it contains?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Yes, I am well aware of that particular document. It was produced in the ministry and was our submission to the federal government and to the negotiating team in Geneva, expressing our concerns and the reasons for those concerns as to whatever the final negotiations come up with.

I will not commit myself to table that particular document because, quite frankly, we have been asked by the federal government that a degree of confidence be maintained. But I have no compunction at all to say to the member, yes, we are very concerned about the number of jobs that could very well be lost if these negotiations go the way that we originally thought they might and so have a very adverse effect on the manufacturing sector in this province.

Mr. S. Smith: Changed your mind, Darcy. You're not a free trader any more.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Can the minister explain why it is necessary to keep confidential that document which contains vital information of enormous importance to communities and workers and businesses across the province? Is there any confidential information in it and if not, why cannot the document be tabled in order that people across the province can know where they stand under the tariff arrangements that are now being made in Geneva?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, some of the comments in that particular document deal with specific sectors and indicate the concerns we have in those particular sectors. We have been asked by the federal government, because of the need for confidentiality in any of the negotiations that are going on, not to have these particular documents made public at this time but—

Mr. McClellan: Why don't you show it to McKeough?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes:—I'm quite willing to say to the member that we have indicated our concerns and that we are concerned about the loss of jobs. But I am respecting the request that these particular documents not be made public.

CAMPGROUND RATES

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism on a separate subject. Can the Minister of Industry and Tourism explain why, on April 3, he pooh-poohed the suggestion I made in this House that Ontario campground rates are rising to a level which would be far greater than the one in Michigan and that that would hurt tourism in this province, but why last Friday in the Sault Star he was quoted as saying that Ontario campground rates were going to be much higher than in Michigan and that this would affect tourism and discourage it in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I don't recall pooh-poohing that particular item. I have done it to a lot of things the member has said, but he might like to show me any quotes where I said that—

Mr. Wildman: You interjected. You said, "That's not true."

Hon. Mr. Rhodes:—because I have continually stated that I am well aware, as one who does a fair amount of camping, that the rates in Ontario are substantially higher than they are in the state of Michigan. I have always said that and I will continue to say it.

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A supplementary: In view of the enormous balance of payments deficit we are having on tourism right now, can the minister explain why it is then that Ontario went ahead with that increase in campground rates, and what is he doing in order to ensure that the campground rates can be brought to a level which is both fairer for our own people in this province and is also more attractive and, therefore, will help to maintain tourism from the US and Canada?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I think, as the member knows, the decision as to those particular policies was made after substantial discussion, and the consensus was that it was necessary to increase those fees in order to realize the financial return necessary to keep the parks, with the sort of maintenance they have now, in the condition they are in and hopefully to improve that condition.

As far as the tourism business is concerned, camping is only one part of it. There are many people in Ontario, in northern Ontario in particular—and the member might check with his colleague from Algoma (Mr. Wildman) on this—who are not overly enthusiastic about campers coming in trailers. That hurts me personally because I like to trailer but many people are not very enthusiastic about the tourism that is generated; they don't see it being generated by campers. So I still maintain that our prices are much too high in comparison to Michigan parks and other American parks and—

Mr. Cassidy: The minister disagrees with the Treasurer?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: The Treasurer and I don't disagree on the subject because the matter has been discussed and debated. I feel personally that they are high but that's what the rates are.

Mr. Samis: Don't say you are in full agreement.

Mr. Eakins: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: What percentage of our parks is supported by fees and what percentage is subsidized?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, I don't have those exact figures but the Minister of Natural Resources certainly would have them. But as a ball-park figure, I think something like 40 per cent of the cost is subsidized.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Revenue is $3 million and they spend $25 million.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: The Treasurer advised me that we are trying to get it up; the fees would cover about 60 per cent of the cost of operations. It is about 30 per cent now.

Mr. T. P. Reid: It is about 8 to 1 now; it was 35.

Mr. Wildman: Does the minister maintain the position that he was quoted in the Sault Star as taking in that "a comparison of the facilities in Michigan and Ontario parks does not justify the high fee north of the border," and added, "Michigan may become a more popular destination for tourists"? If that is the case, what has the minister done to try to convince the Ministry of Natural Resources that its position that the increase in park fees would help the tourist industry and the camp owners in Ontario is an incorrect position?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I know the article the honourable member is referring to. I said that. It's in the article. Obviously I support my own position, which I might say is not necessarily a position he always takes of staying reasonably consistent.

But I point out to the honourable member that as far as I'm concerned the discussions that I have with the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. F. S. Miller) and the rest of my colleagues in these matters are between him and me and the rest of my colleagues, and I don't intend to go into prolonged discussions of what we say here in the House.

Mr. Wildman: You disagree with them then.

Mr. Foulds: Why do you say it for the Sault Star?

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: I want to quote from Hansard of April 3, where I quoted the rates for unserviced campsites of $2 in Michigan and $5 in Ontario. The minister said, "No, no. That is not true." Then I went on to compare the rates for serviced campsites and to point out the effects on tourism in this province. It's on the record, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Kerrio: He said no, no—not pooh-pooh.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: On the point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: When I said, "No, no. That's not true," I was absolutely correct. The honourable member has probably never done any camping in his day—

Mr. Ruston: Except at Toronto Island.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: —but I would point out to him that the rates he quoted are not accurate. If he took the time to find out the rates that are being charged in Michigan, he would see that I was correct in saying, "No, no. That's not true." But I certainly didn't pooh-pooh him. I will now, because obviously he is wrong.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT REVIEWS

Mr. Cunningham: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Treasurer, on the subject of the Hamilton-Wentworth review, whether he would reconsider his position as it relates to the deadline for submissions to the cabinet on the subject of one-tier government and the recommendations associated with that. Would he consider the position taken by the chamber of commerce for the city of Hamilton, which is requesting a delay in the implementation of this, and as well the submissions that I know have been made to the Treasurer by the outlying municipalities which would request a delay till August?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, that is a matter under consideration.

Mr. Cunningham: Supplementary: I would ask whether the minister could confirm or deny the existence already of legislation respecting the implementation of this particular report. Has the legislation been drafted at this point?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I haven't seen it.

Mr. S Smith: You haven't seen it. Have you felt it? Have you heard it? Have you smelt it?

ALCOHOL ADVERTISING

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. In view of the minister's statement of March 30, 1978, nearly two months ago, in which he expressed his concern about the possible dangers of lifestyle advertising of beer and other forms of alcohol, that statement which was accompanied by a set of directives that were purporting to ban the practice of lifestyle advertising of beer, and in view of the fact that some companies—specifically and especially Molson's—are still airing those ads on television with the acquiescence of the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario, will the minister instruct that board to immediately institute a ban and remove those ads from television?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, the rule at the Liquor Licence Board is that any ads that were approved previously by the board are entitled to stay on the air waves for 12 months before they come up for renewal, as it were. They don't have to be checked out, in other words, until they've been running for 12 months. Obviously, any of those that are now on will be checked again when they finish the 12 months pursuant to the new guidelines.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Supplementary: Is this an example of the vigour with which the minister will pursue the new legislation he introduced yesterday? Is this what we can look forward to when the minister brings in these supposedly tough laws—another case of shilly-shallying around and letting the industry move along as they choose?

Hon. Mr. Norton: You should be decisive and take your select committee across the way.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I'm going to ignore the rhetoric. The honourable member has been reading too much of Hansard.

Mr. Wildman: He has been reading your speeches.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The fact is that a lot of the companies have spent a lot of money in putting those ads together. A Conservative government would not suddenly say to a company that because we've changed the rules after it has just put an ad on the air waves, which may have cost it a couple of hundred thousand dollars, that it should immediately take it off. That would be retroactive legislation.

Mr. M. N. Davison: They have other ads available.

Mr. Samis: That is pretty feeble rhetoric, Larry.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are saying the rule has always been that once this government says that ad is okay for 12 months, we mean it is okay for 12 months. One may, if one had the opportunity, be a heck of a lot more dictatorial and say, "We don't care what the rule was yesterday—we don't care if it was 12 months—we are now cutting it off." We don't happen to operate that way and I have no apologies to make for that.

CHAIN STORE DISCOUNTS

Mr. Eaton: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Attorney General: During the past few weeks, he has been asked to express comment and give legal opinion on whether charges might be laid for discounting practices in the food industry. During that period, the Leader of the Opposition had information which might have assisted the Attorney General in making that decision. Would he look into the legalities of the suppression of evidence by the Leader of the Opposition which might have assisted him in making that decision?

An hon. member: Suppression of evidence. That's all that it is.

Mr. S. Smith: That is no apology. Don't start apologizing.

Mr. Eaton: Political grandstanding was all the opposition leader used it for. He wasn't concerned with the farmers.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I would assume, Mr. Speaker, that if the Leader of the Opposition has information that would be relevant to the legal opinion of the law officers of the crown, he would feel it appropriate to give that information to us.

Mr. S. Smith: Absolutely.

NIAGARA ESCARPMENT

Mr. McKessock: I have a question for the Minister of Resources Development.

In view of the minister's announcement on May 9 pertaining to the reduction in the size of the planning area of the Niagara Escarpment, what exactly is contemplated by the government? Is it a reduction in the planning area by an amendment to the minister's order which established the area or just a request to the Niagara Escarpment Commission to consider the production of a plan for 40 per cent of that original area?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, the commission is preparing a plan on the reduced area. That proposed plan will be the one that will be published sometime early this fall.

Mr. McKessock: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: When this new area is determined, would the minister seriously consider making it definite by an amendment to his original order which would then have to be passed by a resolution in the Legislature? I ask this in view of the fact that if this is not done, the old area can be bounced back at any time within the Niagara Escarpment Act without going before the Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: It is not necessary to provide any amendment. The commission has the authority under the act—I believe it is section 3—to prepare a plan, and this is what they are doing now on a reduced area. What they have done so far is strictly preliminary. The proposed plan would be on the reduced area and there is no necessity for any amendments to the act.

Mr. McKessock: Supplementary: I am aware that it is not necessary but would he consider making an amendment so that the old area can't be bounced back. If he is going to determine a new area that is fine, but we would like to be sure that area will be one that is lasting and that we will not go back to the old area that is there now.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: The honourable member knows what is happening now is that the commission has met, and is continuing to meet with the municipalities in the area. It is as a result of these discussions that the new area is being planned. So I do not believe that there is any necessity to make any changes in the act.

DENTAL BENEFITS FOR WELFARE RECIPIENTS

Mr. Bounsall: A question for the Minister of Community and Social Services, Mr. Speaker: Has the minister ever consulted with his colleague, the Minister of Colleges and Universities (Mr. Parrott), the honourable dentist from Oxford, concerning current proper accepted dental practice and treatment in Ontario? If so, how can he justify his ministry's policy of never approving, for adult recipients of provincial benefits, the saving of their teeth through capping and will pay only for extraction?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I have not had occasion to discuss that specifically with my colleague, the Minister of Colleges and Universities. It might be an appropriate thing to discuss with him, given his discipline.

Mr. Bounsall: Supplementary: I am glad the minister will discuss that matter with the good dentist. Will the minister, after that discussion, ensure—if his ministry cannot find the means to pay that directly and build it into the system—through the welfare branch of the ministry, that the special assistance branches of the welfare offices across Ontario have the funds to provide that additional accepted service?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Obviously there are some economic implications to many of these things. There are a number of enrichments I hope to be able to make this year in benefits to clients of my ministry, although the parties opposite saw fit to do their number on the provincial budget. I must say that has had some impact and will continue to have impact upon what I might be able to do in the course of this year.

I would suggest the member bears in mind as he continues throughout this year to press for enrichments in programs where I do not have money that earlier this year he engaged in an exercise that has resulted in some deprivation to my ministry.

Mr. Kerrio: Stop resisting, take it from the lotteries, will you?

FOOD MARKETING

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, in response to a question asked on May 15 by the member for Kent-Elgin (Mr. McGuigan)—I'm sorry he's not here, he was here though, I know—on the matter of an individual or firm acting as both a buyer and a broker on the same transaction, I wish to make the following statement.

The Ontario Food Council's report on trade practices in the produce industry recommended strengthening licensing provisions. Accordingly, amendments to the Farm Products Grades and Sales Act were enacted by the Legislature in 1974 and regulations to implement the new provisions were established by Ontario regulation 372/75.

It is my understanding that the amendments for produce dealer licensing were made in consultation with the Ontario Fruit and Vegetable Growers' Association, and at that time it was determined that the small number of brokerage produce transactions, conducted solely within the province of Ontario, did not warrant special control provisions. However, a requirement was made under section 4, Ontario regulation 372/75, that a dealer shall maintain a record of every transaction including, where a dealer has not purchased the fruits and vegetables on his own account, that a record be maintained of commission charged by him to a producer.

I wish to point out that all transactions of an interprovincial import or export nature, are a federal responsibility and come under licensing provisions of the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act.

GO TRANSIT SERVICE

Mr. Bradley: A question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications. In view of the heavy traffic congestion which is building up on the Queen Elizabeth Highway each year, the rising energy costs for the operation of automobiles, the uncertainty of fuel supplies in the future; and even under certain circumstances in the present; could the minister indicate to the House at what time does he propose to extend the GO train service to the Niagara Peninsula?

Mr. Wildman: In the fullness of time.

Hon. Mr. Snow: No, I can't.

Mr. Bradley: Supplementary: Has the minister undertaken any particular studies to determine the requirement for such a service? If he has not, would he not feel that is an appropriate step, in the light of the fact that the people of the Niagara Peninsula, or at least a number who have indicated they require it, also pay towards the GO Transit deficit?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I am not aware of any indication that there is a requirement for GO train service in the Niagara Peninsula. The Niagara Peninsula is serviced very well by the private bus companies that serve that area, and also by the intercity railways whose responsibility it is to supply intercity passenger transportation on the rails.

AIR POLLUTION

Mr. Foulds: I would like to ask a question of the Minister of the Environment. Does the minister recall having one of his officials, Mr. Gotts, indicate to me during the estimates of his ministry on April 4 that the reports about the air pollution monitoring program that took place with regard to the mills at Thunder Bay and the one at Marathon and Terrace Bay would be available in about a month's time? As seven weeks have now passed can he indicate why those reports have not been completed?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I believe one or two of those have been made public, but I will check into it and let the honourable member know on Monday.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: In checking into it can he confirm or deny the possibility that there is a conflict between the people who actually did the research and the people who are doing the writing or editorializing of the report, and the researchers involved are not happy with the editorializing that is taking place and have suggested between five and six revisions are necessary because too much of a gloss has been put on the report?

Hon. Mr. McCague: I would be glad to check into it, Mr. Speaker.

NIAGARA FALLS POWER

Mr. Kerrio: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question of the Minister of Energy. Is the minister aware of discussions taking place between the New York state power authority and Ontario Hydro regarding diverting another 20,000 cubic feet per second flow from Niagara Falls to generate more power?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, yes I am aware that discussions are taking place, but no final report has been issued. We are certainly keeping on top of it.

Mr. Kerrio: Supplementary: In view of the fact that during the tourist season there is a minimum 50,000 cubic foot flow at night and 100,000 flow during the day, taking an additional 20,000 at the low end of the scale would reduce the flow to the point where I ask the minister if he would be concerned about the aesthetic beauty of the falls and if that is being taken into consideration, because we felt that we were at the low end of the scales at the 50,000 and 100,000 foot flows?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am very much aware that the aesthetic aspect of the reduction in the flow has been taken into account, and I have been told that particularly during the tourist season aesthetics come first.

Mr. Kerrio: You'll be able to walk across.

DISABILITY PAYMENTS

Mr. Swart: I have a question of the Minister of Community and Social Services. Will he recall that several months ago he said he would consider my request that Workmen's Compensation Board disability payments be considered as earned income when computing welfare payments when those people were on welfare, so that they would not have the first $50 and $100 of that disability pension deducted from their welfare payment? Has he considered it, and what is his reply now?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, there has been no change at the present time. As the honourable member knows, the intention of our income support systems in the province is to provide at least a guaranteed minimum income to persons.

Mr. Warner: Guaranteed poverty.

Hon. Mr. Norton: If we take into consideration for some persons sources of income which for others would be exempt—I don't mean to confuse the issue but if, for example, we were to say that the kinds of pensions the member cited were to be exempted from the calculation of income but were to continue to be required to consider income from disability pensions under Canada Pension Plan, which is a mandatory requirement under the Canada Assistance Plan, then we would in effect be creating an even greater disparity than would exist at the present time. The disparity would then be based upon the source of the pension—not the relative needs of the individual but rather the source of the additional income. I suggest to the honourable member that this would be more discriminatory in many instances than to continue with the present system, which does take into consideration additional income without discriminating on the basis of the source of that income.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary: Does the minister not think that it's discriminatory to deduct this $50 and $100 from welfare recipients when they are receiving this money in lieu of working, since many of them have lost their jobs because they could no longer do that job because of injury on the job? Would he not further reconsider this and see that these people are treated in the same manner as people who are able to work?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I think the honourable member has missed the point I tried to make.

Mr. Swart: No, I understand perfectly. That's what bothers me.

Mr. McClellan: The minister doesn't understand workmen's compensation.

Hon. Mr. Norton: What in fact would be in danger of happening is that those persons who might have been injured in the work place, and who therefore are eligible for workmen's compensation payments, would be in an entirely different class to persons who might have been injured in an automobile accident and who would be entitled to disability pensions under the Canada Pension Plan but not under workmen's compensation.

Mr. Swart: They are in a different category.

Hon. Mr. Norton: It would, in effect, be creating classes of people on the basis of the source of income as opposed to looking at the needs of the individual and trying to treat him as equitably as possible, regarding other sources of income. I suggest what the honourable member would set up is a very highly structured class system—

Mr. Swart: But you have it now.

Hon. Mr. Norton:—dependent upon either the locus of the injury that gave rise to the disability, or the source of the additional income over and above the general welfare assistance or family benefits payments that the person might otherwise be entitled to. He would be creating a highly discretionary and highly discriminatory system, I think.

Mr. McClellan: Now it's equal poverty for everybody.

GREENHOUSE HEATING

Mr. Stong: I have a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Some two weeks ago in answer to my question, the Minister of Energy indicated that the Ministry of Agriculture and Food was conducting a study into the problem of granting relief to those greenhouse owners and operators who had converted to thermal blankets in the interests of energy conservation, only to find that they were, in fact, incurring greater costs to themselves because they were using less natural gas and were placed in a different category which costs them more money.

I'm wondering if the minister can indicate to the House what relief he intends to grant to these people who find themselves in that position?

Hon. W. Newman: I'm not exactly sure I fully understand the question.

Mr. Swart: Possible.

Hon. W. Newman: If the member is talking about the storm damage situation, we dealt with it in the House the other day, right? Is the member fully aware of that?

Mr. Stong: No, no.

Hon. W. Newman: Is the member perhaps referring to the sales tax on thermal blankets which also came up?

Mr. Stong: Perhaps I can clarify the situation.

Mrs. Campbell: Tell him what is wrong.

Mr. Stong: I understand that gas is sold by volume. Those who have converted to thermal blankets are using a lower volume of natural gas and are paying more for it because they are using less. In other words, they are paying an increased amount of money because they're using less; they are now in a different category. The Minister of Energy (Mr. Bactz) passed the buck to the Ministry of Agriculture and Food which he said was conducting a study in this regard. I would like to know what the results of the study are and what relief the minister intends to give these people.

Hon. W. Newman: I will certainly take this up with the Minister of Energy and get back to the member on that matter.

WASTE DISPOSAL

Ms. Bryden: I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. In a speech on May 5 to the National Solid Waste Management Association the minister said the program to encourage the municipalities to get into solid waste disposal programs has lagged behind schedule with respect to plant construction and that he is now reviewing his policies to determine whether changes should be considered. I'd like to ask the minister if he has yet visited the Milwaukee plant to observe how one city is successfully recycling its solid waste and whether he has completed his review of his policies, which obviously aren't working, and is ready to bring in changes to get some action before we drown in our own garbage?

An hon. member: Mass fertilizer.

Hon. Mr. McCague: No, Mr. Speaker.

[11:00]

CHILDREN'S SERVICES

Mr. T. P. Reid: I have a question for the Minister of Community and Social Services. Recently his ministry announced grants of $700,000 to the Kenora area and $25,000 to the Rainy River area under the children's services program. Can he explain the criterion on which the grants were made, and can he explain to the House what $25,000 in this day and age is going to do to help children's services in the Rainy River district?

Mrs. Campbell: Or anywhere else.

Mr. McClellan: Let Leo answer.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, the particular grants to which the honourable member refers were in conformity with the priorities that we had also announced some time ago. It is certainly the first time in my recollection that there has been, given the limitation of resources, as clear a statement of the priorities to which we were going to direct the funds available during the course of this fiscal year.

Specifically, the funding that was directed towards the northern priority portion of the budget was to try to improve the level of services, particularly in the area of short-term treatment services or residential services in some communities, to avoid, for example, the necessity that has often existed in northern communities of transporting children away from their homes to southern communities, such southern communities in some cases as Sudbury, and further on occasion.

To the best of my recollection, the specific grant in Rainy River was directed towards the provision of a small, five-bed, community based residence, something of that nature, I believe, I stand to be corrected on that. I don't have the details of each of those grants before me at the moment.

Mr. T. P. Reid: The grant was supposedly for a mental resource person, whatever that is.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Perhaps the best thing would be for me to get the details so that we could discuss it more fully, either in the House or privately. I would gladly review that with the member.

Mr. Nixon: You didn't have to import mental resources.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Supplementary: We will talk together privately, but does the minister really believe that in this day and age $25,000 supposedly would go for another mental health worker? Doesn't he feel that $25,000 will hardly provide any services at all to the Rainy River district, as opposed to $700,000 to Kenora, which I understand is going to be used primarily for a detention centre? Isn't there some kind of disparity there?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Obviously there are differences. One cannot, with limited resources, necessarily apply equal amounts of money for all communities. We had to take into consideration the specific needs that had been manifested by the various communities. Where proposals had been made by residents of various communities for specific projects, specific requests were considered.

Mr. Nixon: A pork barrel.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I want members to understand this is not a matter of my staff in the ministry sitting down and simply developing specific projects for each of the communities themselves. There has been community involvement, there is ongoing community involvement and most of the grants are going to fund specific requests where proposals have come from those communities.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: While the minister is investigating this apparent discrepancy, could we find out whether the money that has been allocated for the Rainy River district supplements the regional centre outreach program in terms of assessment, and does he think that the amount is adequate for even temporary assessment of emotionally disturbed children in the Rainy River-Fort Frances area?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I want the members to understand that this year is, for many communities, the beginning of the development of community based services.

Mr. Foulds: You already had someone going there.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Obviously, we don't anticipate achieving an optimum level in one year. The member used the word "discrepancy." I don't think that there is any discrepancy at all.

The honourable member referred to observation and detention homes. We do have a provincially-operated program there. By their very nature they are often more costly services to provide and often involve physical structures that have to be developed. It's not surprising and shouldn't be surprising that if an observation and a detention home is being located for the first time in one community, that is going to be more costly than other community-based services that might be developed for the first time in a neighbouring community. I don't think one should assume that they can look simply at a dollar figure without looking at the needs we are attempting to meet in those various communities, and suggest that there is any kind of discrepancy.

Mr. Foulds: I asked whether it was a supplement.

Hon. Mr. Norton: There is not necessarily any discrepancy whatsoever.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Is the minister aware of the working group in the Rainy River district which has asked that a pilot project on children's services be set up in the Rainy River district? Would the funding come under this program and what is the status of that?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Yes, I'm aware that there was a proposal from that area. There have been a number of proposals from northern communities, as I'm sure the honourable member is aware. Given the geography of the northern part of the province and the distribution of population, there are some unique problems that have to be addressed uniquely.

At this point, we have not announced the establishment of any specific children's services committees. We are continuing to work with the northern communities where they have special problems. We may have to take a slightly different approach there, even in the first year, in terms of the development of specific proposals. We do have staff now working on a consultative basis with a number of northern communities, which will include Rainy River, towards the development, in some cases perhaps, of a co-operative kind of proposal that will involve more than one community. We have no preconceived or magical formula that is going to work in all communities, especially with the unique problems of the north.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wonder if I might make a slight correction in the order of business for next Tuesday. When setting out legislation for next Tuesday, particularly that which is to commence at 8 o'clock, I mentioned Bills 85 and 92. I should have said Bills 85 and 95. I would make that brief amendment with respect to the order of legislation for next Tuesday.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading on motion:

Bill 71, An Act to amend the Judicature Act.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS

On vote 901, ministry administration program; item 1, main office:

Mr. T. P. Reid: I have lost the minister. They don't usually leave until after I get started.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I will do the best I can.

Mr. Chairman: He's within hearing distance.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Perhaps he could just nod. I would like to ask the minister under item 1 is he on the special committee set up by the Premier (Mr. Davis), on mining communities in northern Ontario? Because I didn't have an opportunity during the estimates of the Ministry of Natural Resources, could I ask the Minister of Northern Affairs to indicate to us how many meetings of that committee have been held, what has been on the agenda and who has attended? Have you really come to any kind of conclusions or are you just feeling your way around the whole situation as usual?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I would be glad to answer that question, following a review of what I intend to do at this point in time. At the last sitting on our estimates, I believe I indicated to the member for Algoma (Mr. Wildman) that I would read into the record the role of the Ministry of Northern Affairs. Perhaps I could do that and then answer your question, if that is agreeable to you. I am sure you will agree with enthusiasm.

The role of the Ministry of Northern Affairs is very clearly set out. I would like to put it on the record for the honourable members. It is as follows:

To recommend policies and programs which respond effectively to the priorities, problems, needs and opportunities of northern Ontario; to ensure that the requirements of northern Ontario are considered and, where feasible, reflected in government policy development, program planning, priority setting and resource allocation; to improve citizen awareness of and access to government programs and services in the north; to facilitate citizen participation in the development of policies, programs and specific projects for the north; to administer specific programs designed to assist the development of northern communities and regional services and facilities; to co-ordinate government programs and services relating to northern Ontario; to undertake research into all aspects of the economic and social conditions of all areas of northern Ontario; and to establish a stronger provincial government presence in the north through geographical decentralization of ministry program responsibilities and decision-making authority. I think that answers the question of the member for Algoma.

If I could just relate to the question from the member for Rainy River concerning the special cabinet committee in connection with single-resource industries and, in particular, the mining industry, one should remember that this is the first subcommittee that has been established under the Davis administration to look at a specific problem. I think we should recognize that, because up to now we have been operating in specific policy fields, namely, the Resources Development policy field, the Social Development policy field and the Justice policy field.

To have broken away from that certainly indicates to me, and I am sure to the members of this House, that the government has a very sincere concern about the single-resource industries, particularly the non-renewable resource industries, in many communities in northern Ontario. The special cabinet committee was established under the chairmanship of the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. F. S. Miller). The secretary of that committee is my own deputy minister, Mr. Campbell. We have had a number of meetings on a regular basis.

There has been a tremendous amount of research done by a number of ministries. I can't recall all the ministries involved, but they are a very select group and a very well-informed group. While their efforts have not materialized in a positive policy statement as yet, I can assure the honourable member that we are looking at a large number of areas.

One of them has already been reflected in the budget address made by the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) of Ontario as it related to changes in the mining tax. That was a direct result of those cabinet committee meetings relating to this particular problem.

Another area which has been gone into carefully by the Ministry of Industry and Tourism is the possible diversification of the economic base of some of these communities, particularly in the Sudbury area. I think one has to realize that, while we are very much oriented to the extraction of nonrenewable resources in northern Ontario, much of the mining equipment is not being manufactured in this particular province. That review has been under way now for some considerable time, looking at the components, parts of equipment, such as valves and a number of different things, that could probably be manufactured in this province and, indeed, in northern Ontario to supplement their economic base.

As to when we'll be making a final report, my deputy might have something for me that I could relate to you. We certainly will be bringing something forward to cabinet in the not too distant future.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I appreciate what the minister said, although he hasn't related too many specifics.

Has your committee been dealing with the problems of the transportation costs—of which there are multiple studies—which seems to be one of the highest barriers to any secondary manufacturing in the province. Can you give us some idea, or can your deputy give us some idea, when this report is going to come about?

You mentioned Sudbury. Well, the minister will appreciate that my main concern at the moment is with Atikokan. Has your committee dealt with Atikokan? Do you have any specific programs or policies related to Atikokan—the situation there with Steep Rock and Kalamand Ore?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: To be specific, the area of transportation is certainly one that we're looking at very carefully. In fact, the changes to the Public Vehicles Act, which my colleague, the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) introduced in this House some time ago, were another result of those discussions we had in that committee, where we felt that deregulation in northern Ontario would create more competition and, in some cases, drive down the prices of transportation costs as related to the movement of secondary manufactured products in northern Ontario.

The honourable member is well aware of what happened to Bill 21 and Bill 42. Both have been withdrawn. They've been brought together under one specific bill; considerably watered down, I might say, to meet the acceptance of members on the opposite side because of the minority situation. I hope that will go through. I guess there's even some question about that. I'm not too sure just where the honourable member stands.

That is definitely an area that's high on the priority list—the field of transportation costs. As a side issue, I might mention that following the recessing of the session this afternoon, I'm on my way to North Bay to meet with the municipal advisory committee of northeastern Ontario along with my colleagues, the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Rhodes) and the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson). One of the topics there will be the cost of transportation in northeastern Ontario. The issue is certainly not a dead one. It's one we're trying to come to grips with. It's not easy, and we have to have the full support of members on both sides of the House.

I just appeal to the member for Rainy River, who is well aware and very sensitive to these high costs that are causing problems in northern Ontario, that if he would prevail upon some of his colleagues who sit behind him to have another look at that particular bill, I'm sure he will gain some marks back home for it.

With regard to Atikokan, Atikokan is another area that is a frontrunner in our discussions because of the problems, which we're very much aware of, happening to the mining activities in that community. We, in the Ministry of Northern Affairs, have been given the responsibility, as the lead ministry, for the problems at Atikokan. We have had some ongoing discussions with the municipality. As recently as last week we met the Northern Ontario Municipal Association's representatives in Thunder Bay and I had a chance to speak to some councillors from Atikokan on this very subject.

I might say, just to enlighten the honourable member, I'm sure he is aware, that they have made a suggestion to us that an industrial commission be established for the Atikokan region at a cost, I think, of some $125,000 a year. I indicated to them verbally, after some discussion with some of my cabinet colleagues and some of our staff and after looking at other projects that we have developed in northern Ontario, that we felt there should be a greater involvement by the community itself. I think the suggestion was that the town itself would put in about $5,000 and other organizations, including the unions, would contribute another $5,000. We felt that wasn't sufficient and that this individual may be regarded as another government bureaucrat superimposed on their community to resolve all their problems.

It's not going to be easy. If there was greater financial involvement by the community itself I believe there would be greater support for that person's efforts and possibly greater emphasis on the direction he would take.

One of the direct results of the cabinet committee on the mining problems of northern Ontario was the immediate response and the direct assistance that we gave to the Sudbury area, grants in excess of $900,000. Six hundred thousand dollars were for the 2001 conference, which the Premier attended—and to which he made a very moving address, I might admit—and $300,000 to look at the possibility of diversifying the economy and doing studies with regard to improving and expanding the agricultural base of the Sudbury basin. That's a direct result of the cabinet committee recommendations.

Mr. T. P. Reid: How much are they putting into it in relation to Atikokan, et cetera?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, I could touch on that further. The Sudbury conference committee known as 2001 will be granted $300,000 this year, $200,00 next year and $100,00 the year after. It will be a phased-down program after which they will take over. They expect to raise within the community in excess of $2.5 million to use as a venture capital fund, so their responsibility is significant.

I might add along these same lines, as a matter of interest to the honourable member for Rainy River, we have also assisted the Manitoulin Development Association.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Is it $225,000?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, $225,000 over a five-year period. That brings together nine small communities which have pooled their resources, are taxing their own people on a per capita basis and matching the dollars we are putting in, and are engaging one individual who will help all the small industries on the island develop more expertise in the field of marketing, advertising and promotion. Successes have already been noted with that particular organization.

The point I am trying to make is while we are making these recommendations we are giving some financial support to these organizations. We do think, and a lot of others seem to think, there should be local involvement to a point. We don't think they should carry the whole burden, we understand that.

In a town like Atikokan of course, in the condition it is, there is the uncertainty, the fear of tomorrow and the investment climate within a community changes in a situation like this. But we think somewhere in the field of maybe two for one as an example, there is an area we would be looking at to assist Atikokan.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I take it then that the minister is waiting for a response from Atikokan, because Steep Rock's plans, as I recall, are to start layoffs at the end of 1978 or early 1979. The time is getting to be critical. Does the minister have any other plans or any other plans that he has discussed with the municipality in regard to providing employment in that area?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Our plans are still to move ahead with the sewage treatment facilities that are required in the Atikokan area. I think I indicated in Thunder Bay last week that, because of the $9-million cutback, there may have to be some withdrawal on the total package that we wanted to go with prior to that figure. The Bending Lake road will definitely go ahead this year, but again we've had to delay because of the cutback.

Those programs are still in place, however. I think the reports in the newspapers may be a little bit fuzzy. I guess they have difficulty realizing that when you have a program in place within a large budgetary process, and you just cut out programs, it takes some time to get them plugged back in and to get them operating again.

We felt strongly, after careful review of all the programs—and they were scrutinized very carefully by a number of ministries as well as, of course, our own staff—that we should keep them all in place. We may delay them a little bit, or there may be some changes in the amount of work we'll do this year, but nevertheless the program is intact and will be moving ahead.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That brings me to my next topic and then I'll let my friend get in. Does the minister have a list for us today? Has his ministry done all the paring down and found the $9 million? Can the minister give us a list now of those projects that will be deferred, postponed or going ahead?

Parenthetically to that, I would like to ask whether the ministry is going ahead with spending the money on the Marchington Lake road. I trust that would be the lowest priority and would be cut out altogether.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: To give specifics at this point in time is impossible, because we're only a month into the new fiscal year. While we have the figures before us, we have not specifically said what will happen to these specific projects. They're all in place. There are always problems with regard to calling a contract. Has the engineering been completed? Has the land acquisition been accepted? All these problems are before us. If we cut our cloth at the start of the year, it doesn't necessarily fit the rest of the year. So we have a lot of flexibility in moving around those particular projects. We may accelerate one and delay a bigger part of the other one; so it would be impossible at this time to give the honourable member a specific list of what is happening.

Mr. T. P. Reid: But the minister specifically mentioned perhaps cutting back on the Atikokan sewage treatment plant, which has been in the works for almost seven years. Why would he pick that one?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I used that as an example. There would be several others that would come out of the $9 million. I think one has to realize that. We took $5 million out of the community priorities budget. Out of that $5 million I could say that Atikokan perhaps could be cut back by $100,000 out of a $1.5-million program, or something like that. We won't really affect seriously the programs right through.

With regard to Bending Lake, of course, it's very easy because we just delay calling the contract; it's a new project. But ongoing ones have to be carried on.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Like Marchington Lake—the road that's going to nowhere?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I would have to take exception to that, because the Marchington Lake access is opening up a whole new area of northwestern Ontario, providing the Great Lakes Paper Company with a supply of pulpwood for its new plant in Thunder Bay and the new McKenzie Forest plant at Hudson. In fact, on behalf of the company I would like to extend a very warm invitation to the member for Rainy River to join me in Hudson on June 2 to officially reopen that facility in Hudson and to see for himself the tremendous amount of employment that McKenzie Forest Products has created in the Hudson-Sioux Lookout area, using the Marchington Lake road.

Mr. T. P. Reid: We'll fly up together.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Okay.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Chairman, I'd like to speak to the minister for a moment on his admitted role as the co-ordinator of programs for northern Ontario. He has been around the northern part of the province all his life. I am sure he knows what has happened in the past leading up to this point in time.

One of the biggest industries in northern Ontario seems to be this boondoggle where we find an academic in southern Ontario, maybe at the University of Toronto, and we ship him up north to do a study and evaluation of the problems facing us as northerners. I feel as though I have been under a microscope for the past 10 years with these people evaluating me, studying me and seasonally adjusting me. They do all these things and write a big fancy report; and nothing ever happens.

You know the Design for Development that was written a few years ago. One of the gems that came out of that was that people in northern Ontario tend to drown a lot if they live near a big body of water. I knew that before the boy came up there but he put it all together and I am glad he did. I know now why we drown so often; it's because there is a lot of water in northern Ontario.

Then there was the Strategy for Development a few years later. Nothing ever happened as a result of that report; and there have been various others. We have had the Hartt report. Mr. Justice Hartt spent eight or nine months wandering around through the woods. He came back pretty disillusioned, and made certain recommendations. One was that further studies take place. We are going to be put under the microscope again. I think that the minister, as co-ordinator for northern Ontario, should co-ordinate all these disparate studies which are going on and bring them to a conclusion.

You have the cabinet committee as well, studying mining municipalities. Recommendation three from the Hartt report is, "A task force of northern residents should be appointed to investigate and recommend ways for the people of the north to become effectively involved in the making of decisions by government ministries and agencies that affect their lives and communities." Now that responsibility is already contained in your legislation.

You have these offices scattered all over northern Ontario in order for people in the north to have input. I am surprised that Mr. Hartt didn't see that we already had that structure in place. I can only assume that your structure is not functioning since Mr. Hartt did not see it operating.

The question is, how are we going to deal, for instance, with the Hartt commission report and those several recommendations—the recommendation on the West Patricia land development study and the Onakawana thing? Are you involved in co-ordinating these studies? Have evaluations been made?

I would like you to tell me about your role as a co-ordinator of all these things that are going on in northern Ontario that never seem to come into focus. They have been going on for such a long time. As a northerner, the minister is aware of that, I am sure, as well as I am. I would like him to bring us up to date in general terms on what happens in that area.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Let me first point out that I share the member for Sudbury's concern with regard to studies as they relate to northern Ontario. If there is one thing that we as northerners abhor it is another round of studies or investigations and reviews of a situation or situations with which most of us are quite familiar. There is just no question about that. I suppose that's the way things are, and with the way governments operate, this will ever be the case.

However, I can assure you that every time I have an opportunity to speak out, I will look to the shelves first to see if those studies have already been completed. If so, we can dust them off and review what has already been done. I think in many cases this could be accomplished.

In going through our role and the impact we are having, I think I have to relate to the comments of my colleague, the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton), when he replied to the member for Rainy River this morning. He said that his ministry realized that there are special and unique problems in northern Ontario and we may be asked to look at them in a very different way, and I think that message, that thrust, is getting through; albeit not quite as fast as I as a northerner would like, but I think our impact is being felt.

We have had a number of engineering firms, consultants, come to us, wanting to do these studies and surveys to which the member refers. I have constantly said to them: "Don't come to me looking for work in northern Ontario when you are located in Toronto. If you really want to express the views of northerners and be part and parcel of that type of environment that we have in northern Ontario, then get up there and establish yourself there. Be seen in northern Ontario and be part and parcel of the whole community so you get to know northerners, their language, and the specific and unique problems that we have up there. You will be more conversant, and I think better able to consult and advise the municipalities and the others who are looking for your services."

Just this last week I was pleased to be informed that three have taken our advice; two will be establishing in Thunder Bay and one in the North Bay area. So that message is getting through as part of our overall thrust to focus more attention on the specific needs of northern Ontario.

Design for Development, I have to defend—particularly the one for northern Ontario. That is a document which was brought together in 1970 in co-operation with all the municipalities of northwest Ontario, and it contained about 70-odd specific recommendations.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Some of them were very odd.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, and I can say to you that the percentage of accomplishment on those 70-odd recommendations is in the 80 per cent to 85 per cent accomplished.

Mr. Wildman: It proves how inadequate your study was.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: And it became obvious that in the year 1978 the municipal advisory committee looked at Design for Development and said: "Now, we have completed all that, most of that is behind us. Those are accomplishments. We have to update that particular study. Let's get on with a plan or an industrial strategy for northwest Ontario." So we gave the municipal advisory committee that responsibility, and last fall we went to the Quetico Training Centre and met with the municipal advisory committee.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Yes, in camera!

Hon. Mr. Bernier: In camera, yes—to sit down and work with the municipalities, the elected municipal politicians of northwestern Ontario for two full days—the Treasurer, and four or five of my cabinet colleagues were with us; we sat down there and worked over the very minute details of that strategy with a fine-toothed comb. We went over it very carefully and came up with a report that has since been circulated all over northwestern Ontario.

The response has been very positive, I would say to the member for Sudbury (Mr. Germa). In fact the Treasurer has been concerned that there hasn't been any reaction because normally when there is a report tabled or a plan or a direction brought forward by the government, there are some corners that react violently.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Nobody has read it. It is a nonstarter. It never got to the people.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It is something that people are looking at. It is very general. The Treasurer has extended the time when he would accept briefs and comments on this particular strategy. I think he has extended it another three or four months.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That's right. I have had three letters so far.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, I have had very few. But I think what is in that industrial strategy is what the northerners in northwestern Ontario really want to see happen to their particular area. So they are just accepting it as government policy.

Mr. T. P. Reid: They don't know what is in it for the people of northwestern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: All they have to do is read it; it has been circulated.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I know, but that's the problem.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: But it is there, and it is not government policy as yet. I want to make that very clear. So here again we have that kind of direction being extended. In fact, this afternoon, as I said to the member for Rainy River, I am going to North Bay to meet with the Northeastern Ontario Municipal Association to talk about an industrial strategy for northeastern Ontario. These groups always like plans, they like to see where the government is going five, 10 or 15 years down the road.

Again, I will say to them: "Look at the northwestern Ontario model," we are not going to push it down their throats, obviously—"That is a pattern, and you may wish to follow." But that will be discussed with them, because we in Northern Affairs, and I can say for all the provincial government in northern Ontario, want that northern input now more than ever before. We are asking for it and we are going up there and we are getting it, and we are pulling it into our decision-making process.

With regard to the Hartt report and the Hartt commission, as the honourable member knows, there has been a recent statement in the Legislature concerning the acceptance of some of those recommendations. The recommendation concerning the West Patricia planning area has been accepted.

The commission will examine and continue to monitor what the inventory is really pulling together in that particular area. Also in the Onakawana area there will be another branch of the commission monitoring the environmental review of the Onakawana development. There is some concern that the Environmental Assessment Act has not been really tested and they would like to look over the shoulder of the study group and the public sessions to make sure that the interests of the native people are carefully considered.

The task force to which the honourable member referred in the Hartt report has not been accepted by the government. The Premier made it very clear that we have 15 provincial members of Parliament in northwestern Ontario and northern Ontario.

Mr. Wildman: Does that include Mr. Maeck?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, that includes Mr. Maeck, the great member for Parry Sound. They are in place, and we have a new Ministry of Northern Affairs. In the Premier's statement, he felt very strongly that we should tap those resources and give the Ministry of Northern Affairs more opportunity to become involved and to carry that responsibility of additional co-ordination that relates specifically to the problems of northern Ontario.

I think you will see that as we move down the road. I'm not making any apology, but we have been in the operation for only a little over a year. Our impact is being felt within the government and within other ministries, as we go down the road to co-ordinate and to suggest in a very positive way the things that we would like to see changed in the policy programs of northern Ontario.

Mr. Worton: What happened to your finger?

Mr. Wildman: It got caught in the cookie jar.

Mr. T. P. Reid: What happened to his finger is he tried to get back that $9 million.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I tried.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I want to make a very short statement to the minister about the northwest strategy. I want to say to him that I am extremely disappointed in the municipal people in northwestern Ontario. I want you to listen very carefully because I have said this to them. The Treasurer has the responsibility for the report up to this stage and will, I understand, until it is government policy. Then it will unfortunately come under you, and that's another problem. The Treasurer has had three letters on that strategy which supposedly, is going to set the guidelines for development in northwestern Ontario until you change it, probably in another five years. I don't even know of any place where it has been discussed at a formal council meeting or where there have been public hearings within the community to discuss what is in that report.

I can't unfortunately blame the government for that. I would like to but I can't. I feel a certain amount of frustration over this. I was wondering if the Treasurer or yourself, or both of you in combination, intend to dig these municipalities somewhat and say you want to have their responses by July 1 or whatever it is. I don't know what else to do. I have talked to members of council, some who have assured me they will get to it and will talk to it. I do my radio program where I mention that. I have done my weekly newspaper column on the thing. I have not had a response from what has been in there, either yea or nay or it's a bunch of hogwash.

I just find it a completely frustrating experience that there hasn't been any response by the northwestern communities per se other than through the municipal advisory committee which, quite frankly, I don't think really represents all of the communities or certainly not all of the people. It is not getting down to the grassroots for the input, as you are fond of saying, of the northern person who is living there. That person doesn't even know this thing exists, and yet it's going to be shaping his life or her life necessarily for the next few years. Are you planning on sending them a letter saying: "Will you hold some community hearings, and will you respond by—whatever the extension date is?"

[11:45]

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I might point out to the honourable member that at the recent convention of the Northern Ontario Municipal Association, which was held in Thunder Bay a week ago, the Treasurer made a very strong statement to those municipalities present saying they should get their responses in and react to it.

He gave them that extension of time, hoping that they would review the strategy and get back to him with their comments. It may well be that we'll have to take a more direct approach with each municipality.

This particular industrial strategy is different from the old Design for Development, in that it is brought together with a regional input. It doesn't have the parochial response the old Design for Development had when it specifically said, "There should be a road built from Sioux Lookout to Pickle Lake. Call it the Marchington Lake road."

These things were very specific in the old Design for Development. They attracted the attention and the concern of the various municipal governments because they could see how it would affect their municipalities. This is a regional approach to all of northwestern Ontario. It doesn't have the parochialism that was there in the past. So I can see why the municipal leaders have not been excited about responding to it. It's very general in nature.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Except for the fact that their own pet projects, or whatever, have to come within the guidelines of this program. It has been my experience in the past that you use these things not to do things as my friend from Sudbury would say, "We want to see some action,"—but as a reason for not doing things by saying, "It's not in the plan." That's the part that bothers me.

I want to commend the people who were involved in that report because, for the first time, there is, at least from the government point of view, a total government response, from what I can gather from reading it, from all the ministries involved, rather than a selected few. And at least we have some idea of what direction the ministries see themselves as going in.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I certainly want to add my comments about the group that worked on the report. There has been a feeling in northwestern Ontario that Thunder Bay has been the Hogtown of northwestern Ontario. There's no question about it. I think some of the delegates at Quetico indicated that.

I just want to commend those delegates from Thunder Bay for broadening their scope of thinking and vision beyond the boundaries of Thunder Bay and for looking at the needs of such places as Atikokan, Fort Frances, Rainy River, Sioux Lookout, Red Lake, Ear Falls, Geraldton.

As the honourable member points out, it was heartening to see that regional approach to the entire community. I am hopeful—and certainly I will discuss it with the Treasurer—that if the municipalities do not respond with much more enthusiasm than they have in the past, we will take a more direct approach with them.

Mr. Wildman: I would like to follow up on what the minister indicated about the role of the ministry in co-ordination, and what my colleague from Sudbury and the member for Rainy River have been questioning, in three major areas.

First, I'd like to know what the ministry's role is in co-ordinating the response of the government in general to the Hartt commission, and in particular, what the minister's role is in the various consultations the government has had with interest groups who have wanted to respond to the Hartt commission because they will be affected by both the recommendations that were made and by the government's response. For instance, I understand that prior to the Premier announcing the government's response to the Hartt commission, consultations were held with various groups, specifically with the native treaty organizations in the area. There was a meeting held, I understand, with a Ministry of Natural Resources official, a Mr. Dillon, which dealt with a number of things, including wild rice harvesting. What role did the Ministry of Northern Affairs play in that, if any, and what does the minister see his role should be?

Prior to the announcement that a representative of the metis and non-status Indians would be on the committee studying wild rice, I would be interested if the minister could explain, what consultation had taken place with OMNSIA? The president of OMNSIA, Smokey Bruyere, has indicated to us that his organization was not consulted and the first they knew they were going to be involved was when the announcement was made in the House here. I would like to know what the minister's role is in general in response to the Hartt commission and in dealing with the various groups, including the native groups which are affected by the government's response, and why there wasn't more consultation, if there wasn't, with OMNSIA.

I have a few other questions on the co-ordinating role of the ministry, but perhaps the minister could respond to that before I go ahead?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The response to the Hartt commission was brought together by the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle). Mr. Dillon is the deputy minister of that secretariat. He did have discussions with ourselves and he had discussions, as the member correctly points out, with the native peoples. He had discussions with the Ontario Wild Rice Producers Association in Kenora.

The triparty subcommittee which will look at the wild rice issue and the involvement of the Indian metis organization and the Ontario Wild Rice Producers Association are a direct result of our involvement.

We insisted that if we are going to have that northern input, with the entire community providing some of the input, we should have the entire community at the table at the same meeting, and not as separate groups.

You can see that our involvement was very real in getting that changed so that those groups were and will be involved in the decision-making process, at least in making recommendations to the government. I don't think they will be involved in any decisions. They will be brought together under the triparty umbrella and make recommendations to the government by January 1979.

In getting back to the role of the Ontario Metis and Non-Status Indian Association, the honourable member will recall that they did hold their general meeting here in Toronto two months ago. One of the major recommendations in their submission to the government was that they be considered and have a greater role in the resources of northern Ontario. We accepted that as their desire to participate in these discussions. One of the specific areas, was commercial fishing and wild rice. Because the non-status Indians are very much involved with the harvesting of these resources, I think—and correctly so—they should have a say in what the future will be with regard to the development and harvesting of these resources.

Mr. Wildman: The minister's response leads to one specific question and a general problem that I have had ever since the ministry was created. First, I imagine that the minister knows and is fully aware as a northerner about some of the problems between treaty Indians and treaty Indian organizations and the metis and non-status Indians. I wonder if he anticipates any difficulty in having a group meeting that includes both of those organizations.

That is the specific question. The general problem I have is that when the minister indicates the overall response of the government to the Hartt commission is being co-ordinated by the Resources Development secretariat under the provincial secretary, that's where I run into difficulty.

It seems to me that the terms of reference for the secretariat in relation to the development of the resources, which naturally involves northern Ontario centrally, seem to be almost exactly the same as the terms of reference for the Ministry of Northern Affairs. It's very difficult to determine who is responsible for what and what the relationship is between your ministry, which is a part of that secretariat as well as other secretariats, and your co-ordinating role and the co-ordinating role in terms of resources of the secretariat.

I suppose the Resources Development secretariat would naturally be involved with the Hartt recommendations since the honourable member for Cochrane North (Mr. Brunelle) is also responsible for native affairs. That makes sense, but I would like to have some clarification on that before I go ahead with a couple of other examples of problems I see with co-ordination.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, if I can answer the first question that the honourable member put forward in connection with the concern that he has with regard to the tripartite meetings; will the status Indian accept the non-status Indian around that table and the Ontario Wild Rice Producers Association. That question did come up, there is no doubt about it, in the presence of Mr. Justice Hartt and he indicated very strongly to us that he felt the native people would accept that. They were anxious to get on with the job of looking at this particular resource and he felt most strongly. We accepted the feeling that they would sit around as one group to look at the resource in the interests of the entire community, so I have no real fears that that will break down. I'm hoping it won't.

In connection with our role, I think the honourable member touched on it in winding up his comments when he said that the provincial secretariat does have direct responsibility for the native people in this province. They are relating directly to the native people and they have the exclusive responsibility of carrying that with the federal government. We, as the Ministry of Northern Affairs, don't, so it was obvious in the Hartt report, which dealt so strongly with those native people north of the 50th parallel, that the provincial secretariat has an overriding interest across the province that takes in the interests right across the province from Windsor to Ottawa to Kenora. Our basic area of juris-isdiction is that area of Parry Sound north—is that what we're supposed to use now? Where is the honourable member for Parry Sound (Mr. Maeck)?

Mr. Wildman: It must be the French River.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The provincial secretary's area is much broader than ours and it specifically relates to the native people, so it was a natural place for the Hartt commission response to be generated.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Chairman, in relation to the co-ordinating role of the ministry in terms of policy and planning, and then in delivery of services as a result of those plans—that is, when a policy is decided upon—last year in the estimates of both the Ministry of Transportation and Communications and the Ministry of Northern Affairs, I raised some concern about the relationship between the two ministries and what appeared to be, at least in the beginning, some strain on the part of officials of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications in their feelings about the role of Northern Affairs in planning what roads would be built or not built, what roads would be improved or not improved, and then in turning it over to Transportation and Communications to deliver the goods after Northern Affairs had made a decision.

I used the example the last time of the proposed Highway 555 between Blind River and Elliot Lake, the Granary Lake road, which has been talked about off and on for about 20 years at least, and which Transportation and Communications—the Department of Highways before that—had sort of been studying and doing surveys on for a long time. Then, just prior to the last election, the Minister of Transportation and Communications made a statement. First they were going to review all their studies again and look at the situation to see if that thing would go through. He seemed optimistic that it would go through.

Subsequent to that, I contacted the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, the North Bay office, and was informed in a rather testy way by one of the officials that it was up to Northern Affairs now—Northern Affairs was responsible.

The desire of the people in the area is obvious and the minister is aware of it. The town council and the citizens of Blind River have presented a petition to the Minister of Transportation and Communications. This was in the last few months, I believe at the time of the Good Roads convention. The minister at that time said he was aware of the desire but it was now out of his hands and was up to the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

Subsequent to that, every municipality and most chambers of commerce on the north shore, from Sault Ste. Marie to Elliot Lake, and including Elliot Lake, and Spanish—I think Spanish; all the way at least to Iron Bridge, Thessalon, Bruce Mines—all those communities and Sault Ste. Marie have passed resolutions in support of the desire of Blind River to have that road built.

I think they have sent their letters to both the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) and the Minister of Northern Affairs, because I think they're not sure who's really going to make the decision. It's significant that the township of Elliot Lake has agreed that this should be a road that should be built, especially in relation to their housing conditions. I've raised the issue in the House with both ministers and both have indicated that it relates to the Environmental Assessment Board hearings in Elliot Lake and whether or not the housing development can go ahead. That board has now made a decision.

I'd like to ask two questions: First, who is really responsible for determining whether roads in general are built—where they are built, when they will be built, what priority they have? If it is Northern Affairs, what role does Transportation and Communications have in affecting a decision that might be taken by Northern Affairs? Can the minister now give a specific response on Highway 555, the Granary Lake road?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I think the simplest way to respond to the honourable member's question is to examine the estimates of the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

I think we all realize the power lies with who has control of the money. That's pretty basic, really. If the honourable member will examine the estimates—I'm sure he already has—he will see that about $46 million or $47 million is located within the Ministry of Northern Affairs—plain and simple.

We have the responsibility for setting that priority. We have the funds. We work in close consultation with the engineers and the planning branch of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications because we don't want to duplicate what they're doing—because they have that staff in place now as it relates to the southern part of the province. I think it would be a little ridiculous if we set up a large bureaucratic staff to do the work in northern Ontario while there is a different group doing the same work in southern Ontario. This would be a complete waste of the taxpayers' dollars and a duplication of work.

We work very closely with MTC people in the planning and with the information that comes forward from their people and the information that comes forward from our people. But the decision as to when that road will go forward, how it fits into the five-year program, is with the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

I might add that we also have the budget for the resource access road, which is in excess of $7 million. Most of that work is being done by the Ministry of Natural Resources and the co-operation has been 100 per cent as far as we're concerned. It's moving ahead. In fact, MTC has been excellent with us in pulling together their information and our information and in sitting down together and working out what the priorities will be. But the final decision, as I said earlier, is with the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

I have just been informed that the cost of the Granary Lake road is estimated at about $8 million to $12 million, and it would just give a saving of about 12 miles. My deputy informs me that our latest review does not give this particular road construction a high priority. Our recent budget cutbacks have further aggravated the situation, of course. All I can say to the honourable member is that there are no immediate plans at this time to get on with that particular road. Certainly if things change or the budget eases up, we will be glad to reconsider; but at this time it does not have a high priority.

I think the honourable member would sooner see us spending those valuable dollars in other areas of his riding rather than maybe go on with new construction. I am sure there are passing lanes, bridges or something in the immediate area of Blind River that we could do with existing dollars rather than go into a major reconstruction program that would provide a minimum amount of benefit to those people in that area.

Mr. Wildman: I won't prolong this, Mr. Chairman, except to say that I disagree with the minister on that last part. I'm sure the minister has received copies of resolutions—I've received them—of not only Blind River and Elliot Lake but also every community along the north shore right to Sault Ste. Marie in support of the housing problem in Elliot Lake but to the overall economic development of the north shore.

Elliot Lake is expanding, as the minister fully knows, perhaps even to the point in the future of 40,000 people—almost the size of North Bay. Especially with these contracts that have gone through, Elliot Lake is going to be a major centre and the better the communication between Elliot Lake and the very small towns that have suffered economic depression for some time along the north shore, the better the chances of a spinoff of those kinds of economic development of Elliot Lake spreading around; the shorter the communication distance between those communities, the better.

I agree that the mileage difference is not that great; but when you are commuting 24 miles a day, it does work out to be significant over a year. But it is not just the distance; it is also, even though there have been improvements to Highway 108, the rather circuitous route that the people who commute have to follow from Blind River to Elliot Lake. Twenty-four miles a day may not look like much, but over a working year it adds up to a lot of mileage; and at our gasoline rates in Elliot Lake and Blind River, that is a significant amount of money. I won't prolong that; I am just disappointed in the minister's position and I would hope that the ministry will reconsider it, in the next five-year study, for the good of the economic development of the whole north shore.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, I might just point out that the five-year program is under constant review. In other words, we don't plan for five years and then cut it off; it is under constant review. As I said earlier, should there be changes in our budget or should there be new information come forward—and we are very cognizant in this government and this ministry of what is going to happen at Elliot Lake; some of the projections I have seen are for 35,000 people in the mid-1980s.

Mr. Wildman: There's only one way in and out now.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That's right. We are very cognizant of that. We will be watching the situation very closely, because we want to be part and parcel of that massive development that is going on there.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I would like to mention two matters before we go on to the next vote.

One is, what input does the minister have now, or does he have any, in the question of supplying doctors and dentists to northern Ontario? I see Mr. Speaker has come out; it is a topic that is almost as near and dear to his heart as it is to mine.

The parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Health said at the NOMA convention a couple of weeks ago that it was a matter of lifestyle to attract doctors and dentists to northern Ontario. I understand the dental association is working on a program to provide dentists to northern Ontario, but there's still a shortage in places like Emo and Rainy River, while Ignace particularly could use another doctor or two. What input and impact are you having on that particular issue, which is one of the basic necessities in northern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That's a very good point, I'm glad the member for Rainy River brought it up. It's one area that we identified very quickly, after our ministry was established, as an area of priority. One area of priority that came to the surface immediately was the lack of dental facilities in northern Ontario. We had a significant budget and we looked at it very carefully.

I might say as an offshoot that I am particularly pleased to have in my ministry a deputy who was formerly with the Ministry of Education and who was the founder of the northern core of teachers that operates in northern Ontario. That's Tom Campbell's brainchild. He is from Chapleau.

Mr. T. P. Reid: He's a very impressive fellow.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: This problem of needed dentists and doctors blends right in with the concern he responded to when teachers were being called for in the remote areas of northern Ontario. It's an area in which he has expertise and in which we're working very carefully.

To move into the specifics of our efforts, we embarked on an ambitious program to meet with the Ministry of Health on the dental needs of northern Ontario. We indicated to them that we were prepared to buy the hardware, that we had funds and that we would provide the experts and the personnel to operate them, to which they've agreed. I think there's a unit going into Hornepayne, one going into Matheson relatively shortly and one going into Ignace to provide dental services there. We're discussing the area of medical practitioners very seriously with the Ministry of Health. I might give you an insight into some of the things we're thinking about and working on. There's the possibility of setting up bursaries for students over the period of their studies at the medical institutes. They would obtain bursaries from the Ministry of Northern Affairs or from the Ministry of Health on the express understanding they would provide us with X number of years of service in northern Ontario. The deputy is working on that and we're just starting that round of discussions. That's the kind of thinking we're doing because these are the specific and unique needs of northern Ontario.

I think the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Health was quite right when he said that in his riding of Peterborough there is a surplus of dentists. He asked how do you get those people to move up to the places like Ignace, Rainy River and Ear Falls? They're just not interested. They'd sooner operate on a much lower salary and stay in Peterborough. On a general basis, he informed the group at NOMA that when we look at the total population, we're not badly served when it comes to doctors and dentists. The thing is that they're all centred in southern Ontario. That's our problem and that's what we're trying to come to grips with. It's something that we have high on our list.

Mr. T. P. Reid: As the minister knows, the Kenora-Rainy River District Health Council did a report on dental needs of your area any my area and found that the children there had the highest rate of cavities in the province. I forget exactly what the dental term is for cavities. I can remember it sounds obscene.

Mr. Gaunt: Caries.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I hope we could speed this program up. What specific co-ordination is there between your ministry and the Ministry of Health? Secondly, is there any kind of information or recruitment program going on at the colleges of medicine and dentistry? I know there is something going on at some of the medical schools, particularly Hamilton. But does anybody from the Ministry of Health or Northern Affairs go to the colleges around graduation time, or prior to graduation, and say look, this is what is available around northern Ontario; the lifestyle is a little bit better in northern Ontario?

When I talk to officials in the Ministry of Health, I am constantly told there are some dentists in Toronto who have two practices at opposite ends of the city and they bounce back and forth between them just to make an average salary. There is the one problem of the dentists, then; there is the other problem with doctors and the two seem to be different animals, obviously; but where is the co-ordination between your ministry, and is there any active recruitment by either yourselves or the Ministry of Health in this regard?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The actual recruitment and the direct contacts made with the students at the various universities are by the Ministry of Health. We have not moved into that particular field and I don't think that's our role. Our role is to deal with the senior officials of the Ministry of Health, to point out to them what the specific needs of northern Ontario are and to impress upon them the urgency of getting on with the program. In essence, if funds are required, then we have the regional priority budget to give them those dollars to get on with the job.

The discussions at this point in time have been at high level with myself and the minister, and with the deputy and his counter-part in the Ministry of Health. So those discussions are going on. Dr. Copeman, I believe, is the gentleman we have been working with also. He has a very ambitious program, of course.

When specific problems come to our attention, we are immediately in touch with him. The co-operation, here again, has been excellent. We will continue that liaison and that co-ordinating responsibility of putting increased pressure on those people in other ministries to bring about the changes we need regarding the social amenities in northern Ontario.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I am glad to see that Ignace got $95,000 for its dental clinic.

Mr. Germa: In the minister's statement, he said they were acquiring five new dental coaches. I think it is a sad commentary on our times when people in northern Ontario have to receive dental services in such a fashion. The people in northern Ontario are taxpayers just like the people in the southern part of the province. They heavily subsidize these educational institutions. Yet, they don't have access to the benefits that are supposed to accrue as a result of them subsidizing the universities.

Notwithstanding that complaint, I understand the present dental car service is on a circulating system and it takes seven years to go around its route and back to any specific location, which means that anybody in that community would get dental services once every seven years.

That in my mind, is just not adequate. Maybe the minister could tell us what kind of upgrading of service is going to take place as a result of the five new coaches? Are we going to have to wait maybe five years now before the dental coaches comes back to town? I would hope these five new coaches would in fact be able to speed up the circulation of the service.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I think we are very sensitive to the specific needs of those small communities in northern Ontario, but of course we have to be very practical. I think the honourable member fully realizes we couldn't put a major dental facility in every community.

We have assisted, as the member for Rainy River mentioned, in doing something in Ignace when we gave them direct financial assistance of $95,000 to set up a medical clinic which would attract a dentist to their particular area.

We have embarked on a joint study with the district health council in the northwest to further that dental study to which the member for Rainy River referred, in the amount of about $15,000. The eventual goal of our ministry is to provide a total of 10 mobile dental units right across the north. With these 10, and I believe the two or three that are on the railway system, we think we can accelerate the rotation of those units in many areas of northern Ontario.

The emphasis at this point in time will be with the children, there is no question about it. I think that has to be our responsibility and priority. We will go into the smaller communities and deal basically with the school children. The adults will have to make their own way, at least for the time being. On an emergency basis, certainly they will be looked after; but on a general preventive program they will have to wait in line, as the priority will be with the children. But I can assure the member for Sudbury that our goal is to accelerate the rotation with the increased number of mobile dental units.

Mr. Germa: I wonder if the minister has any projection of what the time span will be to complete a circuit.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We have about $600,000 earmarked for those units. I think five were purchased this year and can be brought in later this year or early next year, so that the full ten will be in operation. I think it is fair to say that the Ministry of Health is having some difficulty in providing the dentists for those units. Here again we may be co-operating more fully with them in a financial way to make sure that they are manned. But those are some of the problems.

Mr. Germa: In keeping with the minister's statement that he would welcome suggestions on how to solve some of his problems, we recognize there has been a shortage of medical personnel in northern Ontario since day one. We have done and tried everything to resolve our problem with GPs and dentists; and particularly with specialists, who just will not come up north.

I am reminded of the problem that the Premier of Newfoundland faced a few years ago and how he resolved his problem when he couldn't get medical personnel to go into the isolated outposts of Newfoundland. At that point in time the student doctors in Saint John's were willing to accept free education in Newfoundland. But immediately after they were graduated they ran off to Montreal where the big bucks were and left the people of Newfoundland stranded, and Premier Smallwood had to take some drastic action.

I know it is not your responsibility to run the medical system in Ontario. But in view of your problems, you might suggest to the Minister of Health that he has to start thinking in more positive terms and take a look at what the Premier of Newfoundland did. His program, I understand, was quite successful.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We are very much aware of that. In fact we have not only looked at the Newfoundland situation but also the dental program that is functioning in Saskatchewan. Manitoba, as the honourable member is no doubt aware, has embarked on a dental nurse program within their school system in the northern part of that province. I don't think it is as ambitious as the one in the province of Ontario; nevertheless they are moving ahead, with dental nurses working in co-operation with the schools, and we have looked at it. We are very cognizant of what has happened in other provinces and hopefully we can gain from some of their experiences.

Mr. Hodgson: I attended a convention of NOMA in Thunder Bay a couple of weeks ago on behalf of the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett). There is quite a serious problem in that area, and maybe the minister could shed some light on why it happened. Here in southern Ontario senior citizens apartments are built at an average cost of from $16,000 to $20,000 a unit. Most of them are below the $20,000. In a township like Kee-watin they put out a tender for a senior citizens apartment, it came in at about $26,000. They were asked to re-tender. I had a call yesterday from the mayor and he said that in re-tendering they got a low bid of $28,000 per suite.

Is it because there is a shortage of contractors in the north to build this kind of project? Are the contractors not hungry enough up there? Is there a lot of other development they can put their time into? Is it a soil condition which causes this tender to come in at $28,000, which is quite a high price? What can we do to help them out, because they need senior citizens apartments and there doesn't seem to be anybody willing to build them any cheaper?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, this is an area of real concern to us in the Ministry of Northern Affairs. I think it is fair to say we are concerned, and not only with the problem at Keewatin as it relates to a second call for the 21 senior citizens units there which saw an increase in the tender. I think the feeling was that if we recalled it the contractors, after a very lean winter, would come in with a much lower bid. But that has not happened. It is not happening in a number of cases, I would say to the member for York North. I would just like to relate to the member some of the problems that we are having.

In Hornepayne after some considerable amount of examination and engineering studies with qualified engineers and consultants, we designed an airstrip that would take the northern service. We recently called for tenders. I think the estimated cost of that airport, complete with paving, was something like $750,000. The bid came in at $1.2 million—$500,000 over the estimate. How do you really justify that? Either the estimate was too low or the contractor came in too high. And that was, of course, the lowest bid.

I have to look at the Speaker's riding. I regret that he is not with us today, but I just want to put it on the record, in case he has an opportunity to review my remarks. The town of Schreiber is desperately in need of an extension of sewer facilities to their new arena that they are planning. We worked very closely with that community—with their consultants, with their engineers—and the original suggestion was that they would need about $30,000 to extend the sewer line and water lines to their arena. It's a short distance, but further studies were undertaken and the engineer came up with a figure of about $51,000. That seemed to be not too far apart, so we went along with it. The bids came in at $106,000.

Mr. Gaunt: Double.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Just double what the estimate was. This is of real concern to the municipalities. I know the mayor of Keewatin, Bob Kahoot, is most concerned; because his community is in dire need of senior citizens units and the Ministry of Housing has, of course, set a level of costs which is reasonable right across the province, but here we are in northern Ontario coming in at a rate something like $5,000 or $6,000 per unit more.

Mr. Hodgson: About $7,000.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: About $7,000 a unit more. I wish I had the answer. Perhaps the contractors are in the position of not being competitive; if there isn't enough competition it could be one of our problems. I would hope that the estimates are not coming in too low for the development of northern Ontario. We have to accept the fact there are increased and added costs in developing programs and services for northern Ontario; but I fail to see that and I fail to accept that difference, that wide difference between the estimate and the actual cost. It's just causing us some concern.

It's one area which, I can assure the members, we are going to have a very serious look at. Right now we've got three major projects—I guess it's four because there are two projects in Hornepayne. The major town hall concept which has been called twice—and the second time it came in considerably higher; and the Schreiber situation which I think we were going to agree to because we feel there is some urgency to get on with servicing for the arena which could be built later this year. [12:30]

Keewatin is another area that gives us concern. I have to say to the member for York North that the conditions in Keewatin are tough, there's no question about it. The soil conditions are not as nice as you would find down here in—

Mr. Hodgson: The sunny south.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The sunny south; I suppose you might say that today, and just today. Nevertheless, I just find it hard to accept that great difference. It's an area we're going to spend some time looking at to see if we can come up with some solution. I hope we wouldn't have to modify and reduce the quality of services in northern Ontario because of these high costs.

I think we as northerners—and I would hope the honourable member would agree—should be entitled to the same level and the same quality of services and buildings that you have in southern Ontario. I won't accept anything less. Nevertheless, the spread in costs is giving us a great deal of concern. I just don't have the answers to these problems at my fingertips.

The mayor of Hornepayne recently expressed his concern—I'm glad the member for Algoma (Mr. Wildman) is back; I was mentioning both the Hornepayne projects, the town hall and the airport, of which I am sure he is aware, coming in at a cost so much higher than we estimated.

Mr. Wildman: The town centre.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It certainly disrupts the budgeting process, I can assure you of that.

When you have X number of dollars and X number of projects and then find that you don't have the dollars you originally thought you had; that is one area I can assure the members we'll be looking at very carefully.

Mr. Wildman: In relation to that, can the minister indicate the differences between the estimates on the Hornepayne airport and the actual costs they are looking at now, and what the ministry's plans are in relation to that?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I did in my earlier remarks. I'm sorry the honourable member wasn't here. As I indicated, our estimate was about $750,000 and I think the bid came in at $1,200,000. Because of our desire to get on with the Hornepayne airstrip—there's no question about that. We've established the need, we think it is certainly warranted, and we have budgeted certain funds for this year—it may well be, as I said to the member for Rainy River, that we'll have to drop off certain parts of the project, such as the paving and maybe a certain amount of clearing.

I met with the low bidder in Timmins yesterday, Mr. LaBelle, and I expressed my concern to him about the high cost of the development of the Hornepayne airstrip. He indicated to me that he is prepared to look at dropping some portions of the project in order to get on with it this year. One, as I said, is the paving of the strip itself, and I think the other involves 300 acres of clearing that they wanted, on which he came in with a figure of about $500 an acre.

My immediate response was, having been involved in clearing in the timber business myself, that $500 an acre just for straight clearing was a little high. His immediate response to me was: "We put that bid in and never forget the fact that we were still the lowest bidder. I don't know what the other fellows bid we were the lowest. We put it in at $500 an acre because of the demands placed on us by other government ministries. We really don't know what the Ministry of Natural Resources will want and what the Ministry of the Environment will force us to do. Can we actually burn the timber? Do we have to bury it? Will we have to do all these things to meet the environmental requirements of a number of ministries? To take that risk, we have to have the dollars to do it." He admitted that it was an exceptionally high figure.

Mr. Gaunt: That's the cost of too much government.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The cost of too much government? I think you're right on. I hope the honourable member for Rainy River is listening to me. The more deregulation we have, the better.

Item 1 agreed to.

On item 2, analysis, research and planning:

Mr. T. P. Reid: During the minister's estimates a few months ago I asked him if his staff would provide a list of the studies that were going on within his ministry, or which had been commissioned from other ministries.

We discussed one that had been under consideration or had been done in regard to labourers or working people commuting to their jobs over relatively long distances. Although I haven't gone back to look at Hansard, I was under the impression that those studies or that particular study would be made available to us. It has been some six months or so and we haven't seen that study.

I have also had a question on the order paper since April 13, asking that all studies that you are doing within your ministry be tabled in the House. I am with the minister on this one, and with Mr. Germa from Sudbury, in that we seem to study ourselves to death, but there are some areas that are valid for research and I certainly would like to know what they are. Can we get that list and can we have those studies tabled so that information is available to us all?

In regard to that, I would like to know specifically if there are any studies going on, let's say of a micro-economic nature that deal particularly with small industries? I think all our concern in northern Ontario is with the fact that we are so dependent basically on one industry, usually forest or mining or perhaps tourism. In the case of mines, when the mine is depleted or becomes uneconomic, there isn't much left for people to do except to move out. The same is true to some extent with forest industries where the equipment is out of date and the technology hasn't been updated.

What I would like to ask specifically, therefore, is has your ministry done any studies, taking one small industry, that might be viable in any number of northern communities? What I am thinking of specifically, and the minister himself is aware of this, is that in northern Minnesota and northern Michigan, which have the same relative transportation problems and the same relative geographical problems with distance from markets and distance from some of their sources of supply, to my knowledge there are certain industries that seem to be able to develop and grow and compete all over the North American continent.

I can think of Marvin Windows at Warroad, and there is a hockey stick factory at Warroad. There are all kinds of small communities which have one or two of these small industries that seem to be able to survive, despite their distances from markets. Their situation, as I said, is the same as many of our communities in northern Ontario. There is another one, I believe, at Hibbing, in which there is a canoe manufacturer that ships all over North America.

Has your ministry done any micro-studies of these specific industries? Our study on the strategy for northwestern Ontario, as has been indicated, is more of a macro-look at the region as a whole. I think where we have been missing the boat is that we haven't got down to the specifics, right down to the small industries that might be able to employ 15 or 20 or 30 people with the concomitant spinoff, rather than looking at large projects, like Bending Lake or some kind of industry like that. What we need really is smaller industries to cushion the blow when something happens, for instance as in Sudbury. There is nothing to soak up the people who become unemployed. In the case of smaller communities, like Atikokan, there really isn't anywhere else for those people to go but to move completely out of the community.

If there were a number of small industries, there would be an opportunity for them, one would think or hope, to soak up some of the excess labour. The question is have you got any studies of that sort?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We have embarked on a number of areas with regard to the general economic activity of northern Ontario.

I might just remind the honourable member that in the field of tourism, as an example, a number of ministers and ministries have been talking to the tourist industry of northern Ontario, saying: "The time has come in our life when we should start taking a look at the emphasis we have placed on the wild-life of northern Ontario. Let's move into a different field and shift our emphasis away from the hunting and fishing lodges that we have. Maybe there are other areas to go into. Maybe we could go more into a family type of vacation. Maybe we should promote more of the historical aspects of northern Ontario. Maybe we should promote more of a recreational type of a holiday."

The industry immediately responded and said to us: "It's great for you fellows to talk that way, but what security is there, or facts and figures do we have, that if we did make this shift, there would be the economic strength and the base for us to continue to make a living here in northern Ontario?" In response to that, we provided NOTO with about $85,000 to do a study in that particular area to see what's in place today, whether that shift is warranted, what would happen if that shift did come about, and whether the tourist industry could support and maintain it.

The other study we're involved in is the Big Trout Lake employment strategy study—in the Big Trout Lake area, believe it or not—with another group of ministries.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I'm glad you can get something out of it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Here, again, we're looking at that particular area as it relates to transportation and to creating a broader economic base.

As I pointed out earlier, Manitoulin is a typical example. Again, I have to say to the honourable member: Our emphasis has been in some instances to put the emphasis and the onus on the local municipality, because they have the interest at heart, as I said, with regard to Atikokan. Manitoulin has brought nine municipalities together. We have assisted them with some financial resources, not only to look at their present industries—and they're small industries; there are only four or five people in many of these places—to give them some assistance and expertise, but also to look at other industries that could be brought into Manitoulin Island. We are looking at this as a pilot project.

In Sudbury, and I hate to belabour you with the problems of Sudbury, but they're very real—

Mr. Wildman: Don't be gloom and doom now.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, we're not; we're being very positive. I think, as I said in my opening remarks, the attitude has changed tremendously in Atikokan. They're very positive and very sincere.

Mr. T. P. Reid: In Atikokan or Sudbury?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: In Sudbury; I'm sorry. Did I say Atikokan?

Mr. T. P. Reid: They've always been positive in Atikokan.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, they have.

We have two major studies going on in Sudbury; there's the 2001 conference where the community will look at itself to diversify its present economic base, and the $300,000 we've given the regional municipality to do something in the field of agriculture and to look at import substitution. There are a number of products which they rightly felt could be manufactured right in the Sudbury basin and could be used not only in the Sudbury basin but perhaps exported to other parts of northern Ontario. I'd like to see that expanded into the northwest region. A place like Thunder Bay could look at that whole region again in import substitution; there is no question about that, we'd be glad to look at that.

We have an industrial opportunity study going on in the Sault Ste. Marie area which we've funded to the tune of about $50,000. In the field of recreation, we're also working with Canadore College in the study of cross-country skiing as a tourist attraction for that particular area.

So we're involved in a number of areas. I would encourage the municipalities to come forward, as Atikokan is doing, because if you're going to get the weight and the interest and concern of an area, they should be involved. I don't think it should be our responsibility to superimpose ourselves on them with an idea and say, "Here, you make it work." I'd like to see the idea ferment within that community, and if they need some resources in a number of different ways, then we'd be glad to look at it. But that's the thrust that we'd like to go with, and we would give them every encouragement that we could.

[12:45]

Mr. T. P. Reid: The minister has done it again, with his Pollyanna outlook—which I appreciate, I'm an optimist myself. But do you think you could try to answer my specific question? Do you have any studies going on on specific industries as to why some of these small industrial concerns—like Marvin Windows in Warroad or any of these small industries employing 15 or 20 or more people, a hockey stick factory, a canoe paddle factory—have been successful in other places having similar circumstances to Atikokan, Fort Frances, Rainy River and such communities? Is there anything of that aspect going on?

I look over to my right and I see three blank faces. What is the answer?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We have not embarked on any specific examinations of any specific hockey stick factory, say in that field. I think if that thrust were to come forward from a municipality, specifically like Atikokan, saying, "We'd like to look at ways and means that we could use the warm water from the Marmion Lake hydro development and we'd like to"—

Mr. T. P. Reid: They're doing that?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, they are doing that; it's the kind of thing, where the thrust and the initiative come from the local municipality, we would like to do.

I think that responsibility should lie with the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Rhodes) since he's directly involved with specifics. He would know what the market potential is, and certainly the Ministry of Natural Resources would look at the resource aspect of it. That's an area he'd be looking at. We'd be involved in a very general way.

I might say before I sit down that the report to which the member made reference a few moments ago will be tabled next week.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Will all the reports you've been doing be tabled?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I appreciate what the minister has said but I'm not sure he understands fully what I'm saying. He may be right that perhaps this is a responsibility of the Ministry of Industry and Tourism.

Mr. Gaunt: With all that hot water you might have greenhouses.

Mr. T. P. Reid: My friend from Huron-Bruce, who obviously comes to the point much quicker than the Minister of Northern Affairs, has indicated that with the warm water Atikokan could have a greenhouse industry. That's something they're looking at and have been looking at primarily on their own.

I don't want to belabour this point but I feel that maybe the minister didn't quite grasp what I was getting at. Maybe it's something that should be farmed out to perhaps Lakehead University or even Confederation College in Thunder Bay. When you come to set up a business like window manufacturing or a hockey stick factory, all these things, using the natural resources we have in abundance, we always run into the problems of markets, geography, transportation costs and so on. Nobody really has any answers other than to say it's too damned expensive to do it.

My point is that they're able to do it in the United States, in these northern border states. Somebody must look at them on the basis of one industry, rather than sort of the whole general sweep that we talk about in the Design for Development program; look at one specific industry and study it, analyse it to find out what the factors are that make it a viable operation in Warroad—I keep coming back to that—or Hibbing, or any of these places in northern Minnesota.

We can then relate that to places like Sudbury, like Atikokan, like Rainy River and find out what are the factors that make it economical there. I'm sure we'd probably find the same factors in our areas, but there must be a vital ingredient missing somewhere or other problems such as cost. Let's at least identify them and find out what the differences are on an individual basis. I think that's the only way we're going to get anywhere.

The minister talked about the Sudbury conference. I've read the report. There were some good ideas that came out of that, particularly in relation to import substitution. I think there's a whole range of products that could be manufactured in some of these smaller communities across northern Ontario. I would like to suggest to you that maybe one of your more worthwhile studies might be on an individual enterprise in northern Minnesota so that we can relate that to northern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That point is very well taken, there is no question about that. There have been a number of small industries established in northern Ontario. In my own area, the Naden boat factory in Vermilion Bay bought the patent for Naden boats, aluminum boats. I get very disturbed when—that plant employs anywhere up to 25 people—I go 20 to 25 miles away from Vermilion Bay and see beside the road in some dealer's yard, Lund or Starcraft boats, identical to what is being built 25 miles away at Vermilion Bay, imported from the United States, really. Maybe it's a better boat, and the cost is a little cheaper, but yet there should be a loyalty to the supplier or product or something, I don't know what it is, but sometimes you have to look at the industry. I have made the point to the industry, let's support local industry. We don't even do it up there sometimes.

The purchase of stoves is a good example. In Kenora, there is a small factory producing wood stoves and it's doing very well, but now it finds itself competing with prices in Quebec or in BC where they are building stoves, maybe a little differently. But here he is established locally. Sometimes you can't see the forest for the trees, and you know something that is farther away always seems to be a little better, but that's another issue.

Mr. Gaunt: He should charge a higher price.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Maybe he should, that is right. He is employing local people and I wish the general public would look at that because really it all helps to maintain our economy in northern Ontario.

I will consider that suggestion. I think the suggestion that we look at universities, to review that in minute detail, is an area we should be thinking about helping with.

The member I am sure is aware of the sash and door plant, that is anxious to get under way, and I hope he is giving it his full support, I believe it is in Pinewood. That gentleman is anxious to get running. He assures me he has the markets, he has the product, but he is short of capital. I understand he is working very closely with NODC so that anything we can do of course to help that kind of an industry in a small community is most advantageous.

As was pointed out by one of the members from the third party, while we can look at the large mining operations and the large pulp and paper mills, the small factory that employs five or 10 people is a big factor in some of our small towns. There is just no question about that and we are trying to get that point across to the other ministries. Even the moving of government offices from small communities has an effective impact, so we are very cognizant of these special needs.

Mr. Germa: Sometimes when you get too close to the picture, Mr. Minister, you can't see the trees because of the bush in front of you.

Mr. Ruston: He's already used that.

Mr. Duksza: It is a new phrase.

Mr. Germa: That is how it is sometimes. We are all familiar with the problems and maybe a reckless and innovative approach has to be taken. Some person not familiar with the problems might see potential in northern Ontario. Maybe we just don't see it. I am thinking of some people who seem to be able to make something out of nothing. Japan, for instance, is a major force in the world, without obvious resources, through their ability as entrepreneurs. They have been able to compete and put things together.

Maybe we should be thinking in a sort of a reckless fashion and we should find ourselves probably one of the most vicious entrepreneurs we can find; probably he would be a Japanese, a really vicious one. You would give him probably one of the worst townships in northern Ontario. You put him in this miserable township, with a few willow trees, a bunch of poplar trees, a few wolves, a couple of moose, a deer or two, the odd bobcat, a rabbit and you tell this man, "Take a look at this township. What would you do, Mr. Entrepreneur, to make a living and create some jobs in this circumscribed area of the township?" This is just a thought I've been having. We don't seem to be having the answers. The traditional answers we're searching for in such areas as tourism are not working.

I don't have too much faith in that thrust, because there are too many other exciting places in the world for tourists to go. You know the deterrents to tourism in northern Ontario—the blackflies, the mosquitoes and the severe winter weather. Even if we do develop tourism for a couple of months in the summer I think that is not a viable alternative. We have to find some way of identifying the potential which is on that land in northern Ontario.

I think you'll have to do it in a microscopic fashion such as that. You will get someone who has never seen the place before, has no preconceived ideas of the hazards or the pitfalls that he might stumble into, and who knows?—he might come out with the answer and that township might blossom. Then all we'd have to do is repeat it in all the other townships.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It would be good if the member can find us an entrepreneur of that calibre.

I want to touch on the comment the member made with regard to tourism. I can't accept in total his comment that tourism doesn't mean that much to us in northern Ontario, because I think it does. One thing the tourist industry has difficulty doing is proving to the public at large the impact that industry really has on northern Ontario. We see all kinds of figures being poured out. We've heard all kinds of statements being made of what the tourist industry means to northern Ontario in financial return and, of course, in employment, but there's always that doubt that it is not doing what they say it is. I'm convinced that it is; there's no question about that.

I made an effort this spring to accelerate my promotional travels in the United States trying to get more tourists into northern Ontario. My first venture was down to Fort Lauderdale to meet with the travel agents of that area—I think there were about 150 in total—where in co-operation with the Manitoba government and the federal government we were kicking off a summer package tour. It would see tourists coming from Fort Lauderdale to Winnipeg and into northwestern Ontario for a 10-day trip.

It came to us loud and clear from the major travel agents that there were hundreds and hundreds of people who were anxious to go north. There was the uncertainty of the Middle East. There was uncertainty about going to Portugal, to France and to other countries. That was losing its appeal, not only because of the political activities in those countries, but because of the extremely high cost. Many of the tourists were looking to the North American continent. They made it very clear to us that we were missing the boat by not expounding the excellent potential we have here in Canada. Of course, with the premium on the American dollar and with the seven per cent reduction on the sales tax on accommodation, it made it very attractive for American tourists to come to Ontario this year. So we have embarked on a very ambitious campaign.

I'd note that in co-operation with my colleague, the member for Sault Ste. Marie, we also went to Minneapolis and to Milwaukee to meet—

Mr. T. P. Reid: But they don't go to the sport shows.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We were at both sport shows—both of us. We met with the tourist operators, met with the media and the travel agents in both of those areas and did a selling job. I'm convinced that we will have a bang-up year in northern Ontario as it relates to tourism. There's just no question about it.

As I said earlier, the industry itself must find some way to prove to the public in general that they have an impact, that they contribute handsomely to the economy. I think once they've done that in a positive way we'll get that acceptance. In other words, there's that feeling that they're not contributing what they say they're contributing, and I share their concern.

Item 2 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: I'm advised the House has another order of business before 1 o'clock. It might be an appropriate time for the committee to rise and report.

[1:00]

On motion by Hon. Mr. Bernier, the committee of supply reported progress.

ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I beg to inform the House that in the name of Her Majesty, the Queen, the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor has been pleased to assent to certain bills in her chambers.

Clerk of the House: The following are the titles of the bills to which Her Honour has assented:

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, MAY 29, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

DEATH OF ALDO MORO

Mr. Speaker: I would like to inform the honourable members that I have received a reply from the President of the Senate of Italy in response to the resolution that was passed during the unfortunate incident concerning the former Prime Minister, Aldo Moro. I would like to read it for the benefit of the members.

"Dear Mr. Speaker,

The resolution passed by the Legislative Assembly of the province of Ontario for the tragic death of the Honourable Aldo Moro is a most significant tribute to the memory of a great statesman and a great friend. May I ask you to accept personally and to extend to your honourable colleagues the feelings of our deep gratitude for your sincere participation in our sorrow in this very sad occasion.

"Yours very sincerely,

"Amintore Fanfani, President of the Senate of the Republic of Italy."

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

CANADA WEEK

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'd like to share with members of the House the plans for the Ontario government's participation in helping to celebrate our 111th birthday.

Mr. Peterson: Are you that old?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Canada's 111th birthday.

Mr. Peterson: I thought it was the number of years you had been in office.

Hon. Mr. Davis: First of all, it is our intention to issue a proclamation declaring the week of June 25 to July 1 as Canada Week in Ontario. Through this proclamation we will be calling upon citizens at every level, municipalities, community groups and private organizations across the province to organize events that will recall our country's great past, rejoice in its vibrant present and express confidence in its equally vital future.

A feature of this year's celebrations is the initiative taken by the federal government to link various provinces with each other so that through their shared celebrations Canadians may come to know one another better no matter where they might live and no matter how different their lifestyles.

I will say at the outset we are delighted that Ontario has been linked in this celebration to Saskatchewan. I'm sure I speak for all the citizens of Ontario when I say we look forward to this opportunity to learn more about our fellow Canadians in that proud province. I know from the start that we will like what we see and learn because many of us in the past have had the opportunity to visit Saskatchewan and enjoy the warm hospitality of its citizens.

I think some here, who may still be inclined to view Saskatchewan as vast waving fields of wheat, will be pleasantly surprised to learn of its cosmopolitan cities, centres of learning and cultural activities.

Mr. Cassidy: And excellent politics.

Mr. Martel: That just about killed you.

Hon. Mr. Davis: My intention was not to make it clear that this relationship with Saskatchewan didn't extend into the area of government.

Mr. Cassidy: I didn't want it to be un-noted.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think some in that province, who have visions of factory chimneys and skyscrapers when they think of our province, will also be surprised to learn of our great agricultural heritage—

Mr. Bradley: Fast disappearing.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—and our vast and rugged hinterland which still challenges the adventurous. The entire exercise, I am sure, will reveal that we share much in common and that where we differ it is in such a way as to earn each other's respect and support.

Towards this end, the government is sponsoring, along with the Ontario Committee for Canadian Unity, a special Ontario-Saskatchewan exhibition. This will be officially opened in the Macdonald Gallery by Her Honour, the Lieutenant Governor, at noon on June 27, and I would invite those members who can to attend on that occasion.

We also intend to adopt our postage meter during the month of June so that all government mail will carry the imprint of "Semaine du Canada Week 1978" with the hope of creating awareness of this very special time.

As well, the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells) is writing the chairmen of school boards and the directors of education across the province encouraging them to develop events and celebrations that will enable our young people to participate fully in Canada's birthday. We are suggesting, because schools will likely be closed during that week, that they might hold their celebrations in advance, so as not to interfere with exams.

As a way to encourage further interest among the young people, a Canada Week poster contest will be held in all elementary schools. The four winners of this contest will go on an exchange visit to Saskatchewan.

Of course, we here in Ontario will hold our traditional July 1 celebrations at Queen's Park complete with hot dogs, entertainment and other ceremonies to suitably mark this historic day.

These, then, are some of the ways the 111th birthday of our great nation will be celebrated. I am one of those who approaches these festivities in a positive manner, viewing them as an excellent opportunity for all of us here in Ontario and Quebec and across the land to demonstrate our support and gratitude for a national framework that has done so much to fulfil the expectations of the people. In this spirit, I urge the members here to play their part in making these celebrations a success in their communities across this province.

We have much to be thankful for as Canadians, for what we have accomplished in the past and for what awaits us in the future. The elements of citizenship, of nationhood that we share, those attributes of compassion and goodwill, and our eagerness to assure equal opportunities to all who have joined in the great adventure that is Canada, make this so.

TEACHER DISPUTES

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, during the past two weeks, on several occasions in this House I have been asked about the negotiations between the Wentworth County Board of Education and its secondary school teachers and the Essex County Board of Education and its secondary school teachers.

I am pleased to advise the members of the House that an agreement has been reached between the Wentworth County Board of Education and its secondary school teachers in which the contract for 1977-78 has been finalized. In due course, the parties will return to the table with Mr. Martin Teplitsky as mediator to resolve the contract for 1978-79. Should negotiations be unsuccessful, Mr. Teplitsky will issue an arbitrator's award. I understand the teachers have returned to the schools today and that classes will resume on Tuesday, May 30.

Also, on Friday, May 26, the Essex County Board of Education and its secondary school teachers reached a tentative agreement for a contract running from September 1, 1977 to August 31, 1980. The parties will be meeting to vote on the terms of the contract on Tuesday, May 30. If it is approved, the schools will reopen on Wednesday, May 31.

I would like to congratulate the parties in both of these disputes for having reached settlements within the options available to them under the School Boards and Teachers Collective Negotiations Act, 1975.

ORAL QUESTIONS

CHAIN STORE DISCOUNTS

Mr. S. Smith: I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food. This is a question we were chatting about in committee but never did have an answer. It had to do with his reference in the House to volume discounts as being an acceptable procedure.

Could the minister explain to the House what in his view constitutes a volume discount? In particular, does he differentiate between a discount which is genuinely related to the benefits of doing business in bulk or in larger volume as opposed to a discount which is a consequence of coercion—one which is allegedly related to volume but is really related to control of the retail market by one or two or three large chains?

Can he tell us, for instance, by way of explaining this, what he in his experience would regard as a reasonable discount on milk between a chain store and an independent store, given the true benefits of doing business in volume?

Hon. W. Newman: My comments when talking about volume discounts, were related to other commodities and situations where there is a backup of commodities. I'd like to point out to the Leader of the Opposition that my view has been, and will always be, that if there is any illegal or unfair trade practice in the agricultural food industry, we'll certainly take the appropriate action.

I can go back in history to show where we have stepped in and the Ontario Food Council has taken action on several occasions. I believe those came up in committee. When you're specifically talking about volume discounts and how they relate to milk, I suppose the analogy would be that you pay more for a bag of corn than you would for a truckload of corn.

I would point out to the honourable member that as far as volume discounts are concerned, and I assume he is talking of discounts between the processor and the chain or whichever other group, there are several factors that come into play; in this particular instance, the size of the truck that's handling it, the amount of products he is handling, what kind of milk is being handled, whether it's two per cent or 3.25 per cent, or whether he is carrying other commodities.

Those are only a few of the concerns as far as volume discount is concerned. All these have to be taken into consideration. What is the credit risk? What do the processors need as far as volume is concerned? The type and size of the store? Whether they unload on the platform in front of the store or actually put them on the shelves? There are many factors as far as volume discounts are concerned. I just mentioned a few of them.

Of course, volume discounts do reflect the economics of scale and are common in business. There are many factors, but as far as anything that is an illegal or unethical practice is concerned, as I said before, I am opposed to them. I gave you an example of a few of the factors that are taken into consideration in volume discounts on milk and probably other commodities too.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: There is no disagreement between myself and what the minister has said, but could the minister give us some rough figures as to what should be the differential in price based on the benefits of economies of scale between selling milk to a chain store or selling milk to a smaller independent in the same area?

Does the minister have any ball-park figures to guide him? Is there any number that would lead the minister to wonder whether this was really a volume discount or a form of coercion because of control of the retail market? Does the minister draw that distinction in his own mind? Does he have some rough ball-park figure he can give us?

Hon. W. Newman: It's very difficult to give an actual figure of what the volume discount rate should be. As I said, it depends on many factors, and I've outlined six or seven for the member. It might vary from store to store or from a small independent, or depend on the volume, the truck, the size or whether they're carrying anything else. It's pretty hard to say.

Mr. S. Smith: What, two per cent, five per cent?

Hon. W. Newman: No, I'm not going to give you ball-park figures because it can vary from area to area.

Mr. Cassidy: Is the minister aware that Dominion Stores, for example, charges a $5,000 listing fee in order that a particular grocery product can be listed in its largest stores and that the listing fee is more substantial in order to have that same product carried by all the various sizes of supermarkets which the Dominion Stores chain has? Can he say what conceivable benefit, if any, that it is to the consumers of the province of Ontario and if it is of no benefit to the consumer is it not simply a means of augmenting Dominion Stores profits?

Hon. W. Newman: No, I wouldn't say that. But Loblaws are coming to our committee discussions tomorrow night and, hopefully, Dominion Stores will be there either tomorrow night or Wednesday morning. We will be questioning them at some length on shelf space. I don't know which particular products the honourable member is talking about with regard to the listing fee. Is it a farm product or some other product? If it's some other product, does the honourable member wish to tell me which one?

Mr. Cassidy: Processed products, the minister should know.

Hon. W. Newman: I beg your pardon? Oh, yes, they only have about 10,000 items in each store and I should know them all. I don't know them all.

Mr. Lewis: That's a weakness.
[2:15]

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: Is the minister drawing a distinction between a genuine discount related to the benefits and the economies of scale versus a so-called volume discount which is really a consequence of control of the retail market? Does the minister draw that distinction, first of all, and if he does draw that distinction, what guides him in deciding when that guideline has somehow or other been exceeded? For instance, does he think it's reasonable that in the case of milk there should be a discount on the processor by the chain store of somewhere between 19 per cent and 21 per cent and possibly considerably higher than that in the price of milk? Does that strike the minister as truly related to the benefits of doing business in volume?

Hon. W. Newman: As I have said, there are many factors in the chain store—whether the cooling devices are put in, whether they are put in the store each day, how they are handled and what the date and the practice are. For example, the plastic milk cartons might be much more costly to produce than the plastic pouches. Therefore, under those circumstances—

Mr. S. Smith: It's the same product we are talking about.

Hon. W. Newman: I know we are talking about the same product, but the fact that they could package it a lot cheaper may mean they can give a much better discount because they can do it in the pouches rather than the plastic containers.

Mr. S. Smith: It's the same package and the minister knows it. Does he draw the distinction or not?

Hon. W. Newman: I outlined it all to the Leader of the Opposition. Quite obviously, he doesn't know what it's all about.

Mr. S. Smith: We look forward to finding out whether the minister draws the distinction or not. So far he has avoided that question several times.

UNIVERSITY FUNDING

Mr. S. Smith: I will ask the Minister of Colleges and Universities a question. Is there any thought in his ministry at the moment in terms of possibly changing the wolf bounty method of financing universities and colleges which at present exists, where basically, how many students an institution can capture, presumably still in the live state at least at the moment, determines its budget for the year? Is there any possibility of changing that so that we don't get into the kinds of practices which have been referred to recently by Mr. Kent, the U of T director of admissions, where people from universities and colleges are competing by phoning people to try to get them into their university for purposes of government grants?

An hon. member: They used to do that just with football players.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think it would be timely to offer the leader of the Liberal Party an opportunity to come over and go into the method of financing in detail. Obviously, he doesn't understand it. I am appalled at the question.

Mr. Kerrio: The big problem is that you are not giving us all the information.

Mr. Swart: He's ready to come over permanently any time.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: May I illustrate the point this way? Last year in August the numbers of dollars allocated to the system for the next year were totally unrelated to the numbers of students that would be in the system this year. There is no wolf bounty. I think that is a very unfortunate choice of words on the member's part. There is indeed some competition between one university and the other but not for the whole system. I think the interuniversity competition is not all that serious. It has some advantages.

If the member wants to understand the full system of funding, we will be glad to set some time aside for him. There is in place right now a funding mechanism that gives four years buffering to the system. That's true, and it's very valuable, but it certainly is not on the head count as the member suggested.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: Given the fact that, slip year or no slip year financing, we still are dealing with a basic income unit method of financing, can the minister comment on the comments made by Mr. Kent, who says in his opinion a number of universities have admission and liaison approaches inconsistent with the spirit of the guidelines? He says the most visible violation is mass telephone campaigns, in which one or two universities are getting involved, phoning hundreds of applicants before the June 16 date the universities have agreed on for issuing acceptances and so on.

Is this a healthy atmosphere? Does the minister regard this as a healthy sort of free enterprise attitude? Shouldn't the universities have some method of financing that isn't so totally dependent upon the number of people they can attract into their places?

Mr. Breithaupt: Some of them get an ear from each.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The university system is not dependent upon the number they attract. It's entirely dependent upon the allocation of dollars by the government of this province to the system as a whole. In fairness, the leader of the Liberal Party has put two issues together which do not mix too well, if he does it that way. The BIU method is one of distribution and not funding. There is a very vast difference between a distribution mechanism and a funding mechanism.

Mr. Cooke: Based on what the minister has just said, does he remember his news conference on March 16, 1978, when he tried to justify the cutbacks in the university by saying that for the last 12 years the BIUs have kept up with the rate of inflation? How does the minister justify that statement at his March 16 news conference with what he said just now, that the BIUs are a method of distribution and not a method of determining needs of universities?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Very simply, one is a historical review of the facts as they were presented to this province throughout the years. There once was a time when the BIU method indeed was an open-ended program for financing; it has not been for some considerable period of time, and it certainly isn't in effect today.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Accepting the fine semantic point made by the minister that the total amount of funds going to the university system may not in his mind be related to the total number of students in the whole system, nonetheless does he not see that for the individual university the amount of money that a particular university will get from the funds that are generally available is in fact dependent upon the number of students they can attract and in that sense bears a distinct resemblance to the bounty system?

Mr. Breithaupt: You're saying the system follows instead of leads.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: One university may be able to take a larger portion of the budget than another; that's true.

Mr. S. Smith: Precisely. We are not talking about the total budget.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: But the budget will not increase if they all become aggressive. That is the big difference.

Mr. Breithaupt: But the market share differs.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: In other words, the number of dollars is assigned well in advance of the numbers reported to the ministry. It is not an open-ended system; if there is competition between the University of Toronto, for example, and the University of Western Ontario, so be it.

Mr. S. Smith: It's a wolf bounty with a limit in the total.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: It is not a wolf bounty. I would hope that the member opposite would expect the universities to want to have as many students as they possibly can. We give the number of dollars that are possible within our priorities; and it is my hope that the universities, given that large number of dollars, would attempt to educate as many of our young students as possible. Why not? Can the member opposite think of a better way of spending our tax dollars than in educating our young people?

Mr. S. Smith: But they don't create new applicants; they just—

Mr. Bounsall: Supplementary: Would the minister not agree that there are some advantages to be gained in some instances by competition among universities for students, and that this just illustrates good private enterprise practices, which the leader of the Liberal Party seems always to have espoused?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Depending on the issue.

Mr. Van Horne: You're worse than Mike Pelyk; you don't know which colour sweater they are wearing.

Mr. Bounsall: Furthermore, it has been demonstrably proven, where universities have admitted adult students with not necessarily the most correct backgrounds for entrance, that those adult students have done a remarkably good academic job at our universities by the time their courses have ended.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Yes.

Mr. S. Smith: Don't you talk to each other in Windsor?

Mr. Sweeney: Given the description the minister gave to my leader's previous question, how do universities like Brock and Trent, small arts colleges, possibly compete for moneys from the total fund with, say, the University of Toronto, in view of the recruitment procedures being followed by them?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: For the past number of years, the Ontario Council on University Affairs has recognized, and therefore recommended, that an emerging grant be given to the universities in question. Trent, especially, last year had a 14 per cent larger grant than the competitive universities that the member named; for instance, the University of Toronto. This year it's a 12 per cent increase.

Council has said it thinks that before long those supplementary grants should be phased out. However, at this time there still are supplementary grants. I am sure council is taking a very careful look at the whole process of supplementary grants to our university system.

Going back to the question raised by the member's leader, it simply results in this equation: The more students, the smaller the BIU value per student, equals the same total at the end.

INJURED WORKERS

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Minister of Labour arising out of the absolutely deplorable incident which took place at 1:30 this afternoon in the offices of the Minister of Labour, in which a number of injured workmen were first pushed and were then apparently hit with billy clubs by Metropolitan Toronto police who were seeking to move them out of the building. There were people who, in fact, were bloodied and arrested in that particular incident, an epileptic was hit—

Mr. Speaker: Question?

Mr. Cassidy: I would like the minister to say whether that intervention by the Metropolitan Toronto police, with all of the tragic consequences, was, in fact, requested or ordered by the Minister of Labour?

Hon. B. Stephenson: No. The incident did not take place in the offices of the Ministry of Labour. It took place in the lobby of the building at 400 University Avenue in which the ministry is situated but which is not owned by the Ministry of Labour.

Mr. Martel: Move out then.

Hon. B. Stephenson: The owners of the building request this kind of policing at any time there is a demonstration within that building, because they have other tenants in the building. The details which have been given by the leader of the New Democratic Party are almost as inaccurate at the statements he made in the Sunday Star yesterday, to my knowledge.

I am aware that there was an invasion of the lobby of the building. The demonstration had taken place outside, at which time—

Mr. Lewis: An invasion? They were allowed in.

Mr. Wildman: Did they use amphibious craft?

Hon. B. Stephenson: This morning, both the former leader of the New Democratic Party and I spoke to the group outside the building, in a very large area which is outside the entrance to the building. After my departure, apparently the demonstrators went into the lobby and they were attempting, I gather, to move farther into the building. The police were in a line and they were rushed by the demonstrators.

Mr. Martel: On their crutches?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I have no idea of the details of the accidents which occurred, but they were not, in fact those that the—

Mr. Lewis: Excuse me, the police were rushed by the injured workmen?

Hon. B. Stephenson: The original details which have been given to me were not, in fact, those provided by the Leader of the Opposition, who yesterday made some statements in the Sunday Star of which he should be totally ashamed—

Mr. S. Smith: Correct the record. The leader of the third party, please.

Hon. B. Stephenson: —because he has indeed attacked every member of the Tory party in Ontario with those irresponsible and entirely untrue statements.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, she can't say that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He was never one to rest upon his laurels.

Mr. S. Smith: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, could the minister kindly correct the record? She inadvertently said Leader of the Opposition when she clearly meant the leader of the third party.

An hon. member: We're all sorry too, I'll tell you.

Hon. B. Stephenson: My humble apologies. It was the leader of the third party.

Mr. Martel: On a point of privilege, the minister indicated that the leader of the New Democratic Party's comments were untrue. She is not in a position to make that statement in this Legislature. I would ask that you ask her to withdraw those statements.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, how do you describe what was said?

Mr. Martel: She must withdraw the statement. Those are the rules of this House.

Mr. Lewis: On the point of privilege, obviously if a member of the House accuses another member of the House of uttering statements which are untrue that has to be withdrawn. I wanted to ask, having missed it in the noise, was the minister referring to what—

Mr. Rotenberg: You are on a point of privilege, not on a question.

Mr. Lewis: —the leader of the New Democratic Party said today or something which was reported in a weekend newspaper? What was she talking about?

Hon. B. Stephenson: The details which the leader of the New Democratic Party provided regarding the incident in the lobby of the building do not, in fact, coincide with the information which I have been given thus far.

Mr. Deans: That doesn't make them wrong.

Mr. Turner: It doesn't make them right, either.

Hon. B. Stephenson: They are, I said, about as accurate—I think I used the word inaccurate, or did I say untrue? Then I will say inaccurate. I withdraw the word untrue and use the word inaccurate—as the accusations which the leader of the third party made in yesterday's Sunday Star. It was in quotation marks and it accused the Tory party of attacking the workers of this province. That is entirely untrue.

Mr. Lewis: He should be admonished for putting it so generously. Talk about restraint.

Mr. Cassidy: It was a very clear attack on injured people.

[2:30]

Mr. Lupusella: Supplementary: As the group of injured workmen were present in the lobby for an entire two-day period some short time ago, and no violence resulted at all, would the Minister of Labour please explain why this occurred today and will she have, through the Solicitor General, a full investigation as to why this should have occurred today when a period of similar occupation lasted for two days without incident?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, there was not a full-time occupation of the lobby for two full days a short time ago.

Mr. McClellan: Got to watch them. They might hit you with their crutches.

Hon. B. Stephenson: There was intermittent attendance within the lobby of the building during the winter months.

Mr. Warner: You're attacking injured workers.

Hon. B. Stephenson: No one has to my knowledge attacked injured workers in this province, and to my knowledge the police did not attack the workers either.

Mr. Swart: Why was the ambulance there?

Mr. Martel: What do you call that?

Mr. Warner: Why don't you clean up the board, and this problem wouldn't happen.

Mr. Martel: Workers on crutches invaded the building!

Mr. di Santo: Supplementary: Doesn't the minister think that her refusal to accept the demands of the injured workers for an increase of their benefits for the last three years—due to the confusing policies of the Workmen's Compensation Board over the application of the supplement and of the consequent suffering—is an outright provocation; and doesn't she think it is time that she changed her policies and finally brought in the legislation necessary to correct that situation for which she and her government are responsible?

Mr. Warner: It's a mean and vicious board, and you know it.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, at about 12 today when I was speaking to the injured workers, I informed them it was my sincere hope we would have the amendments to the benefits ready before this House recessed.

Mr. Cassidy: Sincere hope.

Mr. Warner: But you do nothing.

An hon. member: You said that a year ago.

Mr. Lupusella: You should be ashamed of yourself.

Mr. Bounsall: Supplementary to the answer previous to the one she has just made; is the minister not aware that half of the police at the first sign of pushing pulled out their billy clubs and in point of fact attacked the injured workmen? One epileptic had to receive medical attention. One workman was knocked unconscious. He was bleeding and was handcuffed and taken away in that condition. Is the minister not aware—when she says there was no attack—that it in fact occurred and that there are others, the details of which I am not fully conversant with?

Mr. Warner: It comes right back to your board.

Mr. Swart: It's all right with you.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I am not aware that there was an attack upon the injured workers by the police.

Mr. Bounsall: Get informed!

Mr. Warner: Why don't you find out?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I am aware that there was scuffling when the injured workers attempted to force their way through the police lines. I do not know the specific details.

Mr. M. Davidson: Injured workers attacking the police? How foolish can you be?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I am informed that one of the workers did indeed fall and no one knows how he injured his head, at this point in time, but we have asked for a full report of it.

Mr. Martel: He rammed his head at the wall.

Hon. B. Stephenson: When that report is available I'll be very happy to provide it to the House.

Mr. Warner: The board is the source of the problem and you know it.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Ottawa Centre with his second question.

Mr. Lewis: Remember how often we begged you to give those injured—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Rotenberg: Why don't you just obey the law and tell your workers to obey the law?

Mr. Warner: Clean up the board!

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cassidy: The words quoted in the paper—

Mr. Speaker: Order. We've had the original question and four supplementaries. The Minister of Labour has promised a full investigation with a report to this House. To spend any more time, I think, would be counter-productive.

Does the member for Ottawa Centre have a second question?

Mr. Cassidy: Yes, I was beginning my second question. I was just saying that the words quoted in the paper were—

Mr. Speaker: Is that a related matter?

Mr. Cassidy: It's a second question related to the WCB.

Mr. Speaker: I fail to hear a question.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION

Mr. Cassidy: All right. Can the minister say whether the assurance today that she gave to the injured workmen is in fact nothing but a sincere hope, as she has just said, or will we in fact see the legislation come forward and will it take effect in the month of June? Or is she going to bring in further delays in bringing justice to injured workmen?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, with reasonable co-operation from the third party—and sometimes that's too much to hope for—we will have those amendments by the end of June.

Mr. Martel: Like Bill 70.

Mr. Warner: We've waited for you for a long time. Don't be so condescending.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: In view of the fact that it is now almost three years since the last adjustment in workmen's compensation benefits, will the minister guarantee that the promised legislation will compensate fully for the increase in average wages and salaries since that time over the three-year period—that is, that it will be a minimum of a 27 per cent increase?

Hon. B. Stephenson: To adduce the total and complete and accurate figures at this point would be completely irresponsible. I shall not do that.

Mr. Mackenzie: How many years do you need?

Mr. T. P. Reid: By way of supplementary, the minister mentioned in relation to this on the radio this morning that she was looking at the system in New Zealand in regard to workmen's compensation and other such items. Does she have a report that she could table with the Legislature as to the efficacy of that system in compensating people who find themselves in these unfortunate situations before we even discuss these matters?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I am sure a preliminary report could be developed, but all the final decisions regarding that program have not been made by the government of New Zealand as yet. There is still some question about the first week of compensation, for example, which has not been decided as yet. So it is very difficult to give a final report on the effectiveness of this kind of program as an alternative to the workmen's compensation program. But certainly it is one of the programs which is being studied, not only by the Ministry of Labour but also by the Workmen's Compensation Board.

Mr. McClellan: Could I ask the minister to give us an unequivocal assurance—yes or no—that the legislation raising the benefits will be introduced before the House rises in June?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I have already answered that question.

Mr. Warner: Yes or no.

Mr. McClellan: Yes or no. She hasn't said yes or no.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I have answered the question.

Mr. Warner: Answer the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I have answered the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order: The supplementaries are becoming repetitious.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask a supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: If you have something original to ask.

Mr. Lewis: I am going to try.

Can the minister—

Mr. Kerrio: That is two supplementaries over there.

Mr. Lewis: I merely responded to the Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Does the member for Niagara Falls have a supplementary?

Mr. Kerrio: Yes, I do.

Mr. Speaker: I hadn't noticed him standing.

Mr. Kerrio: In view of the fact that the minister is considering an adjustment of the injured workmen's payments, is she also considering looking into the area of responsibility, where payment should come from?

Mr. Bounsall: It is only one per cent of the payroll. Is the workman supposed to pay for his own injuries?

Mr. Kerrio: Is she relating it to those areas where there are benefits to injured workmen that should come from the consolidated revenue fund rather than come from small business, which can ill afford to pay if it is not their fault?

Mr. Bounsall: We know where you get your campaign funds.

Hon. B. Stephenson: The task force which examined the Workmen's Compensation Board and its function in 1973 did examine that specific subject. I think it opted for the format of the social contract which was first developed, as members know, in 1915 in this province. We are continuing to examine the alternatives, the additives which might be supplementary to workmen's compensation.

But I can tell the House that the actuarial study of the Workmen's Compensation Board has taken some of those factors into consideration and has provided some debate on the subject within the document. It will be available to the members of this House as soon as the final five chapters are delivered to me, which I think should be by the end of this week.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, if the legislative amendments are introduced in the month of June, as the minister says she intends—or even if they were introduced later—can she give to this House an absolute undertaking that within those amendments there will be an adjustment upwards to reflect the cost of living?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I can give an absolute commitment that there will be an adjustment upwards. Whether it will be on the basis of a COLA or some other mechanism, I certainly can't say at this point.

Mr. Swart: That's the base; we want to know the amount.

CHAIN STORE DISCOUNTS

Mr. Yakabuski: I have a question of the Premier.

Mr. Cassidy: It is nice to know that the member for Renfrew South is here.

Mr. Mackenzie: Are you going to take a sabbatical?

Mr. Yakabuski: Mr. Speaker, in view of the number of questions that have been asked in recent weeks of the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman), in connection with the discounting and volume rebates in the food industry—

An hon. member: Get out the hatchet.

Mr. Yakabuski: —doesn't the Premier really think this matter is only one small part of business practices that have been going on for years in this province and this nation—

Mr. Makarchuk: Great private enterprise system, Paul.

Mr. Yakabuski: —and that this Legislature should also be looking at discounts and volume rebates in the hard goods industry, in automobile distributorships and in many other areas of business carried on in this province and country?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the very distinguished member for Renfrew South raises a somewhat broader issue. I must confess to him that, unlike him, I never had a great deal of experience in the sort of business that involves itself in discounts. In the profession that I used to practice there was a tariff and there was no reduction as it related to volume, so I am told. Has that changed, Jim?

Mr. Breithaupt: Not that I am aware.

Mr. Worton: They always get paid.

Mr. Nixon: Lawyers never discount.

Mr. Germa: Free enterprise.

Mr. Bradley: He should discount his salary.

Hon. Mr. Davis: However, Mr. Speaker, I would say to the member for Renfrew South that perhaps before making any general statement or observation, I think the committee itself should deal with this more restricted area for the time being and see what, in fact, the committee finds in its deliberation.

The hon. member has certainly touched upon it in a broader sense and I am delighted that he brought it to my attention. I thank him.

Mr. Yakabuski: Supplementary: Is the Premier aware that firms like Canadian Tire, Eaton's, Simpsons, Woolco and firms such as that are able to buy much better than the small businessman, the independent?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I must once again confess to the honourable member that I am not personally unaware, and I am not surprised either, that somebody buying several thousand units of whatever it might be perhaps gets them at a somewhat better price than somebody buying half a dozen.

Mr. Worton: Not at the LCBO.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have to confess to the honourable member that when it comes to purchasing services or goods from the stores, by and large those purchases are made by somebody other than myself; namely my wife, and unfortunately on several occasions my children. I will consult with them this evening to see whether they have found this reflected in their purchasing.

Mr. Bradley: Did you get a discount on your condominium?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Like you, I couldn't afford two.

TEACHERS' SALARIES

Mr. Haggerty: To the Minister of Education: Has the minister come to any conclusion in the last month since he was asked about Ontario's role in solving salary disagreements and the AIB levy of $100,000 against the Niagara South Board of Education and the teachers?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, we were not involved in the salary dispute. I think the matter that was put to me by my friend the member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart) a short while ago, and also by the member for Erie a few days ago, concerned the penalty of $100,000 imposed on the Niagara south board by the administrator of the anti-inflation program. I think on checking we are all agreed that it was legal for that fine to be imposed and that fine had to be transmitted to the government in Ottawa.

There is a provision in there that perhaps half of that, $50,000, could revert to this province. We are checking on that, of course, and if that money comes back to this province it would be a government decision and the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) would have to take the lead in making some recommendations concerning what the disposition of that money would be.

Mr. Kerrio: That's better income than from radar traps.

Mr. Haggerty: Supplementary: Would the minister reveal the formula agreement that exists for Ontario in reclaiming AIB levies on the provincial public sector as provided for in section 9 of the January 19, 1976, referendum of agreement between the governments of Ontario and Canada? Would he also relate this payment formula to the $100,000 levied by the AIB against the Niagara teachers and tell us how much of this $100,000 will be returned to the Niagara South Board of Education? Perhaps he should ask his colleague the Treasurer for that information.

[2:45]

Hon. Mr. Wells: Perhaps my friend would let us take that question under advisement and perhaps the Treasurer would like to respond to it at some future time, because it really involves the agreement that we had under the AIB program, which, as I said, may provide for a formula for some of that money to come back to the province of Ontario—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —and if so, perhaps we would then consider what should be done with that money.

Mr. Swart: Certainly I'll ask the lawyer on the Welland-Thorold board, I'll tell you that.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I just draw to my friend's attention, though, that in my investigation of this matter, the matter of the penalty, as I understand it, was appealed to the federal cabinet. The federal cabinet upheld it and the federal government has seen fit to take that money and not return any of it to the Niagara South Board of Education.

Mr. Swart: Further supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In view of that fact that it is more than three weeks since I raised this issue with the minister, and the money has or will come from the ratepayers of the Niagara South Board of Education, would he not consider it reasonable that the total $50,000, if the province gets it back, and we assume the province will get it back, should be returned to that board of education—

Interjections.

Mr. Swart: —rather than be kept here to increase the funds of the Treasurer?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I don't think I can answer that question at the present time. I could turn that question around and ask why should the government of Canada keep the $50,000 that has been given to them. Why not turn all of it back, return it all to the Niagara south—

Mr. Kerrio: That's exactly what we want.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I could ask why was the fine ever imposed in the first place.

Mr. Warner: Give the money back; give the money back and then ask the Treasurer to resign.

Hon. Mr. Wells: But the fact of the matter is that our involvement in this is such that at some point in time that money may come back. I think the Treasurer can at the appropriate time indicate what the government of Ontario would do with that money. As far as I know we haven't received any money back under the agreement at the present time.

FLECK MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Mr. Mackenzie: A question of the Minister of Labour: In view of the serious deterioration of the possibility of collective bargaining in good faith at Fleck, due to the confrontation with the Ontario Provincial Police, which is perceived by the workers to be on behalf of the employers, I've got a two part question to ask of the minister.

First, has the minister at any time raised with the Solicitor General (Mr. Kerr) the possibility of removing or substantially reducing the OPP involvement on the picket line in order to defuse the situation, remove the threat of violence and lead to more fruitful bargaining? Second, in view of the statements of Mr. Paul Weiler, chairman of the labour board in British Columbia, who clearly refuted the statements of the minister last week concerning the usefulness of first agreements, is the minister now prepared to reconsider her comments and look at the imposition of a first agreement to bring an end to this unfortunate situation?

Hon. B. Stephenson: The answer to the first question, Mr. Speaker, is yes; a proposal was made and it was rejected by all parties. The answer to the second question is no, I am not prepared to do that at the moment. The newspaper report of my comment, that indeed we were monitoring what was happening there was obviously transmitted in somewhat garbled form to Mr. Weiler. His information is not exactly what had been in my hand at that time.

Mr. Lewis: Everybody garbles your words.

Hon. B. Stephenson: We shall be looking at the results of the second set of negotiations in those instances in which automatic or first agreements were established by government.

Mr. McClellan: Why are you so often misinterpreted?

Mr. Lewis: Even Wilf List garbles your words; and that takes some doing from Wilf.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary: Is the minister not aware that larger numbers of police on the line invariably lead to confrontations?

Can the minister tell us why reducing that force to try and bring about some sanity in the situation would have been rejected by all parties? And is the minister aware of the comments of Mr. Weiler that an imposed first agreement and compulsory union check off, or the Rand formula in effect, is now law in BC; and has, according to Mr. Weiler, resulted in a substantial reduction of the confrontations in that province?

Mr. Lewis: Right; enormous reduction.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Yes, I am aware of Mr. Weiler's statements. As I said they are in conflict with the reports that were given to me about this situation in British Columbia. I am aware that indeed that is the law in that province at this time. As I said before, we are monitoring this situation to see whether indeed it has any appropriate place in the province of Ontario or not.

Mr. Warner: Everybody is out of step but you.

Mr. McClellan: You are a disaster.

Hon. B. Stephenson: As far as the first question is concerned, I have no idea why they rejected it. You might ask the UAW, and the Liberal Party might indeed ask the managers of that plant why they rejected the idea; but the idea was definitely put to them with the assistance of one of the member's colleagues, as a matter of fact quite a while ago.

Mr. Germa: Have you been talking to the owner?

BURLINGTON ZONING DISPUTE

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Premier regarding a zoning dispute over a fast food or hamburger restaurant in Burlington. Given that the city of Burlington is opposed to its development, that the people in the area are opposed to its development, and given that there may have been certain anomalies with respect to the information that was presented at the OMB hearing, has the cabinet been asked by the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry), or by anyone else for that matter, to reconsider this matter? And will the cabinet give reconsideration to it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member who serves that area so well whispered in a voice I could hear that there is a petition before the legislation committee. If there is, I cannot comment any further.

Mr. Peterson: Saved again.

WELFARE RECIPIENTS

Mr. McClellan: A question for the Minister of Community and Social Services: As you know, Mr. Speaker, 40 per cent of Ontario's social assistance caseload is composed of people who are dependent because of disability or major health problems. I want to ask the minister if he will tell us, in terms of cases, how many recipients of family benefits, GAINS-D, and general welfare assistance are injured workers who are in receipt of permanent partial disability pensions from the Workmen's Compensation Board?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I would not have that information at my fingertips at the moment, in terms of specific cases. I shall try to get that information for the honourable member.

Mr. McClellan: Supplementary: Given that every dollar in social assistance benefits paid to injured workers in receipt of WCB pensions represents a direct subsidy to employers, a subsidy against what would be their cost of paying for a decent pension through the Workmen's Compensation Board's employer assessment, may I ask the minister to tell us what is the actual dollar cost in 1977-78 of social assistance benefits paid to injured workers who also received permanent partial disability pensions from the Workmen's Compensation Board?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I would be quite happy to get that information for the honourable member, if it is available in that form. I'm not at all certain that we would have that specific information on recipients—

Mr. McClellan: The minister agrees, of course, that it is a subsidy.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —that we could extrapolate from our data bank that readily. If it is available, I shall get it for the member.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Food has the answer to a question asked previously.

Mr. Kerrio: It's just about time. Dispense.

GREENHOUSE HEATING

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, on May 26 the member for York Centre (Mr. Stong) asked a question concerning energy costs in greenhouses. I believe the essence of his question had to do with the rise in price per cubic foot of natural gas as the volume of gas used decreased. I understand that his concern is that farmers practising conservation measures may receive higher natural gas bills than they did when they were using more gas.

My ministry has conducted several studies on energy conservation in greenhouses and has additional research going on at the moment. We have looked at such matters as greenhouse design, solar energy, insulation materials, heating of soil as well as the air, and other management practices relating to energy conservation. Our main concern in these projects is the conservation of energy and the use of solar energy.

Energy costs have not been a central theme in my ministry. The matter of energy pricing more properly belongs to the Minister of Energy (Mr. Baetz) and I understand that he will respond to the price aspect of this question either late this week or early next week. I will send a copy of the work we are doing in energy conservation over to the member for York Centre.

EMPLOYMENT AGENCIES

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Is the minister aware of the practice of some private employment agencies which receive an hourly rate from an employer, but then pass on only a portion of the rate to the employee, perhaps as little as the minimum wage?

Mr. Deans: Is there anyone who isn't?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, I am not aware of that practice. I'm not sure that I have legislative authority to look into it, but if the honourable member will provide me with the details of it, we will report back to the House.

Mr. O'Neil: Could I also ask the minister if he does not feel that such agencies should be required to disclose the rate they are receiving from the employer to the employee? Would he consider setting a limit on the commission taken by such agencies after he has had a chance to review this information?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As I said, I wouldn't want to comment further until I have all the details of what is happening in the particular transactions. If the member will send them over, I'll be pleased to comment in detail after I've seen them.

PRAXIS INVESTIGATION

Mr. Renwick: I have a question of the Attorney General: I refer to the statement of the Attorney General on Tuesday last about the theft of documents from the office of Praxis Corporation and particularly to that portion referring to the retention of the documents by the RCMP without notifying the Metropolitan Toronto Police. The final report of April 18, with which the Attorney General agreed, concluded that "there are no grounds to lay charges against any person, arising out of the subsequent receipt and possession of Praxis documents by the RCMP."

My question is, if the justification as stated by the RCMP for not notifying the Metropolitan Toronto Police was that the stolen documents were not retained for criminal purposes, for what purposes were the stolen documents retained by the RCMP and what use has been made of them since they received them?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: There were a number of factors. Some were related to issues of natural security and some were related to what the RCMP felt involved the safety of at least one RCMP informant. In my view, the RCMP acted in a bona fide manner in pursuing the course it did. With the value of hindsight, I am not prepared to state at this point in time that its judgement was the best possible judgement in the circumstances, but given all of the very complex circumstances surrounding this whole unhappy affair, there could be no doubt that the Metropolitan Toronto Police and the local crown attorney came to the right conclusion when they decided that criminal charges should not be laid in those particular circumstances.

I don't know if the question related to where the documents are at the present time. I can't answer that aspect of the question. I may have known at one point in time, but I can't honestly recall.

Mr. Renwick: By way of a supplementary question: Understanding as I do that the crown attorney for the judicial district of York exercised his discretion not to proceed on this matter, did the Attorney General himself or members of his department see the documents? Does he understand whether or not there were questions related to national security involved? Can he give this House any further or more explicit statement as to what he means when he said that, as a matter of hindsight, the judgement of the RCMP left much to be desired?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, that's not what I said at all. I haven't seen these documents. I didn't say that the judgement of the RCMP left a lot to be desired. I simply stated, given the power of hindsight, that the judgement exercised by the RCMP in retaining these documents for a lengthy period of time may not have been the best possible judgement in the circumstances. But I'm not prepared to go into the circumstances in order to add anything to what I've already stated. Having said that, to suggest that what I said meant that the judgement of the RCMP left a great deal to be desired is really placing my views in a somewhat different context.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: The Attorney General has stated, as I understood him, that he doesn't wish to go into the facts in this matter. Is that the reason why no one from his ministry apparently at any time interviewed Mr. John Hladun, who stated that he had a great deal of information in this matter but has never been interviewed by any person about it?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The name of the gentleman to whom the member for St. George has just referred means nothing to me. First of all, I should make it clear that members of the staff of the Ministry of the Attorney General are not carrying out the investigation. Our role is to advise the appropriate police authorities when it appears necessary.

I can't recall the circumstances of the investigation except to say that we know there was an investigation carried out by the Metropolitan Toronto Police, firstly.

Secondly, we know that there was an investigation carried out by the Ontario Police Commission at my request immediately upon the receipt of a letter from the Solicitor General for Canada stating that he had certain information to pass on to me related to certain individuals who may or may not have some information. To my knowledge, this matter was pursued completely and the individuals who were named in the letter from the federal Solicitor General all were interviewed. My recollection does not indicate that the person whose name the member for St. George just mentioned was one of them. I have to say that name means absolutely nothing to me at this point in time.

Mrs. Campbell: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: The information came through an interview with CBC. The name was not known to me any more than to the minister. But is the minister not becoming somewhat concerned with the numbers of opinions and legal statements made in this House referring to a variety of matters in which there appears to be little or no investigation of the facts upon which these opinions are based?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think that's quite an unfair statement, if I might categorize it as such, Mr. Speaker. So far as any statements that have been made in relation to the Praxis matter are concerned, they are based on a very complete, very thorough and very painstaking investigation. As to documenting the factual situation and investigations in relation to any other legal opinions, I would be happy to do that if I'm asked specifically about any other matters.

Mr. Speaker: The Solicitor General has the answer to a question asked previously.

FLECK MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, last Tuesday, the member for Beaches-Woodbine asked a number of questions concerning the involvement of the Ontario Provincial Police in the strike at Fleck Manufacturing Company Limited.

In answering those questions I might say that on Friday, May 19, approximately 250 people joined a picket line of 41 workers at Huron Park. There were 19 OPP officers at the plant site that day, although an additional 57 were held in reserve but not deployed.

The cost of the policing operation on May 19 was approximately $3,730. I have now received a cumulative total up to and including May 22; it is $523,529.

Mr. Lewis: That's unbelievable.

Ms. Bryden: Half a million.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The main entrances to the park were not closed off on May 19. I understand that, initially, some picketers were blocking the entrance, but when the OPP staff superintendent asked them to move they did so.

The member for Cambridge (Mr. M. Davidson) asked why it was necessary to provide accommodation in places like the Holiday Inn for police officers assigned to the strike. The member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt) also asked why the possibility of using Camp Ipperwash had not been investigated.

The OPP looked at many kinds of accommodation in the area. Camp Ipperwash and Wolseley Barracks have both been utilized. However, when the military requires Camp Ipperwash, the OPP must find other accommodation. The Holiday Inn was able to offer the force a reduced group rate; so it is being used in conjunction with other facilities.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Volume discount.

Ms. Bryden: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I wonder if I could ask the minister how he can justify the expenditure of half a million dollars on these reserve police who appear to have been kept outside the plant expecting some sort of activity that would require 57 police in reserve. When one thinks of the cost of maintaining those 57 police for approximately 250 women who were appearing on a picket line that day, how can he justify this kind of reserve requirement?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I might say that for the period from about the end of April up to May 17, there was only one police officer on one particular day who was at the picket line. During all that period, the police were only held in reserve. They were not deployed at the picket line. Those were days when the picket line itself was not reinforced by outside picketers. There was no problem whatsoever on the picket line in those days although the picket line was formed by the women strikers.

It was only after May 17 when the honourable member may recall there were a number of people that came up from the Chrysler plant at Windsor. That day there was one male officer at the picket line. I don't know if the honourable member recalls that, but there were a number of instances that day of employees who were attacked, and there was substantial property damage. As a result of that, the police reinforced their personnel at or near the park.

When the honourable member attended on May 19, the OPP increased the personnel at the site to 19 and the number of reserves at other locations.

Mr. Warner: You scared them, Marion.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: As the staff sergeant indicated in committee last Friday, it depends on the intelligence of the force as to the number of outside picketers who may be reinforcing the picket line that they deploy extra people.

Mr. Lewis: They were clearly wrong again.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: All I can say is that in order to control the crowd and keep the park open, they have to keep a number of police officers in reserve.

Mr. M. Davidson: Given that the minister has now informed us that the cost to May 22 of administering that strike by the OPP is I believe $523,000, can he now tell us whether or not that includes the basic salaries of the constables who are on duty? When I raised this in a supplementary previously, the minister indicated that it might have, but that he wasn't certain.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No. The honourable member should realize that the police officers are all salaried personnel and are all on regular salaries regardless of where they are serving in the province. Based on the number of personnel who have been there or on reserve from time to time from March 6, the total salary figure is $519,938.

Mr. M. Davidson: In addition to the $500,000?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes.

Mr. Lewis: So it's over $1 million altogether at Fleck, eh? And you can't solve it, can you?

Mr. Deans: Do you know how much the settlement would cost?

Mr. Cassidy: In view of the fact that the Police Act specifically gives the Solicitor General the power to enter into agreements with a company so that the company will pay the cost of policing where it's provided by the OPP, is it the government's intention now to make Fleck sign such an agreement so that the company should pay this million-dollar cost of protecting the company rather than having the taxpayers of Ontario pay it?

Mr. Rotenberg: Why not the union?

Mr. Hodgson: What about the union?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I have no objection to attempting to do that.

An hon. member: Then do it. Go ahead and do it.

CHAIN STORE DISCOUNTS

Mr. McGuigan: I rise on a point of privilege. I should like to correct an impression that was inadvertently given by me to the committee on natural resources last Thursday evening. I realize the proper place is in the committee but I ask your indulgence to do it here because I want to take the first opportunity to do so.

I believe I indicated in the committee that three bills from the M. Loeb company to McGuigan Orchards for apples were paid on a six per cent discount basis and that as a result of representations by my son these discounts were removed. I should have said three statements. I did not make it clear that only those invoices received since my son protested have been corrected so as to provide the minimum price set by the apple commission.

There are three statements covering January, February and March and three deliveries in April which were paid on a six per cent discount basis. This has not yet been corrected. Invoices since April 21 have been paid at the net proper rate. A letter is being sent today to the M. Loeb company, with a copy to the Ontario Apple Marketing Commission, asking that these payments be corrected.

TIME FOR QUESTIONS

Mr. Bounsall: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: Should not the time taken for the point of privilege by the previous speaker have been deducted from the time for the question period and, therefore, would not a new question be in order?

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions had actually expired before he rose. The time was up at 3:10.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION

Mr. Grande: On a point of privilege: On April 11 I asked a question of the Minister of Labour regarding the unwritten policy of the Workmen's Compensation Board to require from injured pensioned workers three signatures from employers per day and 15 per week as proof that they are looking for light jobs in order to receive the pension supplement. I asked the minister to clarify that policy. The minister answered on that day:

"Mr. Speaker, I'll be very pleased to inquire from the chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Board precisely what it was he did mean by that statement and present it to the House."

All the minister had to do was to place a phone call to Michael Starr to get the information and report. A month and a half has elapsed and the minister has not answered that question.

Mr. McClellan: She's still studying it.

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, I am seeking your assistance to try to activate the Minister of Labour.

Hon. B. Stephenson: The response to that question was submitted to the member for Hamilton East (Mr. Mackenzie) with a request that he distribute it to all members of the caucus.

REPORT

SELECT COMMITTEE ON THE OMBUDSMAN

Mr. M. N. Davison: I wish to take the fourth report of the select committee on the Ombudsman and ask, pursuant to provisional standing order 6, that the report be placed on the order paper for consideration by this House.

This report will provide members of the legislative assembly with a survey of the ombudsman institution in the five foreign jurisdictions visited by the committee. It explains how things are done there and more important, why things are done. It is the committee's intention that this report should serve as a starting point for the consideration and creation of rules, definitions and interpretations to be arrived at in an open and free consultative process.

The report contains two recommendations. First, while the committee has concluded that the concept of an ombudsman is applicable to local government in Ontario, the committee recommends that the function of ombudsman to local government should not be performed by an ombudsman who has jurisdiction over provincial or central government organizations. Second, the committee again recommends that its order of reference be amended to provide that it receive and consider the estimates of the Ombudsman and report thereon to the Legislature with such recommendations as the committee deems appropriate.

Copies of the report are available in the members' mail boxes and are now available to the press.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

SIMCOE DAY ACT

Mr. G. E. Smith moved first reading of Bill 99, An Act respecting Simcoe Day.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. G. E. Smith: The purpose of the bill is to change the name of the public holiday celebrated in many municipalities on the first Monday in August from Civic Holiday to Simcoe Day in honour of John Graves Simcoe who was appointed the first Lieutenant Governor of Upper Canada on September 12, 1791 and who convened the first Legislative Assembly and established the capital of the province at York, now Toronto.

[3:15]

CONSUMER PROTECTION AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. B. Newman moved first reading of Bill 100, An Act to amend the Consumer Protection Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. B. Newman: This bill requires that every product offered for sale by a retailer that is marked with the universal product code must also be clearly marked with its individual purchase price. This would ensure the rights of the consumer to the privilege of comparison shopping by requiring individual item pricing.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Before the orders of the day I wish to table the answers to questions 56, 57, 58 and 60 standing on the notice paper. (See appendix page 2930).

ORDERS OF THE DAY

House in committee of supply.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS

Mr. Chairman: Resuming, then, consideration of the estimates of the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

On vote 901, ministry administration program; item 3, regional and community relations.

Mr. T. P. Reid: We're still on—

Mr. Chairman: Item 3.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Item 3. Perhaps the minister could give us a rundown of what the regional and community relations officers' functions are—how many there are in the northern region, what their functions are, and how many backup people he has in Toronto working with these people.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The number of northern affairs officers across northern Ontario now totals 29. Each one of those has a secretary with him, which would be a total of 58. In addition, here, there is the support staff that numbers—

Mr. T. P. Reid: While we're waiting for that information, can you explain, do you have somebody now within your ministry called a community relations officer, as distinct from a northern affairs officer? No?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No.

Mr. T. P. Reid: What is Don Cameron in Kenora, Bill Calvert in—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, right. That's right.

Mr. T. P. Reid: You have heard of them?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes. There has been some confusion in that while we're calling our offices community service centres, the 29 northern affairs offices are basically community service centres. Some people are confusing those people with community service officers. They are still northern affairs officers per se. We're not changing that name, just the name to signify the office so we can identify them within the organization.

Mr. T. P. Reid: And your community relations officers, Mr. Cameron, Mr. Calvert, Mr. Fleming—

Mr. Wildman: Roland St.-Onge.

Mr. T. P. Reid: —and that gentleman my friend Mr. Wildman has mentioned, what is their function? They are called specifically by the title community relations officers, right?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Right.

Mr. T. P. Reid: What do they do as separate and distinct from the northern affairs officers?

While I'm on my feet—because, as the minister knows, I always like to ask at least one question about money—what are the salaries of both the northern affairs officers and the community relations officers?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The salary of a northern affairs officer, classification 1, ranges from $17,333 to $20,282, for classification 2 from $18,000 to $22,000, and for classification 3 from $21,000 to $26,000.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Do you have any making $26,000?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I'm not sure. I'll just check on that.

Mr. T. P. Reid: While we're waiting, what is the community relations officers' salary level?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I must just read for the honourable member the responsibilities of those officers: "The community relations program of the ministry has basically two principal functions: to make residents of northern Ontario aware of the programs, services and facilities available to them from the government and to assist residents of northern Ontario to make the most beneficial use of the programs, services and facilities of government which they and their community require." They are at the regional bases and they move around within the region and work with the municipalities. Of course, they support the 29 other northern affairs officers in the area.

I'm told that there are two people receiving $26,000 right now, Mr. Myles, who is in the regional office at Kenora, and Mr. Scully, who is at the regional office at Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. T. P. Reid: They're doing better than members.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, they're worth more in some cases.

Mr. Germa: I'm a little confused by the figures, Mr. Chairman. If I look at the printed book, the 1977-78 estimate for this program is $347,500. Then, when I look at the briefing book that the minister circulated, the 1977-78 estimate is $1,570,000. I'm trying to find out how fast this community relations branch is growing. Could the minister give me the true figures? Why is there the discrepancy between the printed book—$347,000 and the briefing book—$1,570,000?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, there was a typographical error there, and I believe the revised estimates page has been re-submitted to the members. I could certainly get the honourable member a copy of the corrected transposition of those figures.

The figures did not change the total. The total for the 1978-79 estimates is still $6,470,000, and the total for 1977-78 is still $4,049,000. There was just a problem. The corrected page is on its way to the member now.

Mr. Germa: If I take this to be correct, the estimate last year was $1,570,500; this year it's $2,560,000. Those are the comparative figures; we don't have an actual for 1977-78, do we?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, we don't have an actual yet.

Mr. Germa: So we have a projection of almost a 100 per cent increase in that particular line, regional and community relations. I wonder if the minister would tell us where this great increase came in. What caused this great increase from $1.5 million to $2.5 million?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: As the member for Rainy River will attest, the services of the northern affairs branch and the services of northern affairs officers have been broadly extended in this coming year. We have opened up a total of nine new offices. Of course, this is reflected in the budget increase.

New offices opened in northern Ontario included those at Hearst, Chapleau, Rainy River, Ignace, Iroquois Falls and, of course, the regional offices at Kenora, Sault Ste. Marie, Sudbury and Thunder Bay. So there has been a broad expansion of the northern affairs offices in northern Ontario and, as I said a moment ago, it is directly reflected in the increase we are asking for.

Mr. Germa: When you put a regional office in the same community as the northern affairs office, what is the different complement in structure?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The northern affairs office itself, working through the community service centre, has the northern affairs officer and a secretary. They deal directly with the public. They are basically a storefront operation.

The regional office deals on a much broader basis with the policy setting of the programs, dealing with the various municipalities, and in liaison with the other ministries, and working, of course, with the other regional offices, the main office and the regional office here in Toronto.

It is not large in number. The regional office in Kenora will have somewhere around 12 to 13 people when it is finally staffed. The office in Thunder Bay will have anywhere from eight to 12. Sault Ste. Marie, about the same size as Kenora, and Sudbury about the same size as Thunder Bay.

As the honourable member will know, I am sure, in our reduced complement figure that was recently announced, we indicated—and had told the mayor of Cochrane—that our regional office, scheduled to open up there this year, would be deferred until some later date. We had planned a regional office in the town of Cochrane but because of cutbacks in complement and in salaries we have had to postpone that particular office opening for, I suspect, some time.

Mr. Germa: Even despite that announcement, there must have been an increase in staff in that line.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes.

Mr. Germa: Where did we get these people from? Were they transferred from another ministry?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Some were. Advertisements were placed all across northern Ontario. I am sure that the member saw some of the advertisements in our northern papers. We held competitions right across the north. In fact, our engagement program, or hiring program, is not completed as yet.

I have to say to the member—and I am sure he agrees with me—that we are being extremely selective and careful in getting for these positions people who are, I suppose, a little higher in calibre than you would normally require for this type of work, because we feel that they should be northern oriented, have a broad knowledge of government services and, of course, have that type of personality to deal with the public in a very helpful way.

It is a very sensitive position. It is one that commands the total ability of those individuals we have in those particular fields; and, certainly, this is reflected in the number of inquiries that we are receiving in our northern affairs offices and in the expansion of those particular programs that they relate to, such as the ICAF fund now.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I want to rise, really, on a point of order. I don't want to cut my friend off but I am a little concerned in the briefing or the estimate book that there is an error of $1.2 million. Presumably, it is for money from last year.

I was wondering if there were any other mistakes that we should perhaps be aware of? Why would you, yourself, not have brought it to our attention, rather than having it raised by the member for Sudbury? I would think that it is your responsibility to do so. Was there anything else?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and I apologize for that. The staff did bring it to my attention and in fact I intended to do that the first thing today, but I just arrived on that late 12 o'clock plane from Thunder Bay. I certainly apologize for that. But as I pointed out the actual totals for this year have not changed and all the error was in the printing of last year's figures.

[3:30]

Mr. T. P. Reid: That's the only mistake?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That's the only mistake that has been brought to my attention.

Mr. Germa: I have a speech of the minister of January 21, 1978. He was in Kirkland Lake at the chamber of commerce. He said—

Mr. T. P. Reid: You should get a medal for reading those.

Mr. Germa: They're very entertaining.

"At the same time, from one of the many possible programs for so-called soft services we are selecting those which relate to employment and improvement of living conditions, training programs to help people handle new and better jobs, other programs that will add meaningful dimensions to people's living standards."

I see no reference in the briefing book to any training programs, and I am not aware of any such programs to help people in northern Ontario handle new or better jobs. Could you fill us in on that one?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The idea behind that statement is to assist those organizations—and I refer back again to my many references to the Manitoulin Economic Development Association. Here we assisted financially to set up that development association to train the local people in the field of business management, advertising and marketing. It is that kind of a thrust we want to embark on.

I have said many times across northern Ontario that our priority, as the member has correctly quoted me on, would be employment-oriented in that field. I think we can see ourselves leaning very heavily to the development of an industrial park in a specific community that would provide the opportunity for industry to establish, and thereby create more jobs within that community. It is this kind of direction that we would like to see ourselves moving into. I would say to the honourable member that the DREE program is also leaning very heavily in that direction.

Mr. Bolan: I have a question of the minister. I might say it is good to see the minister this afternoon. I would have preferred to have seen him on Friday in North Bay. However, I was not privy to that meeting. It has to do with that that I have this question for you, Mr. Minister.

I was speaking to one of your information officers on Friday afternoon—I believe his name was Fleming. The portent of my question is to find out from you just what instructions your ministry gives when it has to do with inviting certain people in certain areas to certain meetings which are sponsored by the ministry, which are paid for, of course, by public funds, and whether or not your ministry has some type of procedure you follow whenever you have one of these conferences or meetings. What is the procedure involved in that, particularly in reference to the meeting you held last Friday in North Bay?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: There are a number of meetings held across northern Ontario by our staff, and certainly by myself. I refer to a typical one we held in Timmins where the general area was invited to submit briefs to my colleague, the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle). At that time it was generally open to everybody to join us and I believe everybody did. It was broad and general in nature. We wanted the broad, general input before making some very important decisions that would affect the tourist industry in the northeastern Ontario corridor for some time to come. We received it, we are very grateful and action has been taken on those suggestions already.

The meeting to which the member refers was the first meeting of the Municipal Advisory Committee in North Bay. It was basically a formation meeting where the Ministry of Northern Affairs was taking over the responsibility of that particular group from the Ministry of Treasury, Economics and Inter-governmental Affairs.

We had a very successful meeting in the northwest part of the province with the executive from MAC at the Quetico training centre where we spent a good day with those members to look at an industrial strategy report, basically behind closed doors, I suppose you might say, because it was confined to a number of my cabinet colleagues and the executive themselves. I think it's fair to say that the responsibility rests with the government to bring forth recommendations, at least at that particular level.

That meeting we had in North Bay was not advertised in the sense that it would be an open public meeting where we would get all kinds of input. I think we felt that because of the hiatus, I suppose you might say, that occurred in the transfer from one ministry to another, we wanted to sit down with the executive themselves, and I believe that there was a notice that a news conference would be held to outline to the press just what we had achieved and in what direction we were going.

Outside of that, we didn't finalize any policies or programs but we indicated to them that we had reached accord with regard to the setting up of a secretariat, that we would give certain assistance to them, but any recommendations or any research, of course, would have to be theirs. It's something that I have said continually, that we do want that northern input and we don't want to be accused, as a government or as a ministry, of supplying input, say, through the back door.

It was brought up to me that sometimes the statistics that are brought forward are brought forward by various government civil servants and they have no way of checking or questioning them. I think they strongly felt—and rightly so; I agreed—that much of that research should be done through their own forces. We also agreed that there would be a budget to assist them in setting up their secretariat and that the Ministry of Northern Affairs policy staff, either in Sudbury or in Sault Ste. Marie, would be there to help them and to give them all the advice they could.

The thrust of our whole meeting was to assure them that the government felt there was a need for the Municipal Advisory Committee. We strongly felt that they should be autonomous. Maybe one area that I didn't touch on and maybe I should have was the amount of involvement the municipalities would have. There's an area there that maybe we are going to have to reconsider, in that there may be some financial contribution they would like to make, to make themselves truly autonomous and not totally dependent on the provincial government for funding. That is not an area that will raise any concern from my point of view, but I think it's an area that they might want to discuss with their own municipal leaders.

Mr. Bolan: I just have one question arising from that. First of all, I might say I agree with the decision which has come from that meeting, that you should be creating a secretariat for that particular area. I think that's a sound move on the part of the ministry. I also agree with your statement that there are some times when these meetings should basically be held behind closed doors. After all, some of the things which you are discussing are recommendations which will be forthcoming from the government, and as you yourself have said, you're throwing statistics around and sometimes they can't be properly interpreted and you're looking for more input.

Bearing that in mind, I might say I would have loved to have been an observer only at that meeting. I did try to go to the meeting, incidentally. I phoned your Mr. Fleming on Friday morning. He said he would get back to me and he did, around 2 o'clock; although I was not speaking to him, he was speaking to my secretary.

He advised my secretary at that time that I could not attend, but that, however, these instructions had come from Toronto. He was very quick to point that out.

I said to myself, "Well, that may be so. Perhaps there is some reason why the member should not attend." Then, lo and behold, who does attend?

There was Stan Darling, the Progressive Conservative member from the federal riding south of mine. There was Marie Marchand, the Progressive Conservative candidate for the next federal election and Ed Diebel, the leader of the Heritage Party.

Mr. Wildman: A Tory front.

Mr. Bolan: Do you know what I really thought after that? I thought that at least the members from northeastern Ontario should have been invited to that meeting because, after all it had to do with the municipal advisory committee dealing with northeastern Ontario. I was not invited. I am not aware that the member for Timiskaming (Mr. Havrot) was invited or the member for Cochrane South (Mr. Pope) or even the cabinet minister from northeastern Ontario, the member for Cochrane North (Mr. Brunelle).

I am suggesting to you that these people should have been invited. I do accept the basic premise which you have laid down that sometimes these things have to be held behind closed doors, but then you bring in a candidate of a political party and the member from the riding to the south. Maybe you have an explanation for that. I would hope that you do.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: If I might explain, the invitation went out only to the members of the executive council. As I said earlier, the desire was for the cabinet to meet as a group with the executive of MAC to take that next very important step. No invitations were sent to any other members on either side of the House. It is fair to say that one other northeastern Ontario member, a member of this particular party, indicated his desire to attend. I indicated to him that it was a cabinet session and that maybe at some other meeting somewhere down the road, after we got the information pulled together, he could attend.

I would have to also say to the member for North Bay—

Mr. Bolan: Nipissing.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Nipissing, sorry—I was not aware that the PC candidate was to be there. I was a little surprised that she was there at all. She is a very charming lady, I might admit. After I had met her when the meeting was all over, I—

Mr. Bolan: Is she a member of the cabinet?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, she is not a member of the cabinet and she was not invited. She was there. I am sure there wasn't anybody checking the identification of those who were there because there were 40 to 50 people there.

Mr. Bolan: What if I had shown up? Would you have let me in?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I am sure you would have been allowed to go in.

Mr. Bolan: Fine. I will do that Wednesday when you are up there with the chamber of commerce.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It wasn't that secret a meeting, let's put it that way. They were there and they didn't participate in any of the discussions—I can assure the honourable member of that—although the member from the North Bay council, Mr. Ed Diebel, did. In fact, he made one of the presentations that MAC had pulled together. He did a very good job on it, I might say.

The MAC executive would also have a say as to who should be there and who not. We asked for the meeting from a ministry point of view. The invitations, as I said earlier, went just to members of the cabinet and not to anybody else.

Mr. Bolan: I have a followup question. Does that mean that I am invited as a member for the Nipissing riding at the chamber of commerce meeting your ministry is hosting in North Bay on Wednesday?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I have no objection at all if the member for Nipissing is there. It is an informal luncheon. I am going to North Bay. In fact, I find myself spending more time in the northeastern region than I do in my own riding, the great riding of Kenora. I am looking forward to meeting with the North Bay Chamber of Commerce in a very informal way, after which I will meet with the directors of the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission in the afternoon.

It is a full day. If you are there, join us.

Mr. Germa: He'll have to buy a ticket.

Mr. Bolan: I will be there. Thank you.

Item 3 agreed to.

On item 4, project development and implementation;

Mr. Germa: Mr. Chairman, I know you don't have time to read the minister's speeches. I would like to read you another paragraph as I am sure you enjoyed that first one.

Mr. Chairman: Thank you very much.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I am honoured.

[3:45]

Mr. Germa: This is still in Kirkland Lake at the chamber of commerce on January 21, 1978. On page seven the minister says:

"For instance, when we consider a proposal to build a hydro generating station we have to be convinced that it will yield permanent results worth far more than capital costs involved. We're happy, of course, if the construction will require X number of tradesmen and labourers who might otherwise be without work. It's satisfying, too, to realize that the generating station itself will employ Y number of persons in permanent jobs.

"But all of those jobs are really just bonuses. The big payoff will come from the way a new source of power will attract new industry which, in turn, will encourage commerce and development and the way in which all three will generate jobs. Some people might describe this process as a spinoff but that term does not appeal to me in this case because it implies an end result that is secondary and almost accidental. That is certainly not the right way to describe the long-term benefits towards which we are deliberately working."

The minister has made brave words that there is no hit or miss, or there is no chance any more in capital expenditures. I would presume the minister would have no trouble in telling me how many studies, or what studies he has done as a result of the Atikokan generator installation, and what the results are to be down the road, say 10 years hence? First of all, tell me what kind of studies you've done?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Could I just describe to the member the activities of the project development branch? I think it's worthwhile to put them on the record because they will maybe clarify some points in the member's mind both now and in the future. There are a number of points here, if I could just go through them with you.

The first spells out the works in concert with municipalities. This is the activity descriptions function: 1. Work in concert with municipalities and other ministries in planning development strategies to improve northern community conditions and to respond to local needs; 2. Negotiate agreements with community representatives and local government officials on ministry-funded projects; 3. Provide administrative technical support to the program delivery functions at the regional level; 4. Review and monitor projects to improve government program thrusts; 5. Provide project development and co-ordination; 6. Undertake projects relating to the possible expansion of the economic base of the region; and, 7. Conduct a project into the economic life of northern Ontario to determine the potential for development.

That gives you a very broad description of the function of that particular activity within the ministry.

As to the actual studies that have been completed, there are a number of studies completed by the former section, which was Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs, leading directly to the problems of Atikokan—the social development problems that would occur if the mines were closed. Those have activated a number of ministries in doing something for Atikokan.

For example, when I was in Natural Resources we embarked on a very ambitious program to have another waferboard plant established at Atikokan, in co-operation, I might say, with the municipalities themselves. Now we have Pluswood established in Atikokan employing about 125 to 140 people, using a species of the forest—the poplar and the birch—that was, up until this time, not being utilized by the major pulp and paper companies who own large timber limits in that area. So it was that kind of a thrust that prompted us to go in that direction.

Also, I might say, the Ministry of Northern Affairs has taken on the lead ministry role for the town of Atikokan, as we have for Pickle Lake, so we will be cranking up our presence with that community in trying to come up with some solution in co-operation with the municipalities. I don't see us providing all the answers to all their problems. I think we'll work very closely in co-operation with the council and with the municipality itself because I think the thrust and that desire, that drive, to be really successful has to germinate with the community. Sure, we are anxious to give as much support as we can, to give the benefit of the expertise within the government, but we want to do it in concert with the municipality itself.

Mr. Germa: I think I still didn't get an answer whether a study was done to determine what the benefits are going to be to that area as a result of the Atikokan generating station.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I am not aware of any direct study that has been completed at this time. We are in the transition stage, as the honourable member knows from getting many of these reports and studies over from Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs. It may well be there's something going on that I am not aware of.

Mr. Germa: It gives me reason then to criticize the minister's statements when he goes around saying that nothing happens in northern Ontario until we determine what the benefits are going to be, and there's not going to be a thing known as a spinoff or an accidental benefit.

I seem to get from this that despite the expenditure of $2,740,000 we are still walking around in the dark up there as to whether there are going to be some benefits as a result of the Atikokan generating station. If there are spinoff benefits we don't know what they are going to be. Otherwise, I am sure you would tell me that within 10 years this is going to create x, y and z in the communities, it's going to increase the population.

These brave words you give as you go around talking to the chambers of commerce—I think you have to try to contain yourself and not give the people too much hope. When the hopes are not realized, then the disillusionment is so severe that there could be a reaction to the whole Ministry of Northern Affairs.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Can the minister indicate under salaries and wages how many people are involved? Line staff, officers; what they are doing and where are they employed; are they in the north or in Toronto, and exactly what do they do in regard to this vote?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: What area, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. T. P. Reid: Under vote 4 you have $1,355,000 for salaries and wages. Who does that apply to? How many employees? How many of them are directly involved in program development and implementation? Where are they accommodated? Are they in Thunder Bay? Are they in Sault Ste. Marie? Are they in Sudbury or are they in Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I can give you a breakdown, Mr. Chairman. We have 15 people in the northwest region who are under the direct responsibility of William Calvert located at Thunder Bay. We have 14 with the financial program planning branch under the direction of Andy Morpurgo here in Toronto and we have 23 in the northeastern region under the direction of George Ormerod at Sudbury. That gives you 15 in the northwest, 14 here in the finance and program planning section and 23 in the regional and community division section.

Mr. T. P. Reid: What do these people do? We are trying to sort all this out. We have been through the regional and community relations people and your northern affairs office. What do these people do specifically then? What's their job descriptions? Do you have the range of salaries for these people?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, we have. The main people—Mr. Calvert, Mr. Morpurgo and Mr.

George Ormerod—are in the $30,000 to $37,000 bracket. Then there are secretaries and clerk-stenos, clerk-typists, community planners. They range from $21,000 to $26,000 and economists from $28,000 to $35,000. Economist 5, $25,000 to $31,000; economist 4, 24,000 to $30,000; economist 3, $20,000 to $24,000; economist 2, $16,000 to $19,000; and secretaries from $9,000 to $11,000.

They are involved in a broad range of activities on a regional basis, such as the planning for the 2001 conference; a lot of that work was done by the local staff. The contact with the Manitoulin Economic Development Association; working very closely with the Ministry of Transportation and Communications with regard to setting priorities for new highway construction programs; the airstrip development program with MTC—all that work is done by the staff out in the field. There is a lot of work to be done there; in fact, we are only just cranking up and beginning to scratch the surface of the amount of work that we have to do.

Mr. T. P. Reid: These salaries we are paying boggle my mind. Possibly that's because I have been here for 11 years and have been working for a lot less. But with all due respect to some of the people in the ministry, does it not bother the minister that an economist is getting $35,000? It doesn't. I would have been better off to have finished my MA, come back here and have little responsibility as a civil servant—I don't mean the senior people. Really, it's out of line. Does the minister not feel that the salaries he is paying are out of line?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, I don't.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I didn't think so.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The honourable member must realize these are well within the civil service qualifications and criteria. These are well laid out by the civil service. If the honourable member has an objection to those high salaries, he should make it known to the Chairman of Management Board (Mr. Auld), who deals directly with the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I appreciate that some of those salaries are by way of negotiation, but a lot of what we are talking about here, higher-echelon positions, don't come under the collective bargaining process.

Let me go back to something the minister said, because it really concerns me. He talked about the airport and the highways programs—and we will get to those specific votes in a few minutes—but what did we do before we had the northern affairs officers out there in the field with their "expertise" deciding where airports and roads went? What function are they fulfilling with respect to the project ministries, such as MTC? What are they doing? Are they getting together with good old Harry in MTC, who also is getting $35,000, and Harry says to Joe, "Joe, I think the road should go here," and Joe says, "Well, we think maybe it should go there." "All right, we'll put it in between"? Seventy thousand dollars, and where are we?

What exactly are they doing? Are they running around northern Ontario figuring out new projects? My concern is that I am not sure these people are doing anything more than touching those tax dollars as they are going by and costing the taxpayers more money to arrive at and implement decisions that have already been made within the operating ministry.

I was talking to somebody in MTC in Toronto the other day, and I said, "What about all these road projects?" He said, "Frankly, we used to proceed a fair bit faster, but now we have to co-ordinate with the Minister of Northern Affairs." It has not only slowed the program down but also with all due respect to our highly paid people, we now have somebody within this ministry who supposedly is making the decisions, as I understand the words of the minister as have been read to us, as to where roads and airports and everything else should go; I wonder, quite frankly, whether or not they have the expertise to do that.

I know the minister will point to Mr. Aiken and others and say, "They were with the ministry; so they have that kind of expertise." But I tell him, the feedback I get from some of the other ministries is that his ministry is slowing down the process rather than speeding it up, and that we are using more tax dollars in order to arrive at perhaps the same goal as maybe we were approaching.

[4:00]

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I think the honourable member will have to realize that within an organization as large as the Ontario government, when a new ministry is established that looks after the regional needs of an area—that area north of Parry Sound to the Kenora area—and taking over the function, the co-ordinating and priority-setting responsibilities for certain programs that up to this point in time have been the responsibility of another ministry. It takes a little time for some readjustment. I think you have to accept that. Some civil servants just don't want to let go, they still want to make those decisions.

The responsibility for making those decisions has been transferred to this particular ministry. We're cranking up and it's certainly not our intention to create delay. We want to accelerate some of these decision-making processes. It's something the northerners want, and as I've said many times, that is a direct input.

We've cried in the north so many times that decisions have been formulated and brought together by people in southern Ontario. You say, "Why have a separate ministry, why couldn't the other ministries do the same things we're doing today?" I have to remind you, sir, that we are just going into our second year. The budget of the Ministry of Northern Affairs, if you will look back, has been increased by about 40 per cent since it was established.

The programs we took over were budgeted at $99 million. Last year we got in excess of $120-odd million. This year we're asking for $139.9 million. There's been a tremendous acceleration and increase in the amount of our budget. That takes extra people to administer.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That's right, that's the problem.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Sure that's right.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That's the problem. We wonder if the administrative costs are worth it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You can't say that our administrative staff is large. When you look at the numbers we have, our total complement will be 170 or less right across the north.

Mr. T. P. Reid: But your salaries are large; there's nothing wrong with your salaries. John Rhodes is applying for a job right after the next election; so am I.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I stand a chance of getting one.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I make no apologies. I think that we're off and running and that we're satisfying the needs of northern Ontario very well.

Mr. Wildman: I have some questions in regard to the description of the function of the ministry under this vote, as described by the minister at the outset. I'd like to relate it to some specific studies and some specific project development plans and co-ordination the ministry is doing in my riding.

First, I'd like to know if the minister could clarify once again the present position of the Hornepayne town centre project. I understand that in the press recently in Thunder Bay Mr. Balmer, who is the head of Hallmark Hotels, made a statement that he expected that the contract would be let in the first or second week of June. I'd like to know if that is correct; are we at that stage yet?

Earlier in the estimates the minister indicated to me that the government had just opened the tenders, that they were being studied, and that the various ministries involved, and CN and Hallmark, were determining what they were going to do about the project. As the minister has indicated, the reeve of the township of Wicksteed-Hornepayne—has made some statements recently expressing concern about the high cost of tenders coming in for various projects. Could the minister clarify what stage we're at in plans for the Hallmark town centre in Hornepayne, and does he expect the project to begin in early June?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: As I indicated during our last session, the question of the town centre development at Hornepayne has kept a number of our staff very much engaged for a considerable period of time.

I think the honourable member is very much aware of the complexities of what I think is a very exciting concept for northern Ontario, where we have the private sector on the one hand working with both the federal government and provincial government in attracting a sizeable amount of capital to develop a major centre that not only will deal with the commercial aspect of the community, but indeed the residential requirements of the Canadian National Railway. The breakdown and the costing has been very complex, to say the least.

As the honourable member is aware, this is the second time we've called for tenders for that particular development. The first one came in rather high. There was some readjustment to the concept, the design. It was felt at that time that the calling was inopportune. The way they say it in northern Ontario, the contractors weren't hungry enough. So they were called again. Much to their surprise, the second tenders came in higher than the first.

We did put a figure on it that would keep our interest in, in that we were prepared to stay with the project provided the figure did not come in over $10 million plus 10 per cent. I understand that that's been exceeded.

Right at the present time Hallmark are going over their plans again. They're working very closely with the contractor to see if there is somewhere they can scale down the concept. Also, there have been some changes with regard to the cost of construction as it relates to the gravel supply and also the accommodation that could be provided for the workers when the project is under way. All these things are in the works now.

I'm still confident, quite frankly, that we can work out something that will allow us to call and give the contract this year. Really, I am. Unless there is something I'm not aware of at this point in time, then at this point I would have to say to you that I'm confident we will get something going.

Mr. Wildman: Thank you. I'd like to refer to a couple of other matters. While the minister was in Wawa we had a pleasant dinner with the officials of the township of Michipicoten and other guests, and the reeve of the township raised a couple of concerns that have been major concerns in Wawa for some time. One is in relation to a study that I believe the ministry is involved with, and the other was a matter the reeve wanted the ministry to get involved with. In both cases the minister replied that he was concerned about them, that he was aware of the matters and that the ministry was involved or would get involved.

Specifically, one was the study regarding the improvement of television communications along the northeastern shore of Lake Superior affecting communities like Hawk Junction, Wawa, Dubreuilville, White River and perhaps farther along the shore. I understand the Ministry of Transportation and Communications is involved in a study and that the Ministry of Northern Affairs is somehow involved in that.

Could you explain your exact involvement in that study; and do you anticipate, as has been rumoured, a conclusion of that study by June or early summer? If you do, could you explain how that is going to be co-ordinated with the recent decision of the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission giving Dr. Young, of Chapleau, a licence to provide cable service for Wawa, considering your stated position in these estimates that the ministry is not interested in subsidizing cable systems? Can you respond to that and then I'll raise the other matter.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I have a little briefing note here. Maybe I could just put it into the record for the benefit of the members. I might say at the outset that my colleague, the member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Rhodes), has been pressing and spending a lot of time in these discussions with myself and the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) because of his desire to get a broader coverage of that service into the northeastern part of the province. I've just given him a copy of the briefing note that I'm going to put on the record.

I'd just point out to the honourable member that the Ministry of Northern Affairs and MTC made a joint presentation to the CRTC in Sudbury concerning broadcasting services in northern Ontario in November 1977. If you haven't got a copy of that, I will be glad to get you a copy.

Mr. Wildman: I have a copy.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The submission expressed at that time the government's concern regarding the deficiencies in the availability of broadcast and cable services in the north in view of the importance of broadcasting in the social and economic life in northern Ontario. They also outlined Ontario's communication policy objectives for northern Ontario. These included: 1. A basic television service consisting of CBC services, and CTV would be available to as many communities as is technically and economically feasible.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That's what you said, it isn't what you have done.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That is what we said and that is the route that we are going.

2. Ultimately this basic service should be available off-air to as many residents as possible. Cable television might be used as an interim delivery method but cannot be viewed as a permanent substitute provision of the basic service in northern Ontario.

In other words, here we are saying we are going to have the same type of service as they do in southern Ontario.

3. The provincial objective for the Ontario Educational Communications Authority broadcasting services has been to expand TV Ontario to those communities listed in the phase three plan, as funds become available. I can get you those names.

4. A cable system should be established to those communities that are presently unserved and that can support them to provide sources of greater choice and diversity of programming.

5. There should be an improved source of cable channels which are reliable and of good quality.

6. There should be available a basic radio service consisting of CBC radio services and at least one alternative AM radio service to as many residents in northern Ontario as is possible.

7. More programming should be developed—both English and French—either produced in northern Ontario or relevant to residents of this part of the province.

I think that that is very important and it was brought home to me very clearly that Confederation college at Thunder Bay has some excellent facilities and with additional capital could broaden and, of course, could provide the northern atmosphere and attitude to those programs that are being broadcast in northern Ontario rather than having them manufactured and produced here in southern Ontario.

The commission was requested to act upon Ontario's objectives and suggestions, in particular the need for co-ordinated regional solutions encompassing both broadcasting and cable, to be discussed at regional hearings.

The submission identified two areas of particular need. The area north and west of Sault Ste. Marie along the north east shore of Lake Superior. The one that the member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Lane) and my colleague, the member for Sault Ste. Marie, is very much involved in. The other area, of course, is that area west of Thunder Bay west of the border, and as far north of the 51st parallel.

Both areas lack CTV service and top quality alternative distance signals for cable subscribers. The submission expressed Ontario's concern over the high cost of microwave delivery in northern Ontario and suggested that this issue might be pursued in regional hearings.

The Ministry of Northern Affairs is participating with the MTC to ensure that solutions to TV service in the area north of Sault Ste. Marie—Wawa, White River, Chapleau, Hornepayne, and Dubreuilville—provide satisfactory TV service, both off-air and cable, to the maximum number of people possible. So we are working very closely with them.

DGB Consultants Limited are currently completing a study that will determine the economic and technical alternatives for the area and their cost implications. The study includes an evaluation of the proposal put forward by Dr. George Young, of Chapleau, to provide a cable system in the Wawa area.

In northwestern Ontario, you might say that the government is aware of three regional proposals to improve TV service in that area. That is the area west of Thunder Bay. I am sure that the honourable member for Rainy River is aware of these. The Norwont and Norvideo of Atikokan and Fort Frances proposal, the Kenora Cablevision of Kenora proposal, and the CKPR-TV and CHFD-TV proposal from Thunder Bay. All proposals, of course, are at the formative stage only.

CRTC when reviewing Kenora Cable-tv's licence stated that the economics of broadcasting in the region may demand unique proposals to effect solutions and that all broadcasting options for the region should be addressed. In particular, a complete and viable plan for the introduction of CTV in the area was considered to be of paramount importance. It is very encouraging to note that the CRTC decision is reflecting Ontario's policies and priorities for improved TV service throughout northern Ontario.

I think that is very important, because many of the things we suggested in those hearings in Sudbury have attracted the imagination and the interest of the CRTC and it is moving ahead on them.

I might say on this point that David Brough, who is providing many of the smaller communities with a form of entertainment—Is that the way to put it?—

Mr. Wildman: That is a good way of putting it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —has in essence, you might say, in a formal way received some form of sanction from the CRTC, in that he has not been licensed but he has not been put out of business; it is kind of a no decision. The point I want to make is that here is an entrepreneur who is providing a form of entertainment in some of our communities.

It is relatively costly. I was up in Pickle Lake about a month ago and they informed me that the community had bought the facilities for $3,000. It is being operated out of an individual's home. In fact, the system is sitting right in her kitchen, where it is easy to operate. She gets two 12-hour tapes a day with a suitable program that is delivered to the 108 residents of Pickle Lake, who each pay $10 a month. They have contracted with Mr. Brough to provide them with these tapes at $1,000 a month.

The reception was very good the day I was there. That is the entertainment channel, and if you want news or a sports event then you turn on CBC. They were quite satisfied with what they were getting, albeit they did think that $10 a month was a little high and sometimes there is a delay in getting the new programs in and there is repetition. Nevertheless, I have to say to you that here is an entrepreneur who is doing something in northern Ontario that maybe some of the higher levels of other organizations or corporations should have been doing earlier.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I was speaking to someone this morning about Mr.

Brough's setup, and the minister made me think of something—as a matter of fact it was my brother, the federal member, who I understand the minister is supporting in the next federal election.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You said it, not I.

Mr. T. P. Reid: He apparently was in Red Lake recently and appeared on the community channel and said that while he was in the studio, if that is the word, they were showing reruns of I Love Lucy and she looked like she was about 22 years old; so some of the programs leave a little bit to be desired. Perhaps I might share with the House the latest information that I have, that Mr. Brough finally got around to trying to license himself to the CRTC, which apparently turned him down because of the quality, I presume, of the application that he made. I am happy to hear that Red Lake has bought the system. Mr. Brough owns the one in Ignace, I believe, and I think the rest are all community owned.

I want to go into this to some extent. Does this come under this vote, project development and implementation? Is that part of this particular vote?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Who in your ministry is responsible then for this aspect, because I spend a lot of time talking to people in MTC. Who can I bother in your ministry? I don't notice anybody waving their hands.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I will just get the name of the individual.

Mr. T. P. Reid: While that is coming forward, I would like to go back a few years, if I may. As I recall we gave a gentleman in Thunder Bay—I believe with CKPR—an NODC loan for I think $650,000.

Mr. Wildman: Conrad Lavigne got one in Timmins.

Mr. T. P. Reid: The object of which at that time—I think it was 1971 or 1972 or maybe earlier—was to provide an alternative TV network to CBC, not only for Thunder Bay, but it was supposed to be expanded to cover Ignace, Atikokan to the west and also east to Wawa and along the north shore to Schreiber and so on.

I can't recall if that was a forgivable loan, but I do know that nothing ever developed out of that $650,000 of taxpayers' money outside of the city of Thunder Bay. I appreciate these are very costly projects because I've been involved in trying to get an alternative television station for Rainy River, Emo, Ignace and so on.

I wonder if the minister can recall any of the details? He can't. Has he got the name of the person who will never be at the end of the phone when I want him?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The person you should contact in our ministry who is dealing with television and radio approvals in northern Ontario is Margaret Rodrigues.

Mr. Wildman: Any relation?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Absolutely not, you may rest assured.

Mr. T. P. Reid: She remains in Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, she is in Toronto.

If I may just follow up on the honourable member's comments with regard to CKPR, I believe that was a performance loan. In other words, if the owner performed according to the agreement, then the portion in question was forgiven. I believe that he has performed and that the services he was to provide for Thunder Bay have been and are being provided.

The extension of services west of Thunder Bay was a separate application. It would have been a separate project entirely. Additional funds, as the honourable member has correctly pointed out, would have been provided because it is extremely costly. Since then, as I pointed out in my earlier comments, there have been two additional proposals put forward. I suppose that has made it difficult for CRTC to make a decision, if it has gone that far, and to get the support of all those involved. We've got Norwont, Cablevision and CKPR; the three are still sitting there. I understand that they're not in a detailed way or in a form they can be presented to the CRTC for its close scrutiny. Some of the areas are pretty general and there must be some further refinement to their proposals.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I wonder if the minister would indulge me by answering this. I know the gentleman who is involved in the Norwont application extremely well. He happens to be the president of a Conservative association. They have been trying to make a deal with Bell Canada. I would presume that our mutual friend, Mr. Johnson from Kenora, is having the same problem. I understand from Norwont that they can't arrive at a reasonable figure with Bell to use their facilities so that they can provide that service to the people in Ignace or Emo or Rainy River at a reasonable cost.

Has the minister been involved in any of these negotiations? Has he been able to apply any pressure through his ministry? I must say I don't know whether what they're asking for is reasonable or not. I do know that if they get anywhere what they're asking for, there's no way the people in these communities can afford those kinds of rates for an additional television channel, or two or three. That is one question.

The other question is—and I have no concept of what the technology is—is there any other way of providing the service outside of the facilities of Bell Canada and/or the kind of bicycling business that Mr. Brough and the northern access network do?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: To answer the first part of that question, I would say we have had some discussions with the various groups. They have been in to see us and have presented their various proposals to us. Our thrust and our support is for improved services in northern Ontario, as we indicated to the CRTC at the Sudbury hearings. Of course, that falls right on the doorstep of Bell Canada and CNCP Communications.

It has been said to us, and I have no way of verifying it, that the figures Bell originally came up with were just astronomical and absolutely ridiculous.

I'm told, further, that these are always negotiated. In other words, Bell in a monopoly position, comes in with a very high figure and as time goes on and as pressure mounts and negotiations continue down the road there is always some readjustment. How far that will go, I don't know. I think it is fair to say that our ministry is the one responsible to a degree for the improvement of the quality of life in northern Ontario, and we consider television services to be of prime importance. We have had some very good discussions with MTC where we're putting as much pressure as we can through the normal channels, but we haven't been involved directly with the private sector as far as supporting one proposal vis-à-vis another in their submissions to Bell.

I don't know when that will come or if it ever will. I think that our effort has to be to impress upon those involved in bringing this service that we want it, it should be there, we're entitled to it and we're going to do everything possible as a government to make sure that it's brought about. Hopefully, it will be done by the private sector. I think they should do it. If there are other ways of bringing that kind of service to parts of northern Ontario—a number have been suggested; even receiving from satellite, although it is only limited to a specific period of time and extremely costly.

Of course these proposals are all different. I don't know if you've seen the Kenora cable one. It is quite different. It pulls from Winnipeg and it comes down the other way through a microwave system. They're all different in some way or in some form. But outside of the Brough proposal or the microwave and the satellite, I don't know of any other way that we can get those services in our area.

Mr. T. P. Reid: If I could be presumptuous and sum up for the minister then (a) you have no concrete program for providing this kind of TV access in northern Ontario outside of your Indian reserves farther north; (b) that being so, and I can understand and appreciate the difficulties, what does Margaret Rodrigues do?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Margaret Rodrigues is heavily involved in these discussions, keeping us up to date on the various proposals. She also expresses that northern point of view because she pulls in from all over northern Ontario and co-operates very closely with MTC. She is the key person within the ministry with regard to television and radio services improvement for northern Ontario.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Chairman, if I could follow on from that, could the minister indicate when he anticipates the consultant's report that he mentioned to be completed, or does he have some indication? And could he estimate how much this consultant's study is going to cost?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I don't have the date of that but maybe I could get it from my staff if any are here.

Mr. Wildman: While we're getting that, did I correctly understand you to say that the study in the northeastern Superior shore involves Dr. Young? He has a licence in the Wawa area and he's talking about starting some kind of operation this fall. But having said that, you're still not interested in somehow funding a service that the residents would be paying for—that is a pay-TV type of service?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, Mr. Chairman, I think I've made it very clear on a number of occasions that we are not interested in giving financial assistance to a cable television system. I'm told that the consultant's report is expected to be completed during this summer and we should have some further information that we can pass along; I don't have anything on the cost.

Mr. Wildman: I just want to finish that up, Mr. Chairman, by indicating that, in terms of Mr. Brough's operation in Wawa, right now nobody seems to know exactly what is happening there, since the people who are receiving the service as yet are not paying for it. They're not kicking, but Mr. Brough has apparently not been available since the CRTC denied his application. He is now in northern Manitoba, I understand, trying to set up a similar network there.

[4:30]

Are you involving him in your study as well or is he just sort of left, as the CRTC seems to have left him, in the sense of saying: "Okay, as long as there isn't any other service there we'll put up with you, but as soon as some other service comes in then you had better shut down"?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, Mr. Chairman, the Brough program is not involved in these studies. As the honourable member well knows, he is unlicensed; therefore it is totally illegal.

I was interested in one newspaper report that I read where the CRTC encouraged the municipalities to go along the route of the Brough system. In other words, the municipalities purchase the equipment, do their own programming and funnel it out to their residents, so he must have something there that is very worthwhile.

Mr. Wildman: In the improvement district of Dubreuilville they are doing that. They have the system they are setting up. They're getting French tapes in, French television, and they are providing the service for the community. Basically, I don't know how to say it exactly, I guess they bought the technology from Mr. Brough and they are now carrying it out. There have been some complaints and some dissatisfaction in Wawa with the quality of some of the programming with Brough and the council is considering going ahead with the kind of thing that Dubreuilville has done, but they're in a rather confusing situation right now since Dr. Young has been awarded a licence for cable and they seem to be kind of confused.

The other thing I wanted to raise with the minister was the question of residential care facilities for the elderly and disabled in Wawa to serve the north end of Algoma. This matter has been discussed with the Ministry of Community and Social Services off and on for some time now. There have been a number of various proposals made by the senior citizens, the township council and the Algoma district social family services board.

At the time of our visit to Wawa, the minister indicated that he was willing to explore this whole problem with the Ministry of Community and Social Services. I wonder if he could indicate what person in his ministry has the responsibility for that kind of co-ordination of social services for northern Ontario, and could he bring us up to date on what kinds of studies or liaison his ministry has had with the Ministry of Community and Social Services?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: As the honourable member is very much aware, we're very interested as a ministry, of course, and concerned about those very unique requirements of northern Ontario. I think the establishment of a home for the aged is one of them, where we have over the years developed large homes for the aged and had to transport some considerable distance those residents who might not be familiar with that particular area. I know that in my own area of Sioux Lookout and Dryden and Red Lake, where there were some 150 to 175 miles from the Pinecrest home in Kenora, there was a considerable outcry, you might say, in the Red Lake area because of this.

We were able to build, under new amendments to the act, a satellite to the home for the aged. Now we're using the old Margaret Cochenour Hospital. It's been completely renovated and it is a satellite for the Pinecrest home for the aged in Kenora that fills that need. The residents of Red Lake don't have to travel that distance and be thrust into an unfamiliar environment, one that they're not accustomed to and one that they haven't lived in at all.

I think the same situation exists within the areas to which the member refers, the Wawa area. Indeed, I was very much impressed with the attitude of the council and the whole community to get something going as quickly as possible. There has been a start on these discussions with the Ministry of Community and Social Services by Assistant Deputy Minister Herb Aiken and my own deputy, Tom Campbell. We are just starting to move ahead but that, in a nutshell, is our thrust.

I have to say to the honourable member that I realize there is a lack of capital dollars and the cost of operating small homes for the aged is very high; this, of course, will place additional burdens on that particular ministry which may have to be looked at very carefully.

Mr. Wildman: There's only one other thing, Mr. Chairman. Earlier in the estimates, when we were discussing the policy on cottage lots, I raised the question of the problem of people who live and work in small communities in unorganized areas of northern Ontario who have a very difficult time in purchasing any kind of property for building lots of permanent housing sometimes because there isn't land available but also, even when there is land available, because there's a great deal of confusion about title and who owns what, and the surveys seem to be in a very confused state. That certainly is the problem in my area and, I understand, in many other areas of northern Ontario.

I wonder, is there anyone in the Ministry of Northern Affairs who is talking to the Ministry of Housing about this kind of problem with a view to doing the kinds of surveys and title searches necessary in areas where there is that kind of confusion and to make land available with the Ministry of Housing and the Ministry of Natural Resources?

It seems to me that one of the problems we have got is that these two ministries, Housing and Natural Resources, can't seem to get together to deal with this problem. I wonder if the Ministry of Northern Affairs is playing any role in co-ordinating these two ministries to try to deal with that problem.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, our thrust to date has been directly involved with regard to summer cottage lots. We have strongly felt that there should be a larger number of summer cottage lots available in northern Ontario. The Ministry of Natural Resources has some lake development plans for many of the lakes in northern Ontario. To ensure there is that continued thrust and movement with regard to the development of more lots, we have earmarked an additional $144,000 in our ministry which we will be allocating to Natural Resources and which is on top of their half a million dollars for development of summer cottage lots; so it's that kind of a thrust.

If the honourable member has some specific communities that we should be looking at and has a problem, particularly in the unorganized areas—and I know there is some reluctance to embark on opening up a large number of lots in these unorganized areas because the tax base is so small; in my home town of Hudson, the tax load on these properties is so small that it costs nothing to keep a lot vacant. Why sell the lot when you are paying perhaps only a few dollars annually for the local roads tax and maybe a small amount for the board of education, and that's all? There is no municipal tax at all; so there's no encouragement to have fill-ins. This causes a problem when there are all kinds of vacant lots there; the individual says: "For all I will get out of the sale, I might as well keep it. There may be something come up somewhere down the road."

If the honourable member knows of specific communities in the unorganized areas that we should be looking at, then we would like to hear from him so we could lend our support to getting a few lots. I don't think we would embark on a massive development plan to put in 50 or 60 lots when there's only maybe four or five needed over a period of two years, but we would be glad to look at it.

Mr. Wildman: I am glad to hear the minister say that, because I think that before we even discuss anything about cottage lots we should be looking at people who live and work in the communities and deal with their problems in terms of housing.

A specific community in my area, Missanabie, is a problem. There's a great deal of confusion about who owns the private land and whether the private lots that are available are large enough to meet the Ministry of the Environment's standards. There seems to be confusion between the Ministry of Housing and MNR regarding whether or not there's any crown land available. I've had extensive discussions with the Ministry of Natural Resources about that. I'm told by both the Ministry of Revenue and the Ministry of Natural Resources that there's a need for a resurvey, a title search, before anything can be done. I'd appreciate it if the Ministry of Northern Affairs would look into that.

I'm sure also that the member for Lake Nipigon (Mr. Stokes) could point to a number of specific communities in his area. I imagine, with the minister's commitment, that the Ministry of Northern Affairs will be hearing from him.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: There is a role that Northern Affairs can play in co-ordinating an examination of a specific problem like that. Certainly, we will take that up to make sure that somebody's there to work closely with you.

If I could elaborate further on my earlier comments, what we're seeing in northern Ontario is a real movement to the mobile home. They're becoming the thing in northern Ontario. They're creating official problems for these small communities in that their owners move in quickly and move off quickly.

The ease with which a young couple can buy a mobile unit today is tremendous. With a few thousand dollars down, they can have a home that's totally modern and complete with all the facilities after they get in the water a sewer hookup. They're very attractive for northern Ontario living.

There's some feeling against them in southern Ontario and in many municipalities in the north where they don't want mobile units put in. In the unorganized areas they're an acceptable thing. We're getting the message across to some of the planners that mobile homes are here to stay—let's make no bones about it—and we should be adjusting our planning accordingly.

Mr. Wildman: In response to that, I don't think the minister has to indicate anything to me about mobile homes. We have an awful lot of them, as the member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Rhodes) could attest, in the area around Sault Ste. Marie.

I want to respond to one thing he said. I'm sure in small communities, such as bush camps or mining communities, where the employment situation is less stable, mobile homes can be used for people to move in and move out. I want to point out that studies have been done across the country that indicate that about 80 per cent of the mobile home purchases are not mobile in the sense of being moved around but usually stay in the same lot where they're first located.

Mr. Germa: In conjunction with cottage lots, as was raised by the member for Algoma, there is a new thrust by the Ministry of Natural Resources in going from leased lots to the sale of cottage lots. The Minister of Northern Affairs recited what happens in these small communities where a person gets title to a lot and, because the taxes are low, refuses to transfer this lot to someone who really needs it. The ministry refuses to call or identify that activity by its real name, which is land speculation, even though it is on a small scale. Why don't you say it as it is? You should also say you're not in favour of land speculation by people holding land off the market when someone else has a need for it.

Here we have the Minister of Natural Resources going into a new project. Since 1970 we have had a program of leasing cottage lots to people. Now we're going to a system of titles through sale. You know what's going to happen. There's going to be speculation on these titles. Once these people get title to the land, speculation is going to come back into the system again, much as it was before 1970.

What I'm asking the minister is what input did you have? Did you recommend against that thrust by the Minister of Natural Resources. If you didn't, why did you not, given your attitude and your criticism about people who hold land off the market to speculate?

[4:45]

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Let me say that I heartily endorse the new policies of the Ministry of Natural Resources that allows Ontario residents to purchase and own summer cottage lots in the first year of sale, gives Canadians that right in the second year of sale, and provides non-Canadians only the right to lease; I support it 100 per cent.

There is no question in my mind; I am not concerned, I have no fear, that this will add to speculating in the summer cottage lot program. An individual will be able to buy one lot in his own name. He will have to spend X number of dollars. I think it's something like $7,500 in the course of two years before he gets a title.

My experience in northern Ontario indicates that people will cherish those summer cottage lots. In fact, many people have said to me, "I would sell my home in the city before I'll sell my summer cottage lot." There is that much attachment and desire to own a summer cottage lot.

We just have different political philosophies. I believe in ownership. I see nothing wrong with ownership. The member for Sudbury doesn't believe in that philosophy. I just can't see that fear. I know the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) raises it on a continuing basis, but when I travel in northern Ontario I see a massive amount of land that's available, that's not being used.

Every time I go into a northern community the first cry I get is, "Why can't I buy a summer cottage lot? There are millions and millions of acres up here. Undeveloped land is just sitting here and you won't let me enjoy the benefits the way I would like, the way the people in southern Ontario have done for so many years."

I don't see that as a problem. We are supporting the Ministry of Natural Resources with moneys from the regional priority budget to get on with the job of creating more cottage lots in northern Ontario and making more Ontarians owners of their own province.

Mr. Germa: It's unfortunate that I am not blessed with as short a memory as the minister might suppose, because I remember him administering a program, as the Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs, when leased cottage lots were the only type of lots going. You cannot have it both ways. Presumably, you must have supported the leased lot program, otherwise you wouldn't have administered it.

Now, just like that, in the twinkle of an eye, you turn around and say, "Now I support another program;" when we had the other program in the beginning. Prior to 1970 we did have title for cottage lots. Your Ministry of Mines and Northern Affairs for a reason, which I know, went to the leased system of cottage lots. Here we are, seven years later, and you've reversed yourself again. Can you go through this once again with me very slowly, starting way back. Let's start in 1969. What happened in 1970 and what's happening in 1978? The world has gone full circle, apparently, and you are the man right in there. You should be standing on your head now because you're upside down.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, I don't think it's quite that way. In 1971 there was a move to control foreign ownership; that is the sale of crown land directly to foreigners, that was the thrust. We went to leasing, that's seven years ago. Times change, attitudes change and I think that the attitude of the government today is to provide—

Mr. T. P. Reid: Governments become minorities.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That's right, that's happened too. We responded to the demand of the public; and they have expressed their point of view, very sincerely and with a great deal of enthusiasm—

Mr. Grande: Weak link.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —that they wanted to purchase crown land and we've adhered to that request. Again, I don't have any qualms or fears that we'll go on a massive program of Ontario residents getting a summer cottage lot, spending $7,500, getting a title and then putting it on the market for non-Canadians, when that non-Canadian can lease land. I think we're serving two purposes here. We're allowing the Ontario resident ownership of his cottage lot, which he can build and develop. He has title to it, and he can pass it on to his children and his children's children; it's there within their family. If he wants to sell it after making an expenditure of that size, that's his right as an Ontario resident. If the non-resident wants to move and to obtain crown land, he can only do it through the lease basis. I think the program we have come forward with now satisfies all our requirements and all the needs and the feelings of the public at large.

Mr. Germa: That is the identical program that we had going seven years ago. The minister has said nothing new. He hasn't explained anything at all. I want to register a complaint. Whether this cottage lot is in lease, or in title, and apparently it is going to be in title, I object strenuously to these lakes being encircled by private property owners and denying the general public access to these lakes.

There are eight lakes in the regional municipality of Sudbury and I can hardly get on to any of them unless I enter on a street allowance, the 50-foot street allowance or the 66-foot street allowance that runs to the lake. That is where the average, normal person enters a lake. You could go to one of the biggest lakes in northern Ontario, Lake Nipissing in North Bay. I went there. A beautiful beach goes for six to eight miles and the only way that I can enter Lake Nipissing is through a street allowance of 66 feet. These private owners put all sorts of obstacles on the beach to prevent the people of northern Ontario from spreading out from that 66 feet. We are lying there like sardines on the 66-foot beach and the rest of the miles are all vacant because of your attitude towards private ownership. This is just going to make it worse.

What I am asking you is to have some input with the Minister of Northern Affairs. Apparently it is going to go and I don't have the facility to retard this program. If he is going to develop these lots, I would ask that it be done not on a waterfront basis but to be done on a subdivision basis with common access for that subdivision to the lakefront. Surely, this is more economic? You avoid and prevent those problems of pollution that you just cannot police.

You get eight or 10 steambaths on the shore of a lake, 10 feet from the lakefront and you know what happens; you cannot have that many inspectors. When you get these camps and cottages all the way up we are ruining lake after lake. I would like you to have a talk with the Minister of Northern Affairs and point out to him—

Mr. T. P. Reid: Natural Resources.

Mr. Germa: He used to be Natural Resources. Now he is Northern Affairs.

Mr. Grande: He is no longer what he is nor what he was.

Mr. Germa: That is my great concern of what is going on with cottage lots in northern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, if I could respond briefly, I share the member's concern. I think we all accept the fact that there has been a lot of mistakes with regard to lakeshore development and the lack of planning. We know that is not the case today, because before any subdivision or any development of a lake is undertaken the Ministry of Natural Resources does a very intensive lakeshore and lake study. It is done with a great deal of care and caution and local input, I might say.

The point the member raises about cluster development is a very valuable one and we have already expressed our point of view on that. Having common access for a number of cottages is certainly in keeping with our thinking and we appreciate your comments on that. We share that view.

Mr. Germa: I understand there are a couple of developments going ahead on this basis. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I am not sure. The Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. F. S. Miller) would know better than I would. We just put a general policy thrust forward.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I have two questions, if the minister would help me out. I would agree with him that the original policy—and I was one who advocated that—was that too much of our crown land was going to non-Canadians.

Of course, in the government's inimitable style, it did nothing until almost all of the land was gone—at least in the Rainy River and some in the Kenora area—and then it turned around and banned the sale to everyone. If I now understand the policy correctly, Americans, even after the first year or second year, can lease but they cannot purchase property.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Crown lands.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Right. Now my question is this. If Patrick Reid buys a lot in title, puts a $7,500 cabin on it—and I don't know where the government got that figure but that certainly puts it in the hands of the wealthy too, I might think; $7,500 in two years is a lot of money.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You wouldn't build a cabin for that.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I don't know where I would get that money.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: You are losing your credibility, Patrick.

Mr. T. P. Reid: The only way I think I could afford it is to become one of your staff, but then I'd have to live in Toronto so that wouldn't do me any good.

An hon. member: Take it out of your petty cash.

Mr. T. P. Reid: My question is this. What's to prevent me from buying a lot, putting the $7,500 cabin on it, and then turning around and selling it to my friend in Minneapolis? Or in fact what's to prevent me from having it set up through a blind—not a blind trust; that isn't what a blind trust is, but certainly being a sort of bulldog for him and buy the lot, build the cabin, and then as soon as I got the deed, turn it over to him for the nominal sum of a dollar or, in fact, use his money to do these things?

Mr. J. A. Taylor: You said that was your problem.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: There are always ways and means and loopholes to get around some of these things.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That's why you went to the other program in 1970.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes. Times have changed. Now, as the member correctly points out, a non-Canadian who wants to buy crown land can't. All he can do is lease it. If he wants to buy it from the crown, he can't purchase it. He can't get a title for it; he can only lease it.

Of course, if the lots are available, because Ontario residents and Canadian residents will have the first and second year options and the right to—

Mr. T. P. Reid: But there is nothing to prevent this situation.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That's right. If there are still lots available in that subdivision that haven't been picked up by Ontario residents or Canadians, then he has the right to lease that land. If Patrick Reid—and I don't think he would ever do it; I would hope he wouldn't—speculated in summer cottage lots, I am sure that the Minister of Natural Resources would single him out very quickly if he had made a practice of buying crown land in a subdivision under his name, spending his $7,500—included on top of that, of course, would be the purchase price—and selling it to a non-Canadian. I think that might cause some concern in that ministry; I don't know, but it would be worthwhile watching for it.

Mr. T. P. Reid: All right, that's what I'm getting at. Is there going to be anything in the act or regulations that in fact says, "You, Patrick Reid," or "You, Patrick Reid family, are only entitled to one crown lot for every five or 10 years or whatever" to deal with this situation? This is why you went to leases only for Canadians and Americans originally, because you couldn't come up with some kind of legal mechanism that you could put apparently on the title and say, "This land can only be sold to Canadians." Now you've turned around and reversed that policy as well.

While I'm on my feet I might also say to my friend from Sudbury, I have some land that I have been trying to get a subdivision on for over two years. If they don't act any faster with the government itself than they have with me, we don't have to worry about any lots being sold or leased to anybody.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: There, I say to the member for Sudbury, he is a land speculator, you see. And he intends to make a profit on it.

Mr. T. P. Reid: If I don't go bankrupt first.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: At this point in time, I am not aware of any regulations that would control that. I would point out to the honourable member that if he were living in Rainy River and had a summer cottage lot there that he bought under this new program, and then was moved, because of his employment, to Thunder Bay, that he shouldn't be denied—

Mr. T. P. Reid: I appreciate the problems.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —the right of maybe buying a summer cottage lot in the Thunder Bay area or the Wawa area or the Sault Ste. Marie area. There are all kinds of problems attached to any kind of regulation like that.

Here, again, I guess I'm endowed with a great amount of faith in our northern Ontario residents in that I know and I appreciate how they feel about their summer cottage lots. There is not that kind of speculation in summer cottage lots among Ontario residents. The member for Rainy River shakes his head and agrees with me.

Mr. T. P. Reid: There will be. I mean, I know people who will speculate.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We're in the year 1978 and in my experience in northern Ontario I have never seen speculation in summer cottage lots and I don't expect that this will encourage it.

[5:00]

Mr. T. P. Reid: I am not saying there is going to be speculation. I am just saying if I have a friend from Minneapolis or International Falls, Minnesota, or from Timbuktu, who comes and says, "Pat, I would sure like to have a cabin in northwestern Ontario. How about you buying this particular piece of property for me? I will give you the money. When we can go and transfer the deed, we will just transfer the deed." As he is my friend, I would say, "Sure, Charlie, I would be glad to help you out." Then he speculates.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: There are always going to be loopholes. I don't think you can plug every hole. There is no question about it, that may well happen. I hope the member for Rainy River wouldn't be involved in that. I am sure he wouldn't. Knowing him as I do, I think he wouldn't.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I wouldn't, but there is the odd Tory still left in Rainy River and you can't trust them.

Ms. Bryden: Does the minister recall a study of the sales of cottage lots which was done about 1969 or 1970? I think he was Minister of Natural Resources or Lands and Forests at that time. In that study there was an analysis of whether leasing or sale was the best method of attaining the objectives of the ministry for meeting the recreational needs and looking after the environmental concerns and land-use policies of the ministry. The conclusion of that, in very strong terms, was that leasing was much the preferable course in order to retain control of the land.

I would like to know if any new study has been done by officials of the ministry or if he knows about any by his colleague, the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. F. S. Miller), to indicate that that decision was not a correct one and that the objectives of the ministry and of the government for meeting these goals can be met by alienating the land to private owners. That means if you want to get it back, you either have to purchase it at whatever the going market price is or you have to expropriate, both of which can be quite costly as well. Usually you expropriate at market price or something very close to it.

That is my first question. Has there been any new study of the best method of attaining the goals and, if so, has it been published and can we have a copy?

Second, you say the public wanted to buy cottage lots in the north. I would like to know what sort of a survey was done of what the public thinks on this subject or whether it was just a few of his friends who told him they would like to buy cottage lots.

It seems to me if you are going to make a statement like that, you should have some sort of actual survey taken and be able to table it for us to show us exactly how many people want cottage lots up there. If there is a long queue, then it seems to me there is going to be speculation. The new regulations the Minister of Natural Resources has brought in have no provision against speculation. Once the cottage lot is acquired by an individual, he can sell it to anybody he wants for any price he can get.

If there is a scarcity, there is bound to be this type of speculation. As other members have mentioned, I don't think there is any provision in the regulations to prevent any person buying more than one lot or a family acquiring more than one lot. This also can create great unfairness if there is a scarcity. Have we any study of the demand and do we know what the situation is?

The library has just sent me this report.

It is entitled Ontario Department of Lands and Forests, January 1971; A Report on the Disposition of Public Land for Cottage Purposes in Ontario, Other Canadian Provinces and Neighbouring States. In the summary of evaluation on page 15, it says: "It appears that the present method of disposing of crown land falls short of the new departmental goal and objective because it does not meet the environmental standards and the social and economic benefit criteria of these objectives. To meet these criteria would require revision in the rate structure and the imposition of more adequate control over land use." Their conclusion was that leasing would be better than sale.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, I'm not aware of any in-depth studies as to the demand for summer cottage lots, but I can assure you that, as a northerner, one would have to just spend a little time in northern Ontario to realize for himself that he wouldn't need any studies. It would just be a waste of time and a waste of money.

The requirements are there. There is no question about it. You can go anywhere in northern Ontario, and I would invite you to go up and travel the north and go in and ask that question of anybody. There is no need to go through a long charade of having a study as to need. When you see the line-ups that occur at the Ministry of Natural Resources offices when they have their draws for the cottage lots, it is certainly indicative that something had to change.

Again, we believe that the desire to own crown land on the part of Ontario residents and Canadians is strong. We don't, as I said earlier, believe in the philosophy of the New Democratic Party, which doesn't believe in that type of ownership. Let's be honest, there are two different political philosophies.

Ms. Bryden: You didn't believe in it from 1970 to 1978.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: At that time there was a move to control foreign ownership and we went that way and maybe went too far. We're readjusting it now and, of course, the economic desire that we wanted to get into the summer cottage lot program has been generated by the new requirement of $7,500 which has to be spent in addition to the purchase price, the survey and the cost of the road. We're getting the economic impetus that we want with this new program and I'm confident, as I said many times, that there will not be the speculation that the third party is concerned about.

One has to feel that in the north. It's not like in southern Ontario where there is a real shortage of land. As I said, I flew from Kirkland Lake to Kenora, four and a half hours, in a twin-engine airplane, and for four and a half hours I flew over crown land. If you flew four and a half hours in southern Ontario, my God, where would you be? You'd be from Windsor to Quebec City, I guess.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: Further than that.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Further than that? I don't think southerners really appreciate the size of northern Ontario. That's what I'm trying to say. Ninety per cent of the land mass is north of the French River, but only 10 per cent of the population. Surely, we have a right as northerners to own some of the land ourselves? Those of us who live there should have that right. Is that asking too much, that we own a summer cottage lot?

Mr. J. A. Taylor: No, right on, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: To hear some people speak about it bothers me. I see the member for North Bay agreeing with me.

Mr. Bolan: Nipissing.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Nipissing, I'm sorry. I keep saying North Bay. I don't know of any studies that relate to need, but I can assure you from my own experience that the need is there.

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Minister, with respect, it seems to me the same building could be put under the regulations on a leased lot as on a purchased lot. You could require that they don't get a lease unless they build a $7,500 building, so you would get the same economic activity. As far as whether there is going to be speculation or not, you're not suggesting, surely, that you could drop a cottage lot anywhere in those hundreds of miles that you flew over.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: Thousands of miles.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Thousands.

Ms. Bryden: They do have to be planned and they still are going to be relatively scarce. This is the problem. If they're going to be scarce then it seems to me that you have to somehow retain control of them or there will be speculation.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I think one thing that is not being accepted is that there will be a very careful plan. The Ministry of Natural Resources has been studying many of our lakes for the last several years for summer cottage lot development. The desire now is to come forward with at least 1,000 lots per year in northern Ontario. We think that will more than meet the demand. In fact, it will keep the price at a reasonable rate.

When you think the people in a community—you know, in Metropolitan Toronto they can go out and buy a lot. They put their home on it. They get title to it. If the government wants to put a road through there, then they have to expropriate it. The structure is there and the same thing should apply in northern Ontario.

Why should we be treated any different up there? Really, I have a hard time accepting it. They want a different set of rules for the north than for the south. If there's going to be a provincial park on a certain lake and it's in the best interest of the public, then I say let the public carry the cost of expropriating that and for that development, if it wasn't included in their original planning.

I am sure that with the finite planning that we have now islands will not be allowed to be sold. Beaches are retained for public use, so there are all kinds of protection under the Public Lands Act; even 25 per cent of the usable shoreline must be retained in the public interest. But I have to tell you there are still hundreds and thousands of miles of shorelines that can be developed in the best interest of northerners.

Item 4 agreed to.

Vote 901 agreed to.

On vote 902, northern communities assistance program, item 1, community priorities:

Mr. Bolan: I would like to address myself to the question of community priorities. I think the minister is probably aware of what I will attempt to talk about and that's the DREE programming which, as you know, is laid on for the city of North Bay. However the federal and provincial governments are bogged down on the amount.

I am not here this afternoon, Mr. Minister, to harangue you or to harangue the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough). I can assure you that I have harangued my federal counterpart. I can assure you of that. I can also assure you that I have harangued Mr. Lessard; in fact I did last February when we met here in Toronto. However, I would like to put it to you on the basis that it's better to have a bird in the hand than two in the bush. You are a reasonable man and as such I would ask you to convey these very—I would suggest—reasonable words to the sometimes very reasonable Treasurer.

It starts off, as you know, on a DREE plan which was prepared for the city of North Bay. It goes back some time. The first application I think was made some time around 1974.

In 1975 there was an agreement prepared between the federal and provincial governments. I saw that agreement; it was dated August 1975. I saw it in my capacity as a member of city council at that time. It called for the total expenditure of $9.5 million. This was for the creation of the industrial park, the various access roads and the infrastructure. I don't have to go into details. It did not at that time include a package for the Marshall Avenue interchange with Highway 11.

That was acceptable to the province. It was acceptable to the federal government. Somehow the deal fell apart. In any event, it did.

One of the things that happened there was an overrun on the Thunder Bay DREE fund. It could be that some of the funds designated for that part of northeastern Ontario were transferred to northwestern Ontario to cover the Thunder Bay package, which was sorely needed and an excellent job was done of it as well. But, in any event, we ran out of dough, to put it very plain and very simple, and I think that's the reason why the project was not completed.

The project was revitalized in 1977 and I have some correspondence here to that effect. This is correspondence between the director of planning and works in North Bay and TEIGA. This goes back to February 1977.

The federal and provincial governments got closer and closer. They reached the point, Mr. Minister, where as you know there was an exchange of letters this year between yourself and Mr. Lessard. The first letter, if I may be allowed to use excerpts from it, was from your ministry, from yourself to Mr. Lessard, dated February 24, in which you say you're pleased to see that you seem to be approaching completion of the North Bay amendment to the northeastern Ontario subsidiary agreement. As you know, there was a whole DREE agreement and whatever happened in North Bay would be an amendment to that entire agreement.

You then go on to say: "Notwithstanding the foregoing, I was rather distressed to learn that DREE staff have omitted some rather important items from this development package. I'm advised by my officials that railway grade separations on Marshall Avenue and the interchange at Highway 11 are not included in the schedule." In other words, the DREE people were excluding the Marshall Avenue interchange and the two railway overpasses as well. "It seems to me that we cannot develop an industrial park without a properly completed access road."

I'd just like to stop on that point, Mr. Minister, and advise you that right now there are three access roads into that proposed area for the industrial park. The access roads are these: Highway 11B south, Highway 11B north—that's the old Lakeshore Road which runs right through North Bay where the old road used to be. I don't know if you've ever driven down to Toronto some 20 years ago using that road, but it was a long run. Then there's also Birch's Road. Birch's Road runs from Highway 11 right down into Lakeshore Road. So you have three access roads to the industrial site right now.

Part of the funding would be used to create another access road and that is the extension of Chippewa Avenue, which would run parallel to Lakeshore Drive and run right into the industrial park. That would be another access road. In addition to this, there eventually would be the extension of Marshall Avenue in an easterly direction over to Highway 11, and this is where you get into the question of the interchange. My only reason for mentioning that is that in your letter you say: "It seems to me that we cannot develop an industrial park without a properly completed access road." I raise these points to bring out to you the fact that there already are existing access roads to that particular proposed site.

Then you said: "This omission leaves the commitment incomplete, with the prospect of additional financing requirements a few years hence to be borne by North Bay and the province." That would be for the interchange and the two railway lines, and I believe the cost of that would be 75 per cent for the province and 25 per cent for the municipality. I think that's what the split would be.

"In my view, this would result in a difficult, if not impossible, situation for the municipality, given its current financial limitations." That's absolutely correct. There's no question about that at all. The whole application for the DREE grant was made on that basis, that they were really strapped for funds and that was something they could not undertake on their own.

"In our estimation, the admitted requirement is of the magnitude of $3.4 million in gross." That's about right. "I urge you to give the matter your favourable consideration and to join with us in funding the project to completion. In anticipation of your favourable response, I have proceeded to obtain an order in council authorizing the full package. We shall be in a position to sign the documents early in March." The government of Ontario was ready in March to sign that package for about $14 million, or whatever it is.

Following this, a letter was written to you by Mr. Lessard. This was written to you around March 17, in response to your letter to him of February 24. He concurs with you about the importance of this major development. You both agree that it is a major development of great importance for the city of North Bay.

Then he goes on to say: "I would like to assure you that we are prepared to carry out our equal share of costs for all of those elements which are judged to be critical to the successful operation of this industrial park. However, at this time, I'm not persuaded that the two railway grade separations on Marshall Avenue and the interchange at Highway 11 are critical for the success of the park; and as well, there is still much uncertainty about the cost and timing."

He raises two factors here which he claims are not vital to the success of the park: a) the question about it being critical; and b) the question that there still is much uncertainty about their cost and timing. Then he points out what I have just said to you.

"Access from the park to Highway 11 and Lakeshore Road is now available along Highway 11B and Birch's Road, and later will be available along the proposed extension of Marshall Avenue at grade level to Highway 11. It is obvious it will be a number of years before there is any significant buildup."

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I'm listening.

Mr. Bolan: Mr. Reid is not though, that's the problem.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Do you want to start that all over?

Mr. Bolan: "It is obvious it will be a number of years before there is any significant buildup of commercial traffic originating from users of the park."

This again, Mr. Minister, is quite significant, because if you look at the proposed project—and I have it here, this is the proposed construction stage by stage—starting back in 1977, which was the original target date for construction, you don't reach the Marshall Avenue grade separation until 1980; so you're looking at four construction years down the line.

Assuming that this project were to start on stream in 1979, you would not be running into the proposed construction of Marshall Avenue until 1982. So it is something which is not immediate, it's something which must not be decided right now.

"The preferable option—" this again is Mr. Lessard—"to deal with this traffic problem will be much clearer and certain at that time. Officials of my department have advised your officials that we would be prepared to consider another amendment at a later date if analysis at that time justifies the provision of imposed access to and from the park. I expect to be in a position to sign this amendment by the end of March."

What he's saying is that he's prepared to sign the one excluding the Marshall Avenue interchange, which is about $10.5 million or $10.8 million. "But I am not, at this time, seeking authority to include the railway grade separations or the interchange in the package. I urge you to consider signing this modified amendment for the present, with the clear understanding that the federal government will consider additional items later should they prove to be essential for the success of this industrial park."

The next thing to follow from this was a letter which the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) wrote to the mayor of North Bay. At that time the Treasurer reiterated more or less what you had said in your letter to Mr. Lessard of the 24th. Basically, it is this, that the city of North Bay is caught in a squeeze because the two senior levels of government are being stubborn; there is no question about that at all.

I can understand what the Treasurer is trying to do. If you look at it that way, it really is not unreasonable. What he's really saying is this: "We're eventually going to have to build an interchange there. Let's squeeze an extra $2 million or whatever the federal government's share is of that interchange, let's squeeze it out of them now." Looking at it that way, there's nothing wrong with it; but the fact remains that the whole thing, the whole deal, the whole $10.8 million, might go right down the drain. I think that is wrong; and that's what I mean, Mr. Minister, when I said at the beginning of these remarks that a bird in the hand is better than two in the bush.

I'm suggesting to you, sir, that you should sign this agreement now, or convince the Treasurer that the agreement should be signed now. I am told that TEIGA officials agree that this agreement of $10.5 million should be signed now. I agree also that there is no firm commitment from the federal government that they will pick up half of the tab when it comes to Marshall Avenue later on. However, they clearly indicate that they have every intention of negotiating the matter. I would suggest to you if you can show at that time that there is need and when you have some actual costs related to the construction of it, then you should enter into further negotiations.

Even if they say they are not going to pay part of the costs of the interchange, it still means that the province is getting a better deal than by not having the agreement signed at all. If you don't sign the agreement at all, then it means that eventually, some place down along the line, that industrial park is going to be built—there is no question about that at all, whether it is 10 years from now or whether it is 15 years from now—but I suspect that it is going to be at the expense of the already hard-pressed taxpayer in North Bay. He's already right up to his throat in it.

So I am saving to the minister to take the $10.5 million or the $10.8 million or whatever it is. Take what they are offering you now and at least you have got the largest part of your project done. I can assure you that I am very familiar with that area. That industrial park can exist and can function extremely well, even without going through the process of interchanges and of the actual extension of Marshall Avenue right into Highway 11, because you will have all these other routes of access to that particular highway.

I realize you were in North Bay on Friday. My understanding is that there was no headway at that time. I ask you to reconsider the matter. I ask you to go back to the Treasurer and to suggest to him, just as I have suggested to you, that it is better to take the $10.5 million rather than to risk the whole thing. As I say, the people there are the ones who are caught in the squeeze. The last thing that I would want to happen is to have the whole package lost.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: To respond to the member for Nipissing, he has laid out the case and the problem extremely well. He has gone through the various steps and negotiations with the federal government. At the outset, I must say that I just find it unconscionable. Here we are as a province anxious to do the best for North Bay possible. We have a $15-million package that would really tie up that community and do for it what the town fathers have been wanting to do for so many years; yet we find the federal government renegeing on a total package that is part and parcel of the whole concept.

I find it unconscionable. I find they are totally insensitive with all due respect to the federal member there. I know Jean-Jacques Blais has as much interest as you and I do in this development at North Bay. Why they are dragging their feet and why they are not in more agreement to getting on with doing this particular job is beyond me, because here in a period of constraint and in a period of tight dollars in the province we are anxious to get on with a $15-million package instead of a $10-million package.

As the local member, you would want us to go on. I can tell you that as soon as the $10-million package is signed, you will be back on our doorstep looking for that other part. Let's be honest; it has to be done sooner or later. It takes a long period of time, in our experience with the DREE agreements and the negotiating aspect. They are just too long drawn out, and quite frankly we don't have the trust that we should have in some of those statements because we have been conned too many times. As a northerner, I find it really difficult. Here we have northern Ontario designated under the DREE agreement getting crumbs off the table, and the city of Montreal received $400 million from DREE. I know you share that view with me. It's insensitivity, that's really what it has to be.

The honourable member pleads a good case, that we take the $10 million and get on with the job. I have to look at it from an overall point of view in the best interests and the long-term interests of North Bay. I know they would want that total package down the road. You find the DREE officials saying that the overpass and the interchange are a total provincial responsibility and they shouldn't be involved at all, you've heard that comment.

I have to relate it to what happened in the Kenora area. Here we had a federal airport and the town of Kenora, indeed the whole region, was anxious to get on with the job of improving that airport facility. The federal government dragged its feet. The Department of Transport wasn't interested in expanding that facility. Finally, we got DREE interested. DREE said reluctantly that it would proceed. But here the province had to put up 50 per cent of those dollars to complete and upgrade a federal airport. It shows what they think of northern Ontario.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Oh come on.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Sure, we've put in some minor improvements in the Minaki Road. The member for Rainy River agrees with me; in fact it was his brother—thank God for his political help or we wouldn't have got it anyway.

On that point, I would just like to ask the House to look around northern Ontario, in areas designated under the DREE agreement, and see where all the major dollars have gone.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: Quebec.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: In northern Ontario, I mean. They've gone to Quebec, there's no question about that.

Mr. Bolan: Not in North Bay.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We had a good representative in the Kenora-Rainy River riding, so we got some assistance there for the Kenora situation. Then there was Thunder Bay. How many millions of dollars did we pour in there—$33 million?

Mr. Bolan: Oh, more than that.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You have the honourable—what's Mr. Andras's position now—Manpower and Immigration, is it? I can't keep up with these changes. You have a federal cabinet minister there.

Mr. Bolan: The provincial member, who was a Conservative, benefited from it as well. In fact they both raided the kitty, that's what happened.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You have a Liberal member representing Timmins. I have to tell the member for Nipissing to lean on his federal member, his federal minister—

Mr. Bolan: I am, I am.

Hon. Mr. Bernier:—because it seems to me that they follow a political pattern across northern Ontario.

Mr. Worton: Something like they do here.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: As long as it does things for northern Ontario and gives us the things we want, far be it for me to complain. We have to put 50 per cent of the dollars but we're anxious to get on with this. I would like to see the member for Nipissing turn it around a bit and say, "Here is a province that is practising constraints, far more than the federal government; and we are prepared in this province to put up our share of the $15 million."

Surely the time has come for the feds to recognize the real important needs and the financial position of the city of North Bay; let's not forget that. As the member has correctly pointed out, we are certain the OMB would not approve of any major borrowing on behalf of that development. They are strapped, as he correctly points out. They're the ham in the sandwich, there's no question about it, between the provincial and the federal governments.

We will continue to press for an early resolution to this issue. We want to get on with it. We think it's very beneficial to North Bay or we wouldn't have gone this far with it. All I can say is let's lean on them together, please.

Mr. Bolan: Just one question, if I may put it to you this way: What's the bottom line?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Our position is very well known. We have the overpasses and the interchanges to include in the whole package.

Mr. Bolan: Fine.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The dollar figure is, as the member has correctly pointed out, not nailed down to the actual cent, but don't forget the agreement is over a three- or four-year period. There is going to be some escalation in the cost, there's no question about that. I think the whole package is one that will best serve the interests of the North Bay area and it should be proceeded with forthwith.

Mr. Bolan: Is the minister saying that he is not prepared—neither he nor the Treasurer—to enter into this DREE agreement unless it includes funding for the grade separation on Marshall Avenue and the interchange at Highway 11.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I think we've made our position explicitly clear. That would be our position, really.

Mr. Bolan: That's what you are saying?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, that's what I'm saying. Yes, let's have the whole thing together and get on with the job—

Mr. J. A. Taylor: Don't sell your people short, Mike.

Hon. Mr. Bernier:—because we have a real interest, and quite frankly we're not getting our fair share of DREE dollars. Every time we come to signing an agreement for a DREE program it's the same hassle. It took us about a year and a half to two years to sign the DREE agreement for White River. It's so frustrating. I don't know what all that staff does here in Toronto. DREE has a big staff in Thunder Bay and a big staff in Toronto, for the amount of agreements that we sign, my deputy could do that in his spare time in the evening.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: What spare time?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: What spare time? That's a good question. But to have that large staff here in Toronto and to bring forward very few programs, it's very frustrating indeed, really it is.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Can I ask the minister under this vote about the Rainy River land clearing project? I've had conversation with your deputy minister about this lately and I understand from other people that there has been some kind of money set aside to do a study on the feasibility of the project that was put forward by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture in the Rainy River district for a land clearing project which would come to something $17 million. The minister will recall that some promise or indication, shall we say, was made at the time of the election, mostly by the defeated Tory candidate, but I was wondering what the status is of that. I understood there had been $65,000—the figure was given to me not by your deputy minister but by someone else—for a study of the feasibility of carrying out this project which was presented by the local OFA in the area. Can you give me any information on that?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I can give you something on that. I do remember some discussions being undertaken, but I don't have the specifics with me at this time.

Mr. T. P. Reid: May I raise a point of order while we're waiting for that information? It used to be the practice in the House that the minister had his staff in front of him. Is there any particular reason why he doesn't? He obviously needs assistance.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, I think the deputy felt that he could operate more effectively from the sideline and I think he is doing very well.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: The minister can stand up on his own; he is a very able fellow.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I was just inquiring. I see the table and chairs there. I thought maybe he did not want to be seen with you.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I have just been informed that the agriculture program had about $500,000 in it. Is it for this year? Yes, but they added another $100,000 to that. There was $600,000. These funds are based on local committees and they can decide on the type of program that they want for their specific areas.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Campbell provided me with that answer, and I understand there was an enrichment of $100,000 or so this year, but my question was whether or not, either through your ministry or elsewhere, there had been some money budgeted to do a study on the feasibility of the suggestion or brief put forward by the OFA.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I don't have anything in my notes here under the community priorities activity. If there is something under regional I don't seem to have it here.

Mr. T. P. Reid: While everyone is searching frantically, or not frantically, does the minister have anything to do with the community employment program, which is a joint program between the federal and the provincial governments in which committees were set up at the local level to come up with employment projects? I realize it's through the Ministry of Labour, primarily, but do you have any input into that?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, we do. We have a grant this year of about $15,000 and the remaining $21,000 will be borne by the federal government. That would be about $36,000 to stimulate the economy in the Fort Frances-Rainy River areas through agricultural development.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Is that for the study?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It's for the community employment strategy committee to assist with a project to determine the agriculture potential of the Fort Frances-Rainy River areas. That's the study.

Mr. T. P. Reid: And that's for the $36,000?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I, along with the people in the area, am a little disappointed; but understanding that $17 million was perhaps a little much, I'm presuming that $36,000 will be enough to dig up some facts and figures and come up with some other ideas. The project has been supported by the community employment group, which is made up mostly of Conservatives. I don't know why that is so in that area; it's hard to understand.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Did you have anything to do with it?

Mr. T. P. Reid: They have, in fact, endorsed the program. It's just one of those anomalies where you have a government agency, or the federal-provincial government setting up a group to suggest employment opportunities, and then the Ontario federation came along and said: "Here's an opportunity to provide employment for land clearing and the potential for agriculture in the Rainy River district." This is endorsed by the community employment people, who are the federal-provincial committee. Then this government, when it comes time to do some implementation, isn't there to carry out the program presented after these other people have carried out their mandates.

I really don't require a comment on that; but I would hope that this would still be an item, perhaps for next year's budget where, if the facts and figures can be proved you might see your way clear to carrying out that program.

Item 1 agreed to.

On item 2, isolated communities:

Mr. T. P. Reid: Are we on isolated communities?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: That's right.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Does the minister have anything further to tell us about the isolated communities? Are we going to have any legislation? Can he tell us where we're at other than that the budget has been enriched by $130,000? He's nodding his head.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I'm pleased that the member asked that particular question. We have been grappling with that particular problem. I think I have mentioned publicly on a number of occasions that we would piggyback on the Local Roads Boards Act to assist those unorganized areas in assessing their home owners for fire protection services.

We've had a go at it within a number of ministries. We've run into a few problems. We've asked the UCANO, both east and west, how they would view a structure or an act operating in the unorganized areas. We're concerned that we're going to leave the impression that this is a first step towards organizing a municipality. I think there's some concern there.

Frankly, we're going to use the course of the summer to have further discussions with UCANO and with other unorganized communities to pull together something that's acceptable to them and of course to the government. Hopefully, we'll be prepared to bring forth legislation in the fall session.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, I want to speak about the unorganized communities, because if there's an area that needs some work and on which this government has really fooled the people it has been on the unorganized communities as a whole.

Bill 102, or something, got introduced into this Legislature a couple of years ago and ultimately collapsed. We in fact have many municipalities in northern Ontario which outside of a very small budget have no access to any of the amenities necessary in the unorganized communities.

You will recall a year ago I suggested, in some amendments I proposed during the creation of this ministry, that the two most important areas concerning northern Ontario were the proper development of natural resources and the unorganized communities. We attempted to give the minister some power to work within those communities, but nothing has changed from the time

McKeough or Don Irvine introduced that bill many years ago. Nothing has really happened to change life in the unorganized communities except that there's a very minuscule budget from which you give a little financial assistance, a bit here and there very deliberately. In fact, I maintain that the government deliberately keeps it confused so they can't get a focus on it.

What the government should have is one group representing the unorganized communities. What you in fact want is everybody to stake his own claim so that you might have four, five, six, or seven different groups in the same community asking for any number of funds for some project, whereas if you had one group somehow duly elected to represent the community, they could focus on the most important needs in each of those communities. That doesn't occur now because that type of unity isn't there.

Various groups make various requests for a variety of things—including some I have made, for example, for fire protection equipment. But there's no ability to focus their priorities and it's to your advantage, Mr. Minister, to keep them disorganized, it really is. I am not saying it's the minister himself who is doing that, I am saying it is the government of Ontario. The more groups making representation, the better it is. If we had one group in each community representing those unorganized communities, they could then sit down and focus on what the real needs are.

If it's in a municipality like Alban, they may need a community centre; they could then say this is our concerted effort for this year. But as it is you might have somebody from Alban wanting a community centre and somebody else wanting a piece of fire fighting equipment; there's no focus on what the most pressing needs of Alban are, particular in view of the limited funds available.

If the pit was bottomless and we had all kinds of money, then you could meet any number of requests from those municipalities, but that isn't so. I think it's to the disadvantage of those communities, Mr. Minister, that we don't have some sort of mechanism for establishing some sort of elected community representation that can, realizing there's a shortage of funds, identify a number one priority for this year; that means the minister or his staff then has to sort out what the real priorities are.

That's not our function. Surely our function is to provide funding. Once a municipality determines what its basic need is for this year we move on it. I think this is a real failure, particularly in view of the fact that the legislation was long promised. I understand the difficulties with the unorganized municipalities, having quite a number of them like the minister has. They are starting from scratch. No matter what it is that they want, it's right from the beginning, even if it's a street light. Yet we really don't have anybody in those communities we can deal with.

If there was something I would ask this minister to do, if he had the power to do one thing, it would be to get some type of apparatus in place to do that. Then we might start to see some orderly development. They might, for example want to ask the Ministry of Housing to do a plan of their area; and that request would come from someone that was recognized in the community as representing the total community; or it might be a piece of firefighting equipment, it might be a recreation centre; it might be something they need, based on a commitment from the community. That this government doesn't do that is really, to me, a disaster; we're just fooling the people, Mr. Minister. We don't have the funds—I understand the amount it would take with the number of municipalities that are unorganized—but what it might stop, too, is the development of other unorganized municipalities that are getting bigger and bigger; and that's still going on.

If one looks at the regional municipality of Sudbury, people are now leaving the region and trying to get into the unorganized townships. All we're doing is exacerbating the problems that are already there. That's how many of these problems were created in the first place.

If we started and brought those small municipalities we have into some sort of cohesive group, we might avert other problems developing down the road. If we don't do it, those problems are going to occur as I stand here. I've just talked to some of the government officials in the Sudbury area and they tell me that the applications for amendment to the zoning orders in the Sudbury basin beyond the regional municipality are growing in leaps and bounds. When people own property they are going to say that they have a right to go there. They buy a whole farm and they ultimately move out there and the problem starts all over again.

We simply can't afford it. I don't care what government is in power in the province, we can't afford to allow other unorganized municipalities to develop. Maybe you're going to reintroduce the legislation—I guess it was Bill 102, that number rings a bell. That was the bill that Don Irvine brought in a number of years ago through the Treasury and it died on the order paper just prior to the 1975 election. It's been three and a half years since that election and what are we doing for the unorganized townships? Really, nothing.

Yet most of them exist—as my friend knows better than I, in his part of the province—to meet the needs of some of the pulp and paper camps. They go and develop a little settlement of 50 or 60 families, maybe not that big. But those problems have been created and the bill that was introduced in 1974 and reintroduced in 1975 would have gone some way to help. It wasn't perfect, we all knew it, and we said we were going back to the unorganized municipalities to get their input.

There's been a lot of input. I've seen all of the briefs that have been presented to the minister; there's been a lot of input. Surely we've got to act. We can't sit around any longer and allow those people living in those municipalities who pay their share of taxes—particularly in view of the fact of the services they get, which are virtually zero for the type of taxes they pay. They pay land tax and they pay gasoline tax, they pay a variety of taxes. They might not pay as much municipal tax but they have nothing. I mean nothing.

It's only by bringing in legislation that they are going to be made into municipalities of some sort. They might not be modelled on town councils as we understand them; it certainly could be of a different nature.

We move ahead. You can't sit any more, Mr. Minister. That's been in limbo and it's been discussed for as many years as I've been here and as many as you've been here. Surely you're in a position now to make the recommendations to the government and say, "We've had input now for 10 these many years. We know what the problems are. We know it's costly and it's going to take time, but we have to start somewhere."

We start, maybe, by some form of informal community council which works through your ministry on a priority basis. We start to do the planning for the rest of the province. I'm not talking about elaborate planning in terms of organizing municipalities but the type of planning which will prevent the spreading of that type of municipality.

I think it's long, long overdue. To simply operate with this type of budget and to continue this process is really nonsense.

I've asked the minister to give me in the few minutes remaining some indication of what the government's proposals are, particularly in view of my suggestion of some type of informal community council to do the priority needs for these municipalities.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I think the member for Sudbury East is very much aware of the lack of desire on the part of the unorganized areas to be thrust into some form of municipal organization. There's just no question they're going to resist that. In fact, they resisted Bill 102 or 120—I forget what the number was—to the nth degree. That was, in essence, a start in setting up community councils, but the fear is that the government would superimpose a municipal structure that would be unacceptable to them; that they would be burdened with new services and increased taxes. There is no question about that.

I would have to say to the honourable member that we're moving with the unorganized communities in trying to get their involvement. As he knows, we are funding UCANO to the tune of $25,000 for UCANO East and $25,000 for UCANO West, because they have no funds. We give them some direct grants, hoping that they will go out and stimulate interest and get some input from the unorganized communities. In fact, we have gone a step further.

We are giving a direct grant to Confederation College in the Thunder Bay area to go out and hold special seminars and special courses in the small communities or to bring in the leaders of these small communities to explain to them the functions of a municipal structure and how to deal with government to give them some knowledge of how they should approach improvements to their respective communities. It's a start, but the fear of going into some form of structure is very real.

I have to say to the honourable member that there's nobody who would like to set it up in a nice square box under legislation more than I would. But we have had many discussions with the groups and they're not certain what they want themselves. We know we should have something. It may well be we're going to have to come down with a hard hand. I don't like the idea. I just abhor the idea. If they will do it themselves, I'd like to give it a try. We are going to the unorganized communities, with our Northern Affairs officers moving around now and having more rapport with the groups.

I have to say to the honourable member that in my brief experience with the Ministry of Northern Affairs and with the Isolated Communities Assistance Fund, I don't know of an area that has four or five different organizations to which the honourable member refers. There may be one or two, but if there is any nucleus of an unorganized community or a group of people who are interested in speaking on behalf of their community, we'll deal with them; there's no question about that. We are already dealing with them in a number of fields whether it is in the social field or direct assistance for a recreational centre, for a community well, for fire protection. We'll go that route, but give us the body there and we'll work with them. We're not trying to divide the community. If they will come forward—in fact, some of the groups have come forward and we have given them a grant already. Now we find the fire marshal hasn't approved exactly what they should have; so they're stymied in that aspect of it. But in other areas we're going ahead with the development of fire protection. They must have somebody to look after it. They must have the wherewithal to pay for the building it's going to be in. We'll even assist in some cases with that building. But who's going to pay for the electricity and the heating of it? Surely they can contribute a little bit to it. That's what we're trying to sort out now.

The new thrust now, getting fire packages together and providing fire trucks to the bigger areas, is working quite well. Just to wind up on this section, on Friday last my parliamentary assistant, the member for Algoma-Manitoulin, was in Gogama delivering a truck—

Mr. T. P. Reid: I certainly hope he wasn't driving.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —along with the member for Nickel Belt. They were there to join with the community in accepting that fire truck. So things are happening and with a great deal of pride and enthusiasm. I think we're best to follow this road but, if the honourable member has some specific ways that we could deal with this problem, I would like to hear from him.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Minister, because of the time, would the honourable minister like to move that we rise?

On motion by Hon. Mr. Bernier, the committee of supply reported a certain resolution.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Bernier, the House adjourned at 6 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPERADVISORY COMMITTEE ON CONFEDERATION

56. Mr. S. Conway (Renfrew North): What groups, organizations and individuals were consulted, and/or submitted briefs to the Advisory Committee on Confederation, prior to the committee's first report which was tabled in the Legislature on April 11, 1978? [Tabled May 16, 1978.]

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Treasurer): The Advisory Committee on Confederation in the preparation of its first report did not operate by receiving briefs or holding hearings. The members were kept abreast of the most recent proposals put forward by individuals, groups or governments in the field of constitutional reform and continue to review such proposals as they become available.

57. Mr. Conway: Who will comprise the "small but representative conference of citizens, both experts and non-experts" who will attend a conference to discuss the first report of the Advisory Committee on Confederation? What criteria must be fulfilled to obtain an invitation to attend and participate in this conference. [Tabled May 16, 1978.]

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The advisory committee has asked the Council for Canadian Unity to bring together a cross-section of Ontarians to analyse and evaluate its first report, as well as to receive other ideas for change which the delegates would like to see considered by governments.

The conference will be entitled "Confederation '78: a colloquium on the first report of the Ontario Advisory Committee on Confederation," and will be held June 28-30 at Glendon College.

Approximately 150 participants are expected. Invitations have gone out to all those who presented briefs orally to the Task Force on Canadian Unity at its Ontario hearings; workshop leaders from Destiny Canada Destinée; members of the task force; members of the Ontario advisory committee; representatives of each provincial government; members of the cabinet committee on Confederation; and leaders of the opposition parties in the Ontario Legislature.

The advisory committee has also invited a number of experts in federalism who served as workshop leaders at the Destiny Canada Conference to attend a forthcoming meeting of the committee and comment on its first report.

SALES TAX

58. Mr. S. Conway—(Renfrew North): Has the government been approached about extending the federal provincial sales tax reduction agreement beyond its current expiry date of October, 1978? Is there any provision for extending the life of the program contained in the agreement between the two levels of government? [Tabled May 16, 1978.]

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Treasurer): With regard to the first question, the answer is no, we have not been approached to extend the sales tax reduction beyond its current expiry date.

As to the second part of the question, regarding the retail sales tax legislation, which is Ontario's part of the agreement provides for automatic reinstatement of the seven per cent tax rate at the end of the six month reduction period, which is October 8, 1978.

LOUDSPEAKERS OUTSIDE
LEGISLATIVE BUILDING

60. Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Did the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Henderson) authorize the installation of loudspeakers on the lamp posts outside of the main door of the legislative building? Was any effort made to find a more appropriate location? Was Prof. Eric Arthur consulted on this matter in keeping with this mandate to preserve the architectural integrity of the building. [Tabled May 18, 1978.]

Hon. L. C. Henderson (Minister of Government Services): The Lieutenant Governor's office requested loudspeakers for the activities associated with the Donald Jones Walk Around Queen's Park, which was held on May 21. As a result, the Ministry of Government Services installed the loudspeakers on the lamp posts outside of the main door of the legislative building. The speakers were installed for this temporary use only and were removed on May 23. Prof. Eric Arthur was not consulted due to the temporary nature of the installation.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

COMMUNITY SERVICE ORDER PROJECTS

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, last October the designation of six areas for the establishment of community service order pilot projects was announced by my colleague, the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry), and myself. At that time we indicated that at least one additional project was to be operated by and for native persons.

I am pleased to announce today that two projects will be established, one to serve the Kenora area and the other to operate in the London area.

The selection of the native projects was made in consultation with the Ontario Native Council for Justice, which contacted its member organizations, and over a period of seven months has held a series of meetings with Ms. Priscilla Reeve, the provincial co-ordinator of the community service order projects.

It was essential that the native people should have an opportunity to fully understand the concept and to make their own decisions about whether or not they wished to participate in the program, and which areas should be selected for the pilot projects.

I am also appreciative of the co-operation of my colleagues, the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle) and co-ordinator for native affairs and the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier).

The Ne-Chee Friendship Centre will sponsor the project to serve Kenora and the reserves in that area, including Rat Portage, McKenzie Portage, Whitedog and Grassy Narrows. A co-ordinator for this project is expected to be named within the next few days.

As members will be aware, my ministry has operated a probation-parole program for native people in the remote northwest part of the province for the past four years. The area operates with two full-time native workers plus a number of volunteers supportive to the regular probation program.

Each volunteer is paid a regular retainer plus a fee for each client supervised. There are currently 14 part-time native volunteer workers. The area served covers more than half the province. The volunteers provide supervision on 62 reserves and settlements, 20 of which are fly-in locations.

Recently a similar arrangement for service has been developed in the northeastern part of the province where part-time native workers are active, two in Moosonee and one each in Moose Factory, Fort Albany and Attawapiskat.

The full-time and part-time workers and the ministry's probation-parole staff will provide the necessary support for the community service order project.

I may also say, Mr. Speaker, that in the Thunder Bay area, no longer are native female offenders sent south. Instead they are kept in the Thunder Bay area in a community resource centre operated by the Native Women's Council and Mrs. Edith McLeod.

The N'Amerind Friendship Centre will sponsor the community service order project to serve London and the surrounding area. A project co-ordinator has already been named. She is Ms. Diane Hill, a Mohawk Indian from the Six Nations Reserve.

N'Amerind is actively involved with various community agencies. There are three reserves within a 20-mile radius of London, and within a 60- to 70-mile radius there are another five reserves.

These two projects, as well as the six which were announced last fall, were selected from submissions received from communities where there was interest and support from the judiciary and community agencies. The selections were made to provide a variety of operational models in both rural and urban settings. The two native projects add to the diversity of the program, which will be subject to ongoing evaluation over the next two years. As I have indicated, the success of community service orders is largely dependent upon the interest and support of the judiciary, local agencies and the probation-parole staff of this ministry.

We are very pleased with the innovative use of community service orders which has already been made by the judiciary. We also appreciate the positive response by community agencies and our probation-parole staff to the new demands and challenges which they are meeting in order to ensure the establishment of this program on a solid basis.

The results thus far have proven that community service orders are a viable and positive alternative to incarceration for persons convicted of non-violent offences. I hope within the next few weeks to announce the establishment of another community service order project which will add a new dimension to this diverse and innovative program.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to report to the House that the honourable minister's pronouncement of northern geographic entities is impeccable.

Mr. S. Smith: He should work for the CBC.

INJURED WORKERS

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I wish to give a short statement regarding the very unfortunate incident that took place yesterday at the Travelers building on University Avenue involving the Metropolitan Toronto police and members of the Union of Injured Workers.

At about 10:45 a.m. yesterday, approximately 200 members of the union gathered at the Travelers building, 400 University Avenue, to demonstrate against the Workmen's Compensation Board and the Ontario Ministry of Labour which have office space in this building. Sergeant John Jamieson and five police constables from the area foot patrol were assigned to cover the demonstration.

At about 11 a.m., the crowd was addressed by members of the Legislature and labour movement, and at about 11:20 a.m. by the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson). The Minister of Labour was not listened to, but was shouted down by the crowd and she left for the legislative building. At about 11:45 a.m. the demonstration went into the lobby and began shouting and threatening to take over the offices of the Labour ministry on the 14th floor. Police reinforcements were called in at that time.

The demonstrators were calmed down, and some of the additional constables were returned to regular patrol with approximately 15 police constables and one sergeant remaining to augment the area foot patrol. The situation remained static for the next hour with sporadic outbursts of noise. Mr. Phillip Biggin, the president of the Union of Injured Workers, was advised that the Labour minister was not in the building, but he would not believe it. He refused to send a small delegation up to verify this.

At about 1:15 p.m. Mr. Biggin addressed the demonstrators over a loud hailer to the effect that if the Labour minister wouldn't come down to speak to them, they would form a picket line and would not allow anyone to enter or leave the building. He instructed them to link arms and form a semi-circle in front of the elevator corridor, which they did.

The sergeant instructed his men to see the public through this line, and police constables went to the north and south of the elevator corridor to carry out these instructions. Constables Donald Wrigglesworth and David Keefer were performing this duty when two unknown women blocked off the pathway. PC Keefer instructed these women to move several times, which they refused to do. He then took hold of the arms of one of the women to move her, when he was attacked by one of the demonstrators who ran out of the crowd and struck PC Keefer on the back with a cane. PC Wrigglesworth went to assist and was also struck twice with the cane. The demonstrator was restrained and arrested.

At this time, the demonstrators attacked the police with their placard sticks and with canes. One man was observed by Sergeant Jamieson swinging a placard stick and striking police officers with it. Sergeant Jamieson went to this man and took the stick from him, and was immediately grabbed from behind by two unknown men by the throat and arms. The demonstrator struck Sergeant Jamieson with his fist three times in the chest, and then removed Sergeant Jamieson's revolver from his holster and pointed the revolver at him. Sergeant Jamieson managed to free his right arm and got hold of the demonstrator's arm with the gun. Sergeant Maywood saw this happening and rushed to assist Sergeant Jamieson. He grabbed the demonstrator's arm and wrestled the gun out of his hand. While he was doing this, Sergeant Maywood was kicked in the face and stomach by unknown assailants.

The demonstrator was being escorted behind the police line when someone swung a stick at Sergeant Jamieson's head. He ducked and the stick struck the demonstrator in the head, causing a wound which required six stitches to close.

This is a very unfortunate incident. A total of seven people have been arrested.

VISITOR

Mr. Speaker: Before we get to oral questions, I would like to remind members of the House that in the Speaker's gallery we have His Excellency, Dr. Tarter, the ambassador from Austria, and Mrs. Tarter, along with the consul general. Would you please welcome them to our Legislature.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION

Mr. Mackenzie: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: Yesterday, in response to a question from my colleague the member for Oakwood (Mr. Grande) concerning the job searches for WCB cases, the Minister of Labour—and I'm reading a quote exactly from the Instant Hansard—stated: "The response to that question was submitted to the member for Hamilton East with the request that he distribute it to all members of the caucus."

First off, I want to say that I never asked the question, period. The question was asked some five weeks before this letter was sent to my office. The one-paragraph letter from the minister states as follows: "Dear Mr. Mackenzie: As requested by you and members of your caucus I am enclosing a copy of a memorandum issued in early April to all rehabilitation and counselling staff of the Workmen's Compensation Board and dealing with claimants who are seeking job opportunities and who qualified for additional payments under section 42(5) of the Workmen's Compensation Act. I believe you will find this memorandum self-explanatory." This does not begin to totally answer the question that was asked. I never asked the question, and related it in no way to the minister's answer.

I'm wondering how long, if the minister is not misleading this House, we can have this kind of confusion? Why is it directed to me and not to the member who asked the question? Just what is going on? When is the minister going to get her act together? I'm wondering if that's what happened to some of my questions to which I've never had answers.

Mr. Breagh: Apologize.

An hon. member: Wrong again.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of courtesy to the Labour critic of the New Democratic Party, the document which was requested by a number of members of caucus was submitted to him with the feeling that as the Labour critic he would be responsible for distributing it.

Mr. Nixon: The minister would almost think so.

Mr. Martel: You might suggest that the minister look up the word truth in the dictionary.

Mr. Pope: You guys are getting unreal over there.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the member for Oakwood speaking to the point of privilege?

Mr. Grande: I have a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. On top of what the member for Hamilton East has just said, in that letter which the Minister of Labour mailed on May 12, 1978, there is no indication whatsoever to the member for Hamilton East that this is an answer to the question that I had asked in this Legislature.

A second point is this: Since when is a question that is asked from a public platform in this House answered by any ministry through mail and not directly in this House?

Mr. Martel: And to another member?

Mr. Grande: I have asked this before and I would like your assistance and determination on this particular issue, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I don't know that what the honourable member raises is a point of privilege. The ministry has a responsibility, if it so choose, to answer a question. It need not be answered verbally in the House. The information can be transmitted in any way the ministry chooses.

Mr. Martel: But only to the member who asked the question.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Oakwood got the information through his colleague, the member for Hamilton East, and it's not up to the chair to decide the manner in which a minister should answer a particular question.

Mr. Pope: It must be tough to be logical.

CONGRATULATIONS

Hon. Mr. Davis: When I use the words "personal privilege," I don't want it misunderstood. I would like, on behalf of all members of the House, to congratulate the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett), and more importantly his wife, in doing their part to deal with the issue of deteriorating school enrolment.

[2:15]

The Minister of Housing will now have to expand his own facilities to accommodate a young lady who arrived sometime yesterday—seven pounds and X number of ounces. On behalf of all members of the House, I extend our congratulations to him, but more importantly to his wife, Deborah.

Mr. Martel: They didn't call her Bill, did they?

Mr. S. Smith: Speaking to this point of privilege, I want to associate myself with the Premier in offering heartiest congratulations to the minister and his wife. I believe his wife had the ambition of being married to the Premier. Now at least she may end up as the mother of the first, or perhaps one of many, lady Premiers. Instead of being married to the Premier, perhaps she will settle for that.

Mr. T. P. Reid: But Claude, these are House of Lords cigars.

Mr. S. Smith: Don't they have a House of Commons brand?

ORAL QUESTIONS

OHIP BENEFITS SCHEDULE

Mr. S. Smith: I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Health. Can the minister confirm that the new OHIP schedule of benefits increases the doctor's fee for minor assessments by the princely sum of 15 cents? Given the fact that the minister has stated, and many of us have also stated, that one of the real problems in terms of doctors' incomes today is that the general practitioner has been falling behind, while certain specialists have perhaps kept up reasonably well, does the minister not feel that a 15 cent increase in that particular item, even with the creation of a new so-called intermediate category, is more insulting than helpful?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am glad the honourable member read the second paragraph of the Hamilton Spectator article of last evening, because in the negotiations with the Ontario Medical Association it was the position of the association, with which we concurred, that the introduction of an intermediate assessment category at a significantly higher fee than a general assessment would be in the interests of the general practitioner. I indicated back in April when announcing this settlement that the average settlement is six and a quarter per cent.

The member will see when we have published the full schedule of benefits from OHIP that the one part of medicine which benefits the most—in fact, it's close to eight per cent—is general practice. All of this was run through our computers at the time of the negotiations and confirmed. One of the significant points of the entire exercise is to improve the lot of the general practitioner.

Mr. Breithaupt: The minister is looking more like John Robarts every day.

Mr. S. Smith: I thought the minister had been drinking chocolate milk.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I heard the caterpillars are back this year, but this is ridiculous.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I have more hair on my lip than you have on your forehead.

Mr. S. Smith: You've got me there; that's for sure. By way of supplementary, can the minister explain what is the delay in this particular OHIP schedule? Why are we now to be treated to a so-called interim scale? Why has the cabinet not passed the OHIP schedule of benefits? Can we get the show on the road with an officially passed schedule of benefits in time for the doctors to get paid and to understand on what basis they are billing reasonably? What's the reason for the delay? The ministry certainly has had enough time.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: There is a very simple reason. Normally, the negotiations would have been concluded in February or early March, which would have left sufficient time to prepare the regulations and to print the schedule. This year the negotiations concluded, I think on April 6, a mere six or seven weeks ago, during which time we had to finalize the calculations, run everything through the computers and confirm that what had been agreed upon with the OMA did match up with the overall increase of six and a quarter per cent.

That's been done. The regulation has gone to cabinet. I believe it is on the cabinet agenda for tomorrow and we will be able to get it out very quickly. It's simply because the negotiations concluded at a much later point in the year than is normal.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Has the ministry prepared a comparison between the new OHIP fee schedule and the new OMA fee schedule? Will the minister also ensure that that is published in the early future, so that the public as well as people who are watching health policy can see by just how much doctors will be exceeding what people will get from their OHIP benefits if doctors charge the OMA schedule?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Any doctors who opt out—and that is the group of doctors to which the member is referring—can charge, really, whatever they want, once they tell their patients beforehand that they are, in fact, opted out. That could be $1 above the particular item in the schedule of benefits—I draw to his attention that OHIP has a schedule of benefits; the medical association has a schedule of fees—or they could charge double, whatever, but they must inform their patients beforehand.

Since opted-out physicians might have adopted a schedule of fees for their services that is anywhere between the two, it would really be a waste of money for us to print a separate document to compare the two documents. We will publish our schedule of benefits and the medical association will publish its schedule of fees.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, can the minister tell us what estimate he has, or does he accept the OMA estimate that 40 per cent of assessments will now be called intermediate as opposed to minor assessments? Does the minister have any basis for reaching this conclusion? Is he going to monitor it in some way, given the fact that the difference between the two assessments in terms of patients with more than one symptom would seem to be almost a trivial difference, since virtually every patient has more than one symptom?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I don't know that I can accept the latter part. Neither of us being a general practitioner I don't know that either of us could substantiate that one way or the other. In the negotiations at the Clawson committee there were certain positions advanced by the profession which were discussed in the ministry. It was felt that, generally speaking, they were probably good estimates of what is likely to occur. Certainly we will, through the year, be watching carefully the effect of this, because it is our sincere intent and hope that this will mean to the family practitioner, the general practitioner, a significant improvement relative to the rest of the profession.

Mr. Makarchuk: Supplementary: In view of the fact that most doctors bill at the end of the month, and the end of the month is here and they have no schedule available to them, can the minister indicate to the medical profession when they might expect to get the schedule so that they will know how to handle their billing?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: A bulletin was sent to all physicians in the province about four or five weeks ago, indicating the reasons for the delay and indicating that we would make adjustments in subsequent cheques to reflect the changes in the schedule of benefits.

COMMUNITY COLLEGE BOARDS

Mr. S. Smith: A question of the Minister of Colleges and Universities: Can the minister explain his recent decision to deny student representation on community college boards, colleges of applied arts and technology? Is he correctly quoted as stating: "You couldn't just add students alone to the board. Faculty and support staff, and representatives of the community might also have to be added"? Can I ask him what would be so terribly bad about that? Surely this situation exists at Ryerson and at the University of Toronto, just to name a couple? Why is he refusing to accept the recommendation at the community college level?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The only part of the quotation that was incorrect was the community representation. That is obviously done at present by the way the boards are formed. I think it's fairly obvious that four appointments are made by municipalities in the catchment area of each college.

It was a decision we arrived at after considerable discussion within the cabinet committee, and there are various reasons. I think the present boards are working well and that decision was made for a variety of reasons. In the final analysis we either do or do not change the size of the boards. The decision at this time was to leave the boards as they were proposed in the original act.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, has the minister even bothered to talk to the people at Ryerson to ask them the experience they have had with students? Does he realize that they are very satisfied with it and feel that a good many potential divisive and explosive issues were well dealt with because the students were represented on the board, albeit in smallish numbers? Why is the minister taking such a step backwards and, in fact, overturning the recommendation voted—admittedly by only one vote—by the Council of Regents? Why is he taking this step to deny representation when surely the thrust in our society ought to be to have more involvement by those who ought to be participating in the institutions in which they have a significant role?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I'm afraid the leader of the Liberal Party does not give full credit to the amount of participation in the student body now. There are presidents' committees, there are academic committees, there are all kinds of committees in which the student representative is very vocal, and rightly so.

It isn't as though the avenues are blocked for student participation in their college boards.

Mr. Warner: They can't vote.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I've said many times that I think our college system and our university system are quite different and this is an area where, indeed, we are saying they are different. We've always said they're equal, but different.

In this instance, you may wish to compare the universities and the colleges; that, of course, is your right, but we've decided to leave the boards as they are. I think it's interesting to note that in the last few years the colleges have come in for a great deal of praise and they have done so with the boards constituted as they are.

Mr. Cooke: I have a supplementary to the minister. I'd like to ask the minister, would he not agree that this decision he announced yesterday treats college students as second-class post-secondary school students? He still hasn't given us his reasons today and he didn't in committee. Why did he make this decision? Why has he decided to treat college students as second-class citizens?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I guess it's your right to make the statement we're insinuating that they're second-class students. I want to assure the member that there's—

Mr. Warner: That's what you're doing.

Ms. Gigantes: So what are your reasons?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: —no validity in that statement whatsoever.

Mr. Warner: There's no validity in your statement, either. Give them the right to vote.

Mr. Havrot: Oh, resign.

Mr. Warner: Not on your life.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We have always considered the students of our community colleges to be most responsible. We always have, we always will. I'm rather sorry that you should cast it in those words; it's totally incorrect and unfair.

Mr. Warner: Give them the right to vote.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: How can the minister say he is treating these students as anything other than second class, when he has just said that what is good enough for university students and for Ryerson Polytechnical students is somehow not good enough for the community college?

How can he say that they have a lot of participation when in October 1976 his own ministry prepared a summary showing that 13 colleges had student observers at the board, five allowed student attendance only by invitation from time to time, and four had no student representation? George Brown College, for instance, invites students to observe only parts of meetings, and even this on a campus rotation system, which means that the same student can only attend possibly every few months so that there's no continuity.

Why have you singled out the students here, in opposition to the very recommendation made by the council of regents; and why have you refused a reasonable participation to the students at the community colleges, a participation which you grant to the polytechnic and to the university sector?

Mr. Warner: The minister has no answer.

Mr. Laughren: Is the minister aware of the precedent that was set at Cambrian College in Sudbury when a member of the faculty did, indeed, serve on the board of governors, with very positive results?

Mr. Warner: Ask for his resignation.

Mr. Laughren: Has the minister checked with Cambrian College to determine that?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We have no objection if the community should decide to have someone represent the community in one of the four positions that are open to nomination by the community. If they wish to nominate a member of faculty or a student, that would be perfectly all right by us, there is no reason why they couldn't.

Mr. Cassidy: You guys cop out all the time.

Mr. Warner: You really should resign.

RENT REVIEW

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Does the minister remember, as member for St. Andrew-St. Patrick, speaking out strongly in favour of the renewal of the current rent review program in his nomination speech on March 14 last year, saying specifically that: "We must require that the scheme continue until there have been 12 consecutive months during which the vacancy rate of a particular municipality has been in excess of 3.5 per cent"? If the minister remembers that particular speech, can he say why he told the House last week that he will not consider even a simple extension in which he characterized as a very short-term program, particularly since the vacancy rate in Metro has dropped to 0.9 per cent in the last 12 months and has also been dropping in most other major cities of the province?

[2:30]

Mr. Breaugh: It's no wonder you got that nomination Larry.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So long as the member sticks to reading my speeches and doesn't get involved in gross distortions, as he did on CBC radio this morning, then we can talk accurately about Hansard and my speeches a year ago.

Mr. Warner: Try answering the question.

Hon. B. Stephenson: You're totally confused with the facts, David. Resign.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Shame.

Mr. Foulds: Be nice and they'll make you an enumerator, Larry.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The point I made was that this government is and always has been pledged—boy, the tenants' issue really does something to you guys.

Mr. Warner: Yes, we're concerned about it.

Hon. B. Stephenson: It's not concern, it's paranoia.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The point I was making at that time, of course, was that the rent review program had to be renewed.

Mr. Wildman: Same as beer in the ball-park.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That's what I said in 1977, and we were talking about the renewal of that particular program. It was renewed until the end of 1978.

Mr. Wildman: What about the vacancy rate?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: At no time did I or this government ever indicate that that particular program, with all its problems, was the only program that would work for the tenants of this province.

I understand how attractive it is for members opposite to grasp on to the super sensational headlines which indicate that only they are in favour of protecting tenants. What we have said consistently over here is that tenants will and can be protected, but that they can be protected by something other than a simple cost passthrough mechanism. I also indicated at that time that I think tenants' rents do have to be protected until the vacancy rate climbs to a reasonable level. Only in the last week or two, I presume as a result of some members opposite sitting on that committee which they refused to serve on or support—

Mr. Foulds: What kind of a Grossman distortion is that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —have I heard the slightest whimper of some sort of acknowledgement that maybe the rent review program should end when there is a sufficient and adequate supply of housing. Only now is the third party shifting back to that position.

Mr. Martel: When will that be?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Indeed, if we were to do what they want us to do, and that is keep the current rent control program forever and ever, then sooner or later we would have to go for what I know that party finds terribly attractive, and that is total public housing and no private housing.

An hon. member: That's baloney.

Mr. Martel: Why don't you get on a chair and yell?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We over here believe that the crux of the problem is protection of tenants' rents until the private sector is able to provide enough accommodation above that vacancy rate level that I referred to in that speech a year and a half ago. That was precisely the position then; there is no change in that position.

Mr. Sargent: Why don't you sit down?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Careful, Eddie, you'll be sorry.

Mr. Speaker: The question has been answered.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You're right.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Can the minister perhaps explain what it is about becoming a minister that has gone to his head and has created the flip-flop which he's enunciating in the House right now?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member ought to know!

Interjections.

Mr. Cassidy: Why is it that a year ago the minister was saying that no one could argue that the rent review board has inhibited the construction of new apartment units? Why is it that a year ago the minister was looking at other alternatives to the present rent review program and was rejecting them? Why is it that a year ago the minister was indicating that he felt that tenants should continue to be protected along he current lines, and now he has backed off that position completely?

Hon. W. Newman: Nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Perhaps I've had or taken the opportunity of educating myself a little bit more on the issue, which the member hasn't taken advantage of himself.

Mr. Martel: The minister is a slow learner then.

An hon. member: That's a great education.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I'm not at all shy about saying that in the past period of time, not only have I had the opportunity to learn a lot more about rental problems, but also I have used the duration of the program—

Mr. Martel: You mean you were shooting your mouth off for nothing before?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —to now study the effects of the program.

Mr. Yakabuski: Why don't members opposite attend the committee meetings?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In May of 1977—no, I think that was in March.

Mr. di Santo: You were not the minister then.

Mr. Martel: Yes, it was the eve of an election.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to answer the question, but the opposition will have to listen.

March of 1977 was some 14 months ago, and on this side of the House anyway we do have the habit of watching and studying and listening and learning over those 14 months. Members opposite haven't adopted that, their position hasn't moved one twit in that period of time.

Mr. McClellan: Learn not to go into your own riding.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We don't mind saying that we've watched the progress of that scheme very carefully. We also don't mind saying—and listen carefully—that a lot of tenants are being badly treated by the current rent review program.

Mr. Warner: You have never studied it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We think that for the sake of those tenants, as well as those landlords who are being badly treated by the current program, that it is incumbent upon this government to find a better scheme for tenant protection than the scheme that the members opposite want to cling to for ever and ever.

We will discharge that responsibility and not cling to the politics of the issue, which in the long run, and indeed now in the short run, will operate to the detriment of those tenants that the members opposite want to stand up and be great defenders for.

Mr. Mackenzie: Boy, are you ever sensitive today.

Mr. Laughren: Distortion.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Can the minister explain what has happened in the rental market between 14 months ago and today to have led him to this complete reversal of his particular stand? Can he also say who are the tenants whom he maintains are being badly treated under the present program? I think he should name them.

Mr. Pope: Are you a landlord or a tenant?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now the honourable member will stand up and name all of those who have benefited. The point that the honourable member was making was that in my remarks, a year and some months ago, I indicated that rent review did not cause the vacancy rate to decline. The member hasn't heard anything from me that indicated that was the sole cause—anything different, rather—

Mr. Mackenzie: Who's playing politics now?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I believe that was not the sole cause. I have been entirely consistent in that.

Mr. Warner: Do you know what you're doing?

Mr. Cassidy: What is it that this—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Why doesn't the member sit there and listen? I believe then and I believe now that rent review obviously was not the cause of the decline in the vacancy rate. I said that then. I said it during the debate to send this matter to the committee—which the members across the way opposed. I am saying it today. I have said it time and again.

Ms. Gigantes: It was a snow job.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I said it in front of the London landlords' association, and I said it out in Thorncliffe to the member for York East's (Mr. Elgie) tenants' association. I have said that time and again.

Mr. McClellan: You can't even yet your contradictions straight.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The point we are making is that, if we want to get out of this problem, it is time to realize that there are a lot of factors which are now inhibiting the new construction of apartment suites.

Mr. Foulds: You're one of them.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We think that's a solution to this problem and that rent review continues to be one of the inhibiting factors to new construction.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I know that the honourable member does not want to listen carefully to that, nor do his members want to listen carefully on the rent review committee while they cling to this foolish press release—

Mr. Martel: Don't lecture us. You are starting to sound like the Premier.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Specifically, I want to say that is not a change from a year and—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order. The question was, would the minister care to name those who would not be well served. The minister had had three or four minutes; he hasn't responded to that. I am going to recognize the member for Ottawa Centre with his second question.

Mr. MacDonald: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: No, no more questions. This is a matter that is before a committee of the House; there is ample opportunity to discuss it there.

Mr. MacDonald: I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: What is your point of order?

Mr. MacDonald: I don't know what you or anybody else can do about it, Mr. Speaker, but when a minister gets up and ludicrously and grotesquely distorts the reality—

Interjections.

Mr. MacDonald: —and says the policy of this party is in favour of public ownership of all housing, that is simply inaccurate.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is not a point of order.

Mr. Martel: How about another election, Larry?

EMPLOYEES' HEALTH AND SAFETY

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a second question, to the Minister of Labour. In view of the minister's statement two weeks ago that she has committed the government to prior consultation before the development of any legislation in relation to workers' health and safety, can the minister inform us exactly to which groups she has made that commitment, what meetings have taken place with those groups to date, and precisely what future meetings are already scheduled to take place, with whom and when?

Mr. Bradley: Check with the member for Hamilton East.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the commitment originally was made specifically to the agricultural community. During the debate on Bill 70 it was most certainly made to other groups which had the potential to be covered by occupational health and safety legislation.

To date, I believe that the ministry staff have met with all but two of the groups I mentioned. They have not as yet met, I think, with the groups representing college and university teachers, school teachers, school boards and the association of principals, but they have met with the Ontario Nurses Association, the Ontario Hospital Association and at least a portion of the policing group of the province.

Mr. Bradley: Did they meet with success?

Hon. B. Stephenson: They will be meeting with both employers and employees in all areas: firefighters, police, hospital workers, psychiatric institutions, correctional services institutions and agricultural workers.

Mr. Mackenzie: Would you listen to anyone but management?

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I should have said, if I may, that I believe the initial consultation should be completed by the end of June.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In placing this supplementary, I want to express grave concern at the fact that every time the minister mentions this the number of groups that are talked to—

Mr. Speaker: Question?

Mr. Cassidy: —as opposing coverage gets larger.

Mr. Speaker: Question?

Mr. Cassidy: Can the minister say why she is giving any of these groups an opportunity to express that they should not be covered under the bill? Why does she not instead solely concentrate on how these groups are to be covered, and how the regulations provided for under the bill will be written to apply specifically to their needs?

An hon. member: It is called demodulation.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the leader of the third party does not recognize the truth when it is in front of his face.

Mr. Foulds: Of all the ministers you are the real one.

Hon. B. Stephenson: But the consultative process is precisely what that word means.

Mr. McClellan: You believe you are the only—

Hon. B. Stephenson: We are consulting with both the employers and the employees about the appropriate way of developing the right kind of coverage for each of those groups—

Mr. Warner: You are backpedalling.

Mr. Laughren: The historic stall.

Hon. B. Stephenson: —and that group has not increased in size since the committee hearings on Bill 70.

Mr. Breugh: What was the committee for?

Interjections.

Hon. B. Stephenson: It is exactly the same group and exactly the same size.

Mr. O'Neil: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: As far as planning is concerned then, would it be the minister's understanding that Bill 70 will not be brought before this Legislature until the fall session?

Hon. B. Stephenson: It is my understanding at this point that it would not be possible to complete all of the consultations before the end of June.

Some hon. members: Shame.

Interjections.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Therefore, I believe that it certainly would be inaccurate for me to say that it will be brought in before the end of June.

Mr. Bounsall: Supplementary: Is the minister not really concerned that further delaying the introduction of this bill cuts off automatically all those groups who could easily establish health and safety committees across this province, and that we would miss the entire summer period in terms of the operation and use of those committees? Surely she sees an advantage in introducing the bill as soon as possible for that reason.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, it does worry me a great deal that those groups of workers for whom Bill 70 was designed—

Mr. McClellan: Everything worries you.

Hon. B. Stephenson: —are going to be denied access to that bill—

Mr. Laughten: It is your decision. You are doing it.

Mr. Martel: They could have gone to the committee.

Hon. B. Stephenson: —until the consultative process, which is absolutely essential, is carried out. That process has been required specifically by the amendments introduced by the opposition parties. The delay of the bill is their responsibility, not anyone else's.

Mr. Renwick: It is your fault.

Mr. Warner: You are the government.

Mr. Lewis: Now that's chutzpah.

Hon. W. Newman: It is right.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I would hasten to add that the delay in no way inhibits or impinges upon the development of health and safety committees in all work areas. The voluntary mechanism is there; the ministry will be pleased to assist any employer—

Mr. Conway: We are glad you ran for the Tories, Bette.

Hon. B. Stephenson: —or any group of employees who wish to establish a health and safety committee. We stand ready to do that at any time; and indeed it is happening in large measure throughout the province.

Mr. Martel: That's why you haven't created one committee yet.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary to my previous question: I believe I did ask the minister, not whether the bill would be introduced before the end of June but whether she would introduce this bill in the fall session of the Legislature.

Mr. Hodgson: He is the worst offender.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I shall be very pleased to make a full report to this Legislature as soon as the consultative process has been completed and I can make a prediction about the probable date upon which it can be introduced.

Mr. Cassidy: You are backing down some more, you are backing down again.

Mr. Warner: You make the Titanic look like a success story.

Mr. M. Davidson: Supplementary: Is not the real truth of the matter the fact that all the people the minister has just mentioned had the opportunity to consult with the committee? Was not the date of December 31 built into the bill by the committee after the minister had given assurance that the consultative process could have been completed by that time? Why can the minister not bring that bill forward now for debate in this Legislature and still go on with the consulting processes that are built right into that bill?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the consultative mechanism, which I think is essential in the drafting of any bill, is the opportunity for those who have the responsibility for drafting and administering the bill to hear first hand from both groups of employers and groups of employees in all of the areas concerned.

Mr. Lewis: Like pension increases.

Hon. B. Stephenson: That is the mechanism which we have followed for all of the other groups in industry, construction and mining. It is my intention that precisely the same kind of opportunity will be granted to the other groups to whom that kind of protection should be extended.

[2:45]

Mr. Martel: To the injured workers too.

Mr. Mackenzie: What a bunch of garbage.

Mr. Martel: You are a disgrace.

Mr. S. Smith: Why does the minister insist on speaking of delays introduced by the opposition, when she knows full well that all she is doing is demonstrating her fear of the democratic process operating in this House, and when the appropriate thing for her to do is to bring in the bill as amended, present what further amendments she may in her wisdom think need to be presented and permit others to present what further amendments they might, as a consequence of further consideration, be willing to present?

Mr. Sterling: The Leader of the Opposition wants to retract, he wants to change his position.

Interjections.

Mr. Nixon: That's the way it's supposed to work here.

Mr. S. Smith: Why is the minister afraid of the normal democratic process? Why is she flouting the will of the House by sidetracking a bill which should be right in front of us here for debate and for possible amendment?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Unlike the members opposite, I do not believe that all of the wisdom on earth regarding occupational health and safety resides within the Ministry of Labour nor within government; nor do I believe that it resides within this House.

Mr. Cassidy: You are a disaster.

Mr. Martel: You are a doctor?

Mr. Cassidy: A doctor of mismanagement.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I believe the wisdom and the expertise which are necessary to attempt to draft the appropriate legislation in order to provide protection must be garnered from all available sources. That is precisely what we intend to do.

Mr. Lewis: The Ministry of Labour has never been in such a shambles as it has been in the last couple of months.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Isn't that a pity? I'm so sorry that you're so upset about it. I really feel for the member.

Mr. Lewis: What is going on over there?

Hon. B. Stephenson: It's working extremely well.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

ENVIRONMENTAL REPORTS

Hon. Mr. McCague: On Friday the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds) asked me a question regarding the status of two reports being compiled by my ministry. I wish to advise that the Thunder Bay report is in final draft form and will go to the printer this week: Printing usually takes one week or less, therefore, the report will be made available by June 12. The second report on Terrace Bay is in the first draft form and will be sent to the regional office for local comments by the end of this week. It should be released June 23.

The member asked about a possible conflict between our regional staff and the researchers in my ministry who are compiling the report. I would advise the member that—

Mr. Ruston: Tell him to keep quiet.

Hon. Mr. McCague:—would the minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations please be quiet?

I would advise the member that it is normal procedure for the special studies air quality reports to be sent to the regional office for agreement on the interpretations in the report, particularly where they reflect local knowledge. For instance, the scientists from the air resources branch in Toronto were only in the area for two to three weeks at a time and may have the wrong impression or an incorrect knowledge of the composition of the various industrial plants. They therefore rely on regional staff who live in the area and who are more familiar with the industrial plants to correct these impressions.

The data collected on these field trips are not negotiable, but the meaning of the data can only be correctly interpreted with the more detailed local knowledge of the resident regional staff. Corrections of this nature to the first draft of the report do not represent a conflict between the members of the ministry staff, as has been implied.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: Can the minister indicate to the House, when there is a disagreement, between say a regional office and the central office, in light of the minister's answer, whether the regional attitude is the one that prevails in the drafting of the final report? Further, can he indicate why it has been that these two reports have taken so long in the writing and drafting process, when over six weeks ago it was indicated in the ministry estimates that the report would be completed and presumably printed within a month? It will be two months by the time it is finished.

Hon. Mr. McCague: One of my staff did say during estimates that the report should be available, in four weeks I think it was at that time. It's taken longer, I really don't know why.

As for the conflicts the member mentioned, there is no conflict in the actual data that is taken.

Mr. Foulds: Final supplementary, if I might: Is the minister indicating, however, that there are disagreements and conflicts about interpretation? Would he not agree that the interpretation of a report presented by the ministry is extremely important, particularly a ministry that should be there to protect the public, as the public may not have the expertise to interpret the raw data, and surely it is important—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. Foulds:—that it be done as objectively as possible?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is being as objective as possible and in the interest of all the people.

OHIP FRAUD CHARGES

Mr. Van Horne: A question to the Minister of Health: In the light of the charge laid against Dr. Anthony Corrigan being that of fraud, a charge that was dropped eight months after it was made, can the minister tell us why it took the OHIP office in Toronto nearly three months to provide the claims in question?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Offhand, no. I'll look into the matter and get the information to the member.

Mr. Van Horne: Supplementary: I would like to know if there are any other peculiar circumstances around this case which would demand that it be delayed for eight months before it was, in fact, dropped. Would the minister find that out for us too?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As the honourable member will know, this particular case and two others associated with it were the cause of some sensational headlines about eight months ago and it has been a rather unfortunate series of events. I will get as much information as possible relative to the member's question.

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary: Since the minister is undertaking to report back to the House on this matter with full and complete circumstances, when he does that, would he report back on who was responsible for the laying of those charges in the original instance? If he doesn't know and his ministry doesn't know, would he undertake to talk to the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) about this matter, which has caused such very serious hardship for this particular individual?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Yes.

OWEN SOUND HOSPITAL TRANSFER

Mr. Charlton: I have a question for the Minister of Health. It is our understanding regarding the transfer of MacKinnon Phillips psychiatric hospital in Owen Sound that the agreement of transfer included the condition that no existing programs would be discontinued or altered without consultation with the Ministry of Health. In the light of that, is the minister aware that the department of psychiatry at the Owen Sound General and Marine Hospital plans to or has already discontinued the free drug program for psychiatric outpatients, and did the hospital consult with the ministry before making this change?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I have had no such indication of a change in program at the Owen Sound General and Marine. I will check with our officials in the psychiatric hospitals branch in the institutional services division to see if there has been any indication from that hospital that it wants to change the program. I am sure that any changes they might wish to bring about would certainly be in the interests of the patients as well as the overall program of the hospital.

Mr. Charlton: Supplementary: When the minister is checking that out, would he also check out whether they have changed the program without consultation, and will he talk to his ministry staff about whether they still consider that program a valid program in the treatment of psychiatric outpatients?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I think my answer to the earlier question answers that.

PARKWAY BELT

Mr. Stong: I have a question of the Premier. Bearing in mind the severe hardships suffered over the past five and a half years by property owners within the parkway belt west, including the loss of their right to obtain mortgages, renew mortgages, borrow from traditional lending institutions and their right under the Expropriations Act, when will the government respond to the many requests—the latest of which was from the York Region Real Estate Board—asking for financial assistance, particularly with respect to the purchase of those lands by the government at prices far below the normal market value?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I must confess I don't recall a letter from the real estate board; that doesn't mean I didn't receive one. I don't think there has ever been any discussion that the government was going to acquire all of the land within the parkway belt west. In that a part of that parkway belt goes through an area which I know better than the area where the honourable member resides, I think some of the conditions he describes are probably not quite accurate. If a person resides within the parkway belt in a residential home there is nothing to preclude that person continuing to live there in perpetuity. There is nothing to preclude that person in terms of refinancing if it is a mortgage arrangement or if there is any existing enterprise, and this would apply to those who are in the agricultural industry. There are a number, although in a good portion of the parkway belt in the area I know best—I think it's reasonably representative—where there have been some difficulties in terms of people who invested in that land in hopes of some increased land use and as a result they may be having some difficulty in terms of refinance. But I think in terms of—

Mr. S. Smith: With the right lawyer they might get an exemption.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The Leader of the Opposition can intervene all he wants. It's about time the Liberal Party in the province of Ontario made some determination as to where they stand with respect to the preservation and proper planning of some of the urban centres in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Mackenzie: On anything.

Hon. Mr. Davis: If those people want to say, "Do away with the parkway belt," let them have the intestinal fortitude to say so. Why don't they say so? Why don't they make this a policy?

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: That is a hydro corridor.

Hon. Mr. Davis: They want to write off the total escarpment, now they want to write off the parkway belt.

Interjections.

Mr. Peterson: We just want to write you off.

Hon. Mr. Davis: They want asphalt from here to 61 Main Street South.

Interjections.

An hon. member: Always ready with a lecture.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The last remarks made by the Premier were as a result of an interjection.

The member for York Centre with a supplementary.

Mr. Stong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are not asking for—

Mr. Bradley: Same old gang.

Mr. Stong: —are not asking that the parkway belt be abolished. We are asking for fair treatment for the owners within the parkway belt. That's what we are asking for.

Interjections.

Mr. Bradley: Same old bunch.

Mr. Stong: And I might say, by way of supplementary—

Mr. Conway: Does the Premier know what the word means?

Mr. Stong: —is the Premier not aware that the province is offering prices for that property far below the market value? People within the parkway belt have no other choice but to sell to the government under any circumstances.

Hon. Mr. Davis: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, that is not accurate. In cases of distress, where there is no obligation on the government of this province to acquire, the policy of the government has been in some instances, in matters of distress, to accommodate some owners in terms of their acquisition. As a matter of fact in those distress cases the province has not been offering prices well below market value. With great respect to the honourable member who asked the question, who has I am sure some knowledge of these particular situations, we could debate here all afternoon his definition and my definition of market value.

If he is going to say that market value within the parkway belt relates to the potential uses that some people anticipated for land they acquired and which in some areas—perhaps not the member's but in my own—was pure speculation in the proper sense of the word because it was zoned agricultural at the time it was acquired, then I say to the honourable member that is not market value. There is no way the taxpaying public of this province should be under any responsibility to pay for potential use when the land was already zoned as agricultural.

While there are some complexities in the parkway belt, and there have been some cases of individual hardship, by and large existing owners, if they are residential or business owners, have had the opportunity to refinance. The areas where there have been some difficulty, and I perhaps may even know of one or two in the honourable member's riding, are where on occasion certain syndicates have moved in to purchase the land for the potential value and they have had difficulty in refinancing. I can't resolve that particular problem.

Mr. Sargent: Such as Hydro.

Mr. J. Reed: Supplementary: Is the Premier not aware that the Ministry of Government Services is at present negotiating expropriation in the parkway belt on behalf of Ontario Hydro at prices very much below the 1973 market value of that property? Is he not aware also that the Ombudsman is investigating those purchases? Is he not aware that the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Henderson) has admitted in this House that it is an iniquitous situation? I don't know whether he used that word, iniquitous—

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't want to get into a lengthy debate. I would only say to the honourable member with respect he doesn't know what he is talking about.

Interjections.

[3:00]

Hon. Mr. Davis: He doesn't. Mr. Speaker, with great respect, you can't negotiate an expropriation. The member's colleague was asking about those cases where, on occasion, the property was being acquired by the province where there were matters of distress. If the government, or Ministry of Government Services, is acquiring property for Ontario Hydro, and the person who owns that property is not content with the evaluation, because the land then can be expropriated, they can go to the Land Compensation Board.

Mr. Sargent: It was rerouted.

Hon. Mr. Davis: There is no problem in terms of arriving at an equitable value.

Mr. Sargent: It was rerouted by Cadillac Fairview.

Hon. Mr. Davis: But that kind of owner is totally different from the kind of owner that the member's colleague was referring to. You don't negotiate an expropriation, Mr. Speaker. If there is an expropriation that constituent of the member's—and if he happens to have some he should give them a little advice—if he is not content with the offer from the Ministry of Government Services, or Ontario Hydro, suggest to his solicitor that he go to the Land Compensation Board where equity will be done if he or she is not satisfied with the offer that has been made.

Mr. J. Reed: Can the Premier assure the House?

OTTAWA HOUSING AUTHORITY

Ms. Gigantes: I have a question of the Minister of Housing. I hate to overtax him on a day when he's been carrying around cigars, but I wonder if he could give us a short and clear outline of the policy basis on which his government has, first, left a vacancy on the Ottawa Housing Authority for a year in spite of the fact that the mayor of Ottawa submitted the name of Aline Akeson as nominee, roughly a year ago? And, second, why and on what policy basis has the government finally rejected the mayor's nomination of Aline Akeson, although his government declared that the city has a right to make a nomination?

Mr. Bounsall: And a very fine person she is.

Mr. Conway: And Reuben likes her.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: It's absolutely correct that the municipality has the right to nominate an individual to the Minister of Housing to fill a vacancy on a housing authority, as has the Minister of Housing for Canada, through CMHC, the right to nominate people to fill the federal position at the whim or the pleasure of the minister.

The name was submitted some time ago by the city of Ottawa to fill a vacancy on that board, and it has been through some investigations and inquiries that the nominee came to my attention. We've had several discussions and I've talked to the mayor about this individual in question.

As a result of the investigation, which clearly indicated that with the applicant, who was a tenant in the housing portfolio of the Ottawa Housing Authority, there were some failures to disclose income on her application to acquire a public housing unit in the city of Ottawa. Those failures to disclose income obviously had a great bearing to play on the fact that her rent was less than it should have been and that this province and the municipality continued to pick up a larger portion of the subsidy than they should have. On that basis and for that reason I rejected the nomination and so advised the mayor.

Ms. Gigantes: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is it not normal policy, if there is a real breach of an agreement between the tenant and the housing authority, for that breach to be followed up with charges? And when there were none in this case, on what grounds does the minister make such statements? Furthermore, is he judging the mayor of the city of Ottawa to be incompetent in supporting that nomination?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Far be it from me to judge any member of the Ottawa city council incompetent—the mayor, the board of control or aldermen.

Mr. Warner: They judge the Minister of Housing to be incompetent.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: With their knowledge and understanding, they make recommendations or nominations to fill vacancies on the board.

Ms. Gigantes: They know everything you know and more.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, as a result of the nomination—and I understand prior to the nomination coming to the Minister of Housing of that particular date—there was a clear indication to the minister's office that there were infractions in the particular application and for this particular party. The individual who was nominated has met with the legal counsel of the Ottawa Housing Authority and has had an opportunity to place her case very clearly before the attorney and her attorney.

Ms. Gigantes: Why didn't the ministry prosecute? Why was there no prosecution? Because the accusations were groundless.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I say to the member, in conclusion, obviously the tenant realized that she would be in contravention of the requirements of application—

Ms. Gigantes: They were groundless accusations.

Hon. Mr. Bennett:—and the right to be in the housing unit; and with the idea that she was more than likely going to be asked to leave the project, she left on her own.

Ms. Gigantes: They hassled her out.

Mr. Bounsall: She did too good a job, that's all.

Mr. Speaker: One final supplementary; the member for Ottawa East.

Mr. Roy: May I ask the minister, in view of his answer—

Mr. Cassidy: You're really vindictive to tenants, aren't you?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Oh, come on.

Mr. Cassidy: That's true.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cassidy: That's why public housing has been resisted by this government.

Mr. Sargent: You're a very unruly bunch over there.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Eddie is here. It's his monthly visit.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order. There's very little time left in the question period. The member for Ottawa Centre has had his share of the question period time. Perhaps he'd allow the member for Ottawa East to place a supplementary.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, whatever happened? I woke up.

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Nice to see you here, Albert.

Mr. Roy: To the minister, by way of supplementary: In view of the fact of his earlier answer to the member for Carleton East, would he advise the House why it would take close to a year to make that decision?

Ms. Gigantes: To hassle her out.

Mr. Roy: As I understand it, the mayor had made the recommendation last June. Before deciding not to appoint Mrs. or Ms. Aline Akeson to the position, did the minister have a conversation with the member for Ottawa West, the Minister of Energy (Mr. Baetz), who described this lady as "an articulate spokesman for the tenant and a very forth-right person"?

Ms. Gigantes: That's right.

Mr. Sargent: She wasn't a Tory.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: First of all to the member for Ottawa East, I am not quite sure how long the application had been under study, although I realized the former Minister of Housing had the application. For a number of reasons it was under review.

Ms. Gigantes: Under review because you didn't like her.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: What the member for Ottawa West has said in relation to the nominee is probably perfectly correct. But I do not find that a failure to disclose income has much to do with one's ability to be articulate.

Ms. Gigantes: That's not true.

Mr. Foulds: What proof do you have?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Maybe she could have been a little more articulate in this case.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I heard the word vindictive. Far be it. I have spoken to the nominee myself. I have had talks with the mayor. And I can only say to the leader of the third party—

Mr. McClellan: Bring back the barber.

Hon. Mr. Bennett:—that his kind of response on the open-line program in Ottawa this morning is typical of the way he's handling most issues around here without knowing what the facts are before he starts shouting.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Health has the answer to a question previously asked.

Mrs. Campbell: Will the Minister of Health stand up?

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Health: Do you have the answer to a question previously asked?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Yes, if I may.

An hon. member: Okay, teacher.

Mr. Laughren: Wake up, Dennis.

An hon. member: About the chocolate milk.

Mrs. Campbell: You were so involved, you didn't hear it.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That's right.

PHYSICIANS OPTING OUT OF OHIP

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, there have been several recent questions regarding the numbers of opted-in and opted-out physicians in Ontario. In response, I would like to briefly review the recent history of this aspect of the Ontario Health Insurance Plan and to bring the members up to date on its present status.

Since a physician has six months after the date of service in which to forward claims, the exact statistics relating to the numbers of opted-in and opted-out physicians are prepared seven to eight months after services are rendered to ensure that all claims have in fact been received and processed. An examination of this data indicates that in January 1973, when statistics first became available, the total number of physicians billing the plan was 9,981. Opted-out physicians totalled 1,343 or 13.46 per cent. In the most recent month for which these statistics are available, September 1977, the percentage had dropped to 10.85 per cent or 1,243 out of the 11,452 physicians billing the plan.

A manual check of the number of physicians' letters concerning option changes received since October 1977 indicates a probable net increase in opted-out physicians of about 150 by August of this year. Of that 150, 68 have given notice since May 1. I should point out that these numbers are constantly changing because option changes are frequently rescinded either just prior to their effective date or after a month or two under the new option. For instance, I am informed that during the past two weeks five physicians rescinded earlier requests to opt out.

As the members are no doubt aware, under section 20, subsection 4 of the Health Insurance Act, physicians are required to notify the general manager of OHIP three months prior to opting out. Only one month's notice is required to opt in. Physicians are also required to notify their patients that they have opted out so they will know that they are to be billed directly.

At the present time the number of opted-out physicians is approximately 12 per cent of the total number of physicians who are billing the plan. This is still significantly lower than the percentage of opted-out physicians in January 1973. Our review to date has not shown that any of the current option changes will significantly affect the availability of choice of physicians for the citizens of Ontario.

DURHAM REGISTRY OFFICE

Mr. McKessock: I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. In view of the announced closing of the Durham registry office, the minister has supplied me with certain information, which I thank him for. There is some other information that I think would be of value to the members of this House and also the people of Ontario. That would be the list of the 25 registry offices in Ontario that it is proposed to close, according to the minister's staff announcement at a recent meeting in Durham. Could the minister supply us with this list of municipalities that would be affected?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes. Immediately upon a decision being taken to close any or all of those offices, I will inform the House directly.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Supplementary: Could the minister tell the House whether or not he will meet with the County of Grey Law Association to discuss an impact study they have done, because the minister didn't do one, that shows that while the proposed move by this government will save 75 cents per registration, it will cost the people of the area $37.42 per visit to the office? Will the minister meet with that association and discuss their brief and, in the light of their brief, reconsider his position?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As I am sure the member knows, I have met with any and all people from the Durham and Grey region who have wanted to meet with me, including the delegation brought in by the member for Grey last week, among which I believe were representatives of all the elected councils of municipalities in the area. As I think I have already informed the County of Grey Law Association, I would be happy to meet with them as well to hear everything they have to say.

Mr. Breithaupt: Supplementary: Since the minister's estimates are not likely to come before the committee for review of this or other matters until the fall and since this office will be closed by then, will the minister assure the House that before the House adjourns later in June he will have a statement as to his plans with respect to these other offices so they will not be closed without the opportunity of having the matter fully discussed during the minister's estimates?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I believe we are now at the stage of giving active consideration, but have no final plans, with regard to one or two offices only.

Mr. Conway: There'll be a lot of Tories looking for work.

Hon. Mr. Davis: They are non-political appointments.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If any decision is taken with regard to those or two other offices before the House rises, I will follow the procedure the member has laid out. Other than that, I would think that by the time my estimates come on we will be able to discuss it more fully. But no further closures, other than those I disclose to the House and provide details for, will occur before the House rises this spring.

QUEBEC POLICY ON CONSTRUCTION HIRING

Mr. Samis: I have a question of the Premier regarding last week's tête-à-tête with Mr. Levesque. In the absence of any concrete agreement last week regarding the problem with Quebec over Ontario construction workers and in the absence of any stated intention by Premier Levesque to modify the regulations coming into effect on July 1, could the Premier tell the House what realistic hopes he has in regard to reaching a concrete and meaningful settlement before July 1? In answering, could the Premier keep in mind that negotiations on this general topic have been going on for at least six or seven years and that the people of eastern Ontario are fed up with promises and lack of action?

Mr. Conway: Make the member for Carleton (Mr. Handleman) ambassador.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is hard to measure one's degrees of optimism. However, I was encouraged, if I can phrase it that way, with—

Mr. Conway: Sidney's speech.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —Mr. Levesque's response and the public communicate that was issued after our informal discussion, where he supported the principle of the mobility of construction workers as between the province of Quebec and the province of Ontario. Premier Levesque is fully aware that their regulation comes into effect on July 1 and we also are fully aware of it.

During the course of our meetings he had discussions with his own Minister of Labour. I have his assurance that his Minister of Labour, Dr. Johnson, will be meeting with the very excellent Minister of Labour from the province of Ontario (B. Stephenson)—

[3:35]

Interjection.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —and I am relatively optimistic that some form of solution can be found.

While some of this had been going on, perhaps the actual implication of this arose—I'm sure the honourable member is aware—from the Cliche commission report. I'm in no way defending the effect of the regulation. It was done by the government of Quebec, as explained by the Premier, to rationalize the construction industry within that province. It has had the effect, but it was not intended, of discriminating against construction workers from this province. Of that fact, I have his assurance.

The government is quite aware as to the deadline of July 1. I will report to the House, or the Minister of Labour will, as to the progress that is being made in our discussions. Hopefully we will have some form of resolution before the effect of that regulation takes place.

PETITION

HUDAC PROGRAM

Mr. McClellan: I beg leave to introduce a petition which is signed by 325 persons who had the misfortune to buy homes from Pastoria Holdings Limited or associated companies.

The petition reads as follows: To the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly:

Whereas all efforts to obtain justice have been rebuffed by Ontario government officials, including Premier Davis, we, the undersigned, petition as follows:

1. That a committee of this assembly consider whether those of us experiencing problems have been justly treated, and redress our grievance or, alternatively, refer the matter to the Ombudsman for investigation and recommendations;

2. That the HUDAC home warranty program be revised so that companies convicted of false or misleading advertising are automatically deregistered from the HUDAC scheme;

3. That section 81 of Bill 94/76 be enforced to exclude companies with a public record of substandard construction practices;

4. That the number of provincial appointees to the board of directors of the HUDAC home warranty program be increased to a majority of the members;

5. That the Ombudsman Act be amended to bring the HUDAC home warranty program within the jurisdiction of the Ombudsman.

MOTION

SOLICITOR GENERAL'S ESTIMATES

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the time for consideration of the estimates of the Solicitor General be increased by two hours.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

PROGRAM COST DISCLOSURE ACT

Mr. Van Horne moved first reading of Bill 101, An Act to provide for the Disclosure of Information Relating to the Cost of Government Programs.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Van Horne: The purpose of this bill is to provide for the public disclosure of the cost information upon which the decisions to undertake certain government programs are based.

The bill requires that the estimated total cost of each program be disclosed and provides for additional scrutiny of program operations if the estimated cost is exceeded.

RETAIL BUSINESS HOURS ACT

Mr. Ziemba moved first reading of Bill 102, An Act to regulate Hours of Operation of Retail Businesses.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Ziemba: Mr. Speaker, this bill complements the Retail Business Holidays Act, which was passed in 1975. The purpose of this bill is to provide for maximum hours of operation of retail businesses in Ontario. It would remove hours of operation as an advertising tool.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to table the answers to questions 54, 55 and 59 standing on the notice paper. (See appendix page 2977.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Perhaps I might just take this opportunity to say that, although the order of business was indicated last Thursday, I hope it's still understood that no matter where we are at 6 o'clock, when we break for supper, at 8 o'clock we will do Bills 85 and 95 first and then return to where we have left off at 6 o'clock with respect to the other legislation.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

CROWN TIMBER AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. F. S. Miller moved second reading of Bill 35, An Act to amend the Crown Timber Act.

Mr. Speaker: Does the minister have an opening statement?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, Mr. Speaker, a very brief one. I did read a statement the day the bill was given first reading. That statement still stands. I do, however, have two amendments to the bill, and I believe these have been given to the opposition for their consideration. We will be moving, with their permission, to committee of the whole House after the debate in principle.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I was somewhat surprised when I arrived at my office this morning—well before 8 o'clock, of course—to find the amendments that will be moved in committee. I thought I'd get that on the record. The rest is downhill.

I was surprised and happy to see the amendment which will allow the minister "to enter into agreements with a licensee for the promotion and maintenance of the productivity of the licensed area by establishing, regenerating and tending forests and employing silvicultural cutting systems to regenerate forests." I think this is as important as, if not more important than, what is in the original bill without this amendment.

I intend to address myself primarily, I suppose, to that aspect of the bill. I presume, Mr. Speaker, that would not be out of line or out of order at this time. The Speaker nods that it is not.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Even if it were not, you would have.

Mr. T. P. Reid: The Deputy Speaker, who is now in the chair, has quite a woodlot of his own.

There are two major thrusts in Bill 35, An Act to amend the Crown Timber Act. One deals with the changes in the collection of revenues from the timber industry in regard to crown dues and what the minister in his bill now euphemistically calls "area charges." The second, of course, which I have just read into the record and did so deliberately so that we would all have the benefit of that, is the ability of the minister to transfer the responsibility of managing the forests, including the important aspect of regeneration, which allows the minister to make agreements with the various timber companies in the province to do so.

This particular aspect is rather significant because, in the history of Ontario, the responsibility for regenerating the province's timber lands has bounced back and forth between the crown or the Department of Lands and Forests, now the Ministry of Natural Resources, and private industry and the act was last changed in 1962 I believe, the minister nods yes, to give the responsibility for the regeneration of crown timber in the province of Ontario back to the crown.

Now we see a good liberal approach to the whole matter, not saying bluntly that the whole industry must look after regeneration because obviously there will be some companies that do not have the expertise or the desire to do so, but allowing the minister to make agreements with various companies to go ahead and do their regeneration, I would presume, under the guidance or at least the watchful eye of the minister. It should be on the record that about 12 large companies control at least 75 or 80 per cent of the crown timber of the province.

As usual, the bill is not specific as to how these things will be arrived at. No doubt, we will have a slew of regulations which will lay these matters out, and which we will find years hence did not answer the questions we may have put.

It is a continual bugbear with me that we debate legislation in which a lot of what we are doing here, particularly the most important aspects, often turns up in regulation which does not come before the House. In any case, we applaud the move to allow the minister to make agreements with the companies for the regeneration and tendering and management of the forest.

There have been some experiments going on and if the truth were known, which hopefully it will be this afternoon, the minister has de facto if not de jure—

Mr. Nixon: Got that Frank? Which are you?

Mr. T. P. Reid: With that bow tie on, it is hard to tell.

The minister has been operating along these lines. I understand he has had some agreements, or there has been some closer collaboration between his ministry and the timber companies around Thunder Bay for instance, in carrying out agreements for regeneration and general crown management.

I have a question, I am concerned about the aspects of how this will be done, who will be involved. It is obvious from the wording of the amendment this is something that is not mandatory. It is—what is the word, Robert, if it allows something to happen?—permissive legislation rather than mandatory.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It is beyond your vocabulary.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That's true, it has more than two syllables in it. This is permissive legislation and I wonder how much of the crown land in the province is going to be served in this manner. We went into this during the minister's estimates to some degree, but I would like to know the amounts and volumes of regeneration that will be done.

I have argued with various Ministers of Natural Resources over the years that we have a backlog of something like two million acres which is, if I may use another word over which I will stumble, a conservative figure.

Mr. Nixon: Anyone would stumble over that.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That is based on the allowable cut we have had for the last 10 years and it has not been regenerated.

Mr. Wildman: True, blue conservative.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Consider that between 1970 and 1975 we had such large and extensive forest fires that we probably lost another million to a million and a half acres. The figure we are behind in regenerating probably falls in the range of four and five million acres. I wonder if the minister could indicate today the scope of the program and whether or not we have arrived only at the stage where he requires the authority to enter into agreements with individual companies.

[3:30]

I would like to speak about the second matter arising in Bill 35, that dealing with the crown dues and the area charge as it is now called. It is pointed out that the area charge will now take under its umbrella the fire charge and the management charge, which have been two separate items, but which came to about $27 per square mile in charges.

On top of that, of course, the timber industry has to pay stumpage dues, which also includes their bid and bonus costs. I have a question on that, if I may ask the minister at this time, because we won't have another opportunity.

If one looks at the timber revenue distribution for the fiscal year 1972 through 1976-77, the tenure charges of $26.60 per productive square mile of timber ranged from $2,071,000 in the year 1972-73, increasing in 1973 and 1974 to $2,597,000 in 1975. And yet in 1976-77, according to the annual report of the Ministry of Natural Resources, the tenure charges were $1,884,000; which is the only year in those five years that those tenure charges fell.

I wonder if the minister can give us an explanation why that should be, particularly when the stumpage charges show an increase from $15,803,000 in 1972-73 through 1973, 1974 and 1975 to $26,788,000 in 1976-77? There seems to be an anomaly there that the stumpage, which is based on the actual timber cut, should have increased fairly dramatically, especially between 1975-76 and 1976-77, while the tenure charges dropped rather dramatically in that same period of time.

We have no quarrel with—in fact, we will support the idea—the area charges; that certainly makes sense. The Ontario Forest Industries Association response to the report of the timber revenue task force indicated they thought these costs were expensive. If I recall correctly, the minister plans on increasing the area charges. As of April 1 of this year they will be $41.40, increasing at an approximate average of 10 per cent per year for the next four years. I presume that approximate 10 per cent is to bring the charges to the $56 plus that was recommended, I believe, in the revenue task force report.

I see nothing drastically wrong in that, particularly in view of the fact that the cost of managing the forests by the ministry and the cost of fire protection is rather heavy. If we follow through the Treasurer's concept of the user pays, I think it is a charge that should rightly fall on the industry.

However, I do wonder about the moving average in regard to the stumpage cost that is going to be based on the commodity index of the product that is being made out of the timber. You are talking about a three-month moving average over a five-year period. Now the forest industry association has pointed out in its brief its concern that while looking at the gross revenue figures based on the commodity price index, the concomitant costs of labour, transportation, fuel, energy, and the whole business might very well have risen more drastically in that period of time than could be dealt with on a reasonable basis by this sliding average.

It seems to me that we can't do everything for the timber industry. I think I would agree with Ken Armson and his report that the best we can do for the timber industry, and the thrust we should be making, is to give them as much stability in their industry as possible in that they should know in advance what their costs are going to be. Because the revenue coming into provincial coffers is only a matter of maybe six or eight per cent of the total cost to the industry, it's not going to be that much of a gross distortion on their figures in a five-year plan; nor would I think, because it is one of their smaller costs, that is it going to change that much. In fact, they are going to have the foreknowledge they want so that they can make their plans.

As I say, we're in favour of what is in both sections of this bill. There are some other minor amendments that we'll talk about when we're discussing the bill in committee. I am surprised, however, as I said, that on my desk this morning should be the amendment relating to the ability of the minister to enter into agreements in regard to management and regeneration with the various companies. I had hoped that the minister might have come to the Legislature with a much fuller and complete bill in the first place, because I would presume, based on some of the very excellent reports he's had in the last few years, he is going to come to us again, probably within a six or nine-month period, with some more rather substantial amendments to the Crown Timber Act. The minister shakes his head.

I appreciate that he wants to get these into effect by April 1 or as close thereto as possible so that he can conform with what is already in the bill and get it on the road. I would have hoped that we might have had a more comprehensive bill in terms of dealing with the many problems besetting the industry today. I would have hoped there might have been something in the bill, perhaps discussing at some greater length land tenure for timber companies and so on. I would have hoped there might have been some amendments to that section dealing with section 19 of the present act dealing with wastage in our forest resources and so on.

However, we will support the bill. We see it as a step forward in the forest industry in the province.

Mr. Foulds: We have just come through a lengthy discussion in the estimates of this ministry with regard to reforestation and regeneration generally. I don't think I need to get into that in detail. However, I wanted to make this one observation and repeat it. I would hope that the minister would have had an amendment to this act that would have committed him to a sustained yield objective, and have that embodied in legislation. I know he is working towards that within his ministry, but I think it would be a powerful incentive to the minister, the ministry and to whomever would follow him if that were actually embodied in the legislation.

I don't think that it guarantees such an objective. You cannot by a piece of legislation automatically ensure that we are going to achieve a sustained yield. I think that in a parallel situation mandatory special education being a powerful incentive to that becoming a reality in the province, a legislative commitment to sustain yields in our most precious renewable resource, our forests, would be a powerful incentive to obtain that objective.

The bill before us presents the New Democratic Party with somewhat of a dilemma. We are in agreement with what the minister is doing in the bill and in the amendment, which amounted to a new bill, in fact, that we received this morning.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That's right.

Mr. Foulds: We are in agreement with what he is trying to achieve. We think the objectives, the aims and objectives are valid.

However, we do disagree with what was referred to briefly by the member for Rainy River and that is the method by which the fees, the levies, whatever you have, are eternally assessed by regulation. I will be speaking to that point in a few minutes.

I think that no one really would object to the amalgamation of the management charge and the forest protection charge. I think in principle forest protection is really part of a management plan of an area. In fact, the reverse, the technique of prescribed burn, is part of a management plan for an area. So I don't think anyone really objects to the amalgamation of the fees, although it is kind of interesting that the proportion is so disparate. The management fee, which one would think would be the larger fee if one were to manage our forest resources properly, is the smaller fee. At the present time it is $2 and the forest protection charge is $25.60.

I think if we were to emphasize the management unit and the unit forester, the management charge might be somewhat more and the forest protection charge somewhat less. Perhaps proper management, i.e. the culling of overmature trees at the right time could lead to a lessening of the requirements for fire protection. I could be wrong there. I know that you always have to spend more to put out a fire, to meet a crisis situation, than you do on day to day management. It would seem to me that in planning ahead, the management charge would be worthy of a little bit more than the $2.50 I believe it is now going to be.

Anyway, the amalgamated fee is a good idea and it would, I gather therefore, allow some flexibility and proportioning of the expenditure of those.

Secondly, we in the New Democratic Party approve of the increase the minister mentioned in his statement when he introduced the bill on first reading. It amounts to a fairly sizeable increase in one fell swoop—50 per cent—an increase from $27.60 per square mile of productive forest land to $41.40 per square mile. We feel, and obviously the minister and his people feel, that is a legitimate level to be requiring of the companies who benefit from the timber to return to the people of Ontario.

Thirdly, we agree with the minister's stated aim of increasing that at approximately 10 per cent per year for a four-year period.

Fourthly, we agree that there should be, as is indicated in the bill, a one per cent per month compounded interest charge on overdue invoices for crown charges.

Finally, we think it makes good sense to establish a system of crown charges that have some flexibility so that it can be responsive to the market and to the cyclical nature of the forest industry. Therefore, we agree with the idea that those charges should be tied or indexed to the selling indices of the products from the timber.

We are supporting the bill on second reading, because what the minister wants to achieve is laudable and worthwhile as it pertains to the Crown Timber Act. However, we have very serious reservations about all of this being done through regulation. Some time ago, we fought a tremendous battle in this Legislature over other fees—taxes if you like—that were assessed by regulation. Those were the OHIP fee increases. I can only say we feel, in principle, that far too much of the revenue accruing to the province, to the crown, is done through regulation; and the amount is increasing.

I placed a question on the order paper some time ago and the Treasurer answered the question. The question was that the ministry list the amount of revenue received in fees, premiums, royalties, taxes, et cetera, that are established by regulation. The regulated revenue sources represented 9.7 per cent in consolidated revenue in 1974-75, 10 per cent in 1975-76, 11.4 per cent in 1976-77 and 11.6 per cent in 1977-78. You will see that it is steadily increasing and that one-tenth of our budget now comes in this way.

Let's you think that I'm straying from the principle of the bill, Mr. Speaker, I draw to your attention that the most fundamental section of the bill is section 4. Section 4 strikes from the original act three clauses in section 51, the section that allows the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make regulations. So, in many ways, the basic principle of this bill is not what the minister is trying to achieve but how he is trying to achieve it.

We feel very strongly that wherever possible the taxation that is levied in the province whether it is against the private sector, against individuals, or against companies, should be up and above-board, and that we in this Legislature should have a chance to speak to that. We see no reason why these charges, as proposed in the minister's statement as a result of this bill, should not be set by legislation annually as part of the economic strategy that the Treasurer lays out in his budget. Therefore, we intend to support everything that the minister is proposing, but we are requesting that it be done through legislation.

In other words, we approve of what the minister is doing and we are therefore supporting the bill on second reading. However, we disagree with the increasing tendency to administer the fundamental economic affairs of the province through regulation. It is time, in our view, to open up the province's economic books to the people of the province. Therefore, we will be proposing—and I have circulated this to the other two parties—a proposed amendment to section 4 of the bill which we will introduce at the appropriate time.

I won't read all of that amendment at the present time. What we have done is take the wording from section 4 in the present bill and we have said that clauses (c), (d) and (e) of section 51 of the act are repealed and subsequent clauses numbered appropriately and the following substituted therefor: "The minister shall immediately following the annual presentation of the Treasurer's budget, introduce legislation (a) fixing the amount of area charge" and so on, and then simply repeating what is in the bill that he is hoping to do by regulation.

It may well be that I have not nearly hit upon the exact way of doing what the minister hopes to do. There may be the necessity to compromise on one or two areas if there are genuine economic administrative difficulties with what I am proposing. However, I think that the argument has to be more powerful than merely saying it's more convenient to administer through regulation. I think the argument has to be that it is impossible, and if the minister can make some proof of argument that it is impossible to achieve what he wants to achieve through legislation, maybe we can come to a compromise of part regulation and part legislation.

But I would certainly feel very strongly that if there is any adjustment in the fee other than the indexing, that it come to the Legislature. This may be one of those rare chances that we actually have to regain through the Legislature the taxation authority that the Legislature in fact should have—the approval for that taxation authority. So much of it has been alienated during 30 years of majority government that in fact the Legislature has often forgotten that it's there as the ultimate responsibility for approval or disapproval of fiscal policies; and so many of our fiscal policies, whether it's through OHIP fees or through pricing at the LCBO or through crown timber fees or tenure charges, we have lost entire control of in this Legislature. It seems to me that we should make every effort as legislators to regain that through the Legislature. We have an opportunity to do that with this bill. Therefore we will, of course, be delighted to have the bill sent to committee.

My understanding was that we wouldn't be going to committee immediately upon completion of second reading but at some future time. We would be delighted to have the give and take with the minister to get some genuine answers to the concerns that he may have about attitudes, and vice versa. In committee stage, in fact, the opposition can answer questions—unlike question period—and that might be a most enjoyable participation.

However, basically, we feel that democracy will be better served. We feel that the Legislature will be better served. We feel that the people of Ontario will be better served by having this particular revenue which is simply another kind of tax, if you like, another kind of royalty or fee or whatever you want to call it, opened up for annual review by the legislative process; and in that regard, I note that there is only one member of the Liberal Party in the House at the present time. Two, sorry, I apologize. But the spokesman for that party indicated they had objections to the regulations.

Mr. J. Reed: It will help to raise the quality of the debate.

Mr. Foulds: The quality of the present sitting Liberal member for Halton-Burlington (Mr. J. Reed) is unquestioned. It makes up for the absence of all of his colleagues.

Mr. J. Reed: You have made my day.

Mr. Foulds: Now, that's only on a relative or comparative basis, Mr. Speaker. I don't want it to go to his head.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Now, back to the bill.

Mr. Foulds: But, in fact, the leadoff speaker for the Liberal Party, the member for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid), had indicated their concern about the administering of these charges through regulation. I would, therefore, plead with the Liberal Party—they have had copies circulated to them of the amendments I'm proposing—to support our amendment so that we can regain in the Legislature the authority over taxation that we are in danger time and time again of losing through regulation.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I understand my mike hasn't been on. It's an indication of the quality of the debate for the last five minutes.

Mr. Foulds: Can I get up on a point of privilege on that?

Hon. F. S. Miller: It's what one could call a soporific talk.

I appreciate the willingness of the two opposition parties to permit my amendment, the one dealing with the right to enter into an agreement with licensees. I quite honestly admit it did not follow the principles of the bill when first introduced. They could have challenged it and claimed I should have to introduce it as a separate bill.

Admittedly, it changes the basic act. We had reached a point in our negotiations with a number of companies where that kind of power was needed quite quickly.

Mr. T. P. Reid: When the minister does something reasonable, we support it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That is why I found both members speaking in agreement with my bill today. How could I be anything but reasonable?

Mr. Foulds: The minister has tried so hard to succeed very often.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I hope to have changes in the bill itself as time goes on, such as has been suggested. Because we were dealing with one limited aspect this year, we felt we should just bring in those amendments that are before the House. After we've had some chance to respond to the Thunder Bay conference and the thoughts that came up there, we may have changes, such as the one suggested by the member for Port Arthur, where he mentioned putting sustained yield into legislation.

It's my objective to have sustained yield and, if signalling it in legislation gives both the program and the people preparing and carrying out the program the necessary incentive, then I'll be delighted.

Mr. T. P. Reid: It would be part of the agreement between the ministry and the company.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The member for Rainy River pointed out that the part in the extra amendment I'm proposing talks about per-missiveness. The agreements are permissive. I would point out that the terms that will be used will probably be spelled out in contracts with the companies, not necessarily in large volumes of regulations. This would allow me to enter into agreements with the companies.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I thought so. It might as well be between friends at table.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The member for Rainy River has already had his chance to speak. This is not question period.

Hon. F. S. Miller: What I like is a firm, impartial Speaker.

The charges we addressed in the first form of the bill, particularly the area charges, really haven't been changed since 1968. Therefore, the 50 per cent increase, a large figure in relative terms, has to be taken in perspective. Since 1968, one could easily argue we could have justified a doubling of the charge. I'd like to point out that the area charge is important as a distinct part of the revenue because I hope it will have an effect upon companies which might be holding in licensed form lands in excess of their needs. They simply can't hold on to them without some cost.

The breakdown between management and fire costs is purely academic. Last year we had $21 million in the basic budget for our enhancement program for fire protection. I believe we spent extra money in addition to that. Yet, as you point out, the revenues are in the range of $2 million from the area charge so one can easily see they are by no means the true costs of management and fire. In fact, I think we discussed in the estimates that direct revenues don't equal direct costs. We recognize that, too.

[4:00]

I couldn't answer the questions the member for Rainy River has addressed to me concerning the variations in the area charge since those charges have remained constant. I will try to get the acreages or square miles for which we made charges and give them to him while we're in committee, so I could explain that.

I do believe the owners of the resource have the right to participate in the increased value of the resource. Therefore, I felt the indexing was justified, just as I feel that if things get tough, there is every reason to have an automatic clause to lower our costs.

While our share is between, I think he said, six and eight per cent of the costs, that's usually of the cost of the wood at the mill, not of the manufactured product leaving the mill. In fact, in the pulp industry I'm told that the crown dues are probably closer to one and a half per cent, or thereabouts, of the total value of the manufactured product. I think one would have to look at that and say, therefore, an increase of something under five per cent, which we're estimating, in crown dues this year will not materially affect their competitiveness.

However, it will leave us with a varying charge, one not subject to a 15-year or a 10-year variation. If one looks back across our history of making discreet changes, it is one of prolonged lapses in between, going back to 1917 when the charges were introduced.

I will save my comments on the question of regulations versus statutes, because we will have time to debate that when we're in committee, save to say perhaps one should look at tradition and see the type of amendment you have proposed doesn't fit in with the principles of our bills in the past. I will, I hope, have some data to back that up when I'm in committee, but my legal counsel assures me that it has not been traditional to introduce the kind of automatic requirement to produce legislation annually following the Treasurer's budget.

Secondly, while it is true many things are relegated to regulation, when one looks at the time of this House and the problems of getting through even the legislation it is faced with in today's complex world, I wonder where, in committee or in the House in the whole, we would ever have the time to deal with the many, many volumes of things coming through in the regulatory sense.

Mr. Foulds: We have a committee.

Mr. Nixon: We do legislation two hours a week.

Hon. F. S. Miller: We would be glad to discuss that with you.

Mr. Foulds: So would we.

Mr. Nixon: What is the big backlog? You've got nothing on the order paper here that is pushing at all. What kind of an argument is that?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nixon: Boy, this government hasn't got a legislative program at all. Sorry, go ahead, but don't give us the impression we're jammed up with legislation.

Mr. Foulds: We bring in every tax bill with the budget.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Would the honourable minister continue?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I had a whole series of thoughts flowing through my head, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: Now they are gone.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Unfortunately they get stopped in your mouth.

Hon. F. S. Miller: They've gone down the river of time, bubbling along, but it's one of those few days that my common sense overruled my tongue. It doesn't in my dress.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That is almost daily.

Mr. Foulds: That was just your bow tie that got in the way.

Hon. F. S. Miller: To say to the member for Port Arthur that is would be impossible to accept his procedures from an administrative point of view would not be true. Costly in terms of time and perhaps in dollars, yes. I have to argue that in the British system of government the responsibility does rest with the government overall. We feel we should retain that system and keep the amendments brought before the House to those needed to reflect principles rather than detail.

That's all, Mr. Speaker. I would like to—

Mr. Foulds: No taxation without legislation.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Can I ask a question of the minister?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It really isn't the appropriate time.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I always try to be reasonable.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I appreciate that. Is it the minister's intention to table the contracts he enters into with various timber companies for a regeneration and management contract in the House when they are signed and completed?

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, my thinking hasn't gone that far. I have no objection to tabling them providing I am not offering competitive information to other members of the industry. I don't think I would be and therefore off the top of my head, I would have no objection. But if in fact we enter into agreements which are, like many contracts, of a confidential nature, I might have some difficulty. I could get some advice at that time as to whether or not I would be breaching the confidentiality of one company versus another.

However, the amendment you are giving us permission to introduce would come a long way towards allowing us to sign certain agreements, particularly on things like modified harvest methods and so on.

ONTARIO STUDENT HOUSING CORPORATION ACT

Hon. Mr. Bennett moved second reading of Bill 90, An Act respecting the Ontario Student Housing Corporation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the honourable minister have an opening statement?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: No, Mr. Speaker, I think all the remarks in relationship to the necessity of the bill were made at the time of its introduction back on May 18. This clearly outlined the number of units at present under the student housing corporation; there are 2,700 single or for married couples, and 9,500 bed units supplied by the Ontario Student Housing Corporation. I might only add that at this moment the same members of the Ontario Housing Corporation also constitute the board of the Ontario Student Housing Corporation. So we are putting it together to clear up one agency.

Mr. Hall: The bill seems to be just a tidying-up affair as far as I'm concerned. I have been given to understand there have been no new units built since 1974 and primarily it is an attempt to consolidate a relatively static organization under the umbrella of a relatively identical organization. At any rate, our research people have checked with the Ontario Federation of Students and were given to understand that so long as the shift would have no adverse effect on students currently living in OSHC units, they are not aware of any problems that might be created.

I would only ask the minister, if he has not already checked on this matter, to make certain and commit to the House there would be no adverse effects on those already occupying the units. Other than that, we can support this minor housekeeping change.

Mr. Duszta: The NDP does not so much support the bill, as not oppose it. It may be a play on words but how can we oppose the bill and how can we oppose transferring a corporation like OSHC to OHC, since that particular group has done absolutely nothing in the last three years?

The need for student housing has not changed, but as Mr. Hall has pointed out no new units have been built since 1974. There has not been a report since 1976. There is only a group in the ministry which in the past has attempted to co-operate with the universities in terms of development, in producing some kind of a program for building housing. The whole idea of the last three years has been an absurdity. An absurdity because the government has in fact moved to remove themselves from any intervention needed in student housing.

If you move that non-existent group, which already has been consigned to oblivion, to another group like OHC which is, according to all information, consigned to oblivion by the government, we accomplish absolutely nothing. I hope Mr. Hall is quite right and that the minister will think seriously in terms of the need for student buildings. However, I don't believe that it will be accomplished in the Ontario Housing Corporation, because we have had all those intimations that they are not going to do any more building and haven't done any much-needed building for people generally in Ontario, to start with. What can I say, except that I agree: we go from nothing to nothing. As they say in Poland, "Z pustego w próżne"; from empty into a void.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to ask a question: I would like to know, if this transfer takes place, will it then automatically become in Metro Toronto, for example, part of the package, which is moving to Metro?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I'd make it very clear to the member for Lincoln that there will be no adverse effects on the student population—

Mr. McClellan: Will there be any beneficial effects?

Hon. Mr. Bennett:—and there will be no adverse effects on those who are currently employed in the maintenance and management of those structures. It is a matter of transferring the assets over to the Ontario Housing Corporation.

To answer the question of the member for St. George, that will be part of the discussion that will take place at some later date with the Toronto people as to how the overall housing package in this community, particularly in Toronto, will be handled. It is one of the areas that will come under rather close scrutiny in the next several months with the social planning committee in Metropolitan Toronto and indeed with my meetings with the chairman of Metro to see how they wish this portion of it handled.

The member for Parkdale couldn't oppose the bill—I am not saying he is supporting it—and he went on to say that we have not been providing housing for students since 1974; which is absolutely correct. The fact is that Ontario Housing and the Ontario Student Housing Corporation have responded to requests for housing by universities or communities. Since there have been no requests from universities or communities for further student housing, it wouldn't seem very logical that the Ontario Student Housing Corporation should impose itself upon a community which has a responsibility to pick up a portion of the loss factor in the operation of the structures. Clearly, with the student population going down, it would also seem to indicate to us that the need for more student housing accommodation does not exist at this time.

In closing, I say the bill will tidy up the situation and will put all the assets and management control in the hands of the Ontario Housing Corporation. To answer once again the member for St. George's point, at some later date it could very well see it transferred into the package of the housing authorities across Ontario, including Toronto.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for third reading.

BUILDING CODE AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Pope, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Grossman, moved second reading of Bill 91, An Act to amend the Building Code Act, 1974.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Does the parliamentary assistant have an opening statement?

Mr. Pope: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Campbell: Doesn't anybody know anything about the bill?

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, the only item in this bill that is of particular interest to me is with respect to the matter of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act and the comment made that any builder defined under that act and who is not registered under that act would no longer be able to receive a building permit. I presume, from the notes in the explanation, that should have had added to it the following words "on a new home." In other words, the whole permit structure is one that allows for a variety of permits for a variety of purposes. I would expect then that only a new home is the area in which this requirement for definition actually relates.

The other items deal with some particular changes concerning the activities and opportunities for decision to be made by the chief official or the inspector, however that person is defined in the various communities. It would seem to me that the other items are really of a housekeeping nature.

[4:15]

If the parliamentary assistant is able to explain this point I have raised concerning the warranty plan situation with respect to a builder, I would think that we can deal with the bill quite promptly and we would support it.

Mr. M. N. Davison: It's perhaps unfortunate that the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Grossman) isn't able to be with us today.

Mr. McClellan: He's at the ball park, drinking beer.

Mr. M. N. Davison: That's meant as no adverse comment on his fine parliamentary assistant. I say that because there are some very difficult matters related to this bill and some sections that are less than clear to which we have to address ourselves.

By and large, the bill meets with the approval of the New Democratic caucus. We will, therefore, be supporting it on second reading.

We do, however, have some very serious reservations about a couple of aspects of the bill. If the parliamentary assistant, in the absence of the minister, is not able to respond to those concerns it would appear that it will be necessary for our party, during committee stage, to move amendments to the legislation to seek the clarification we require.

I understand that an arrangement has been made that this bill will not proceed to the committee stage today. So if it does become necessary for my party to offer amendments to this bill there will be some time for us to circulate those proposed amendments to the minister or the parliamentary assistant and to the critic from the official opposition, and we will do so.

A number of the amendments proposed in the bill are quite simply housekeeping measures, and as far as those are concerned we have no great difficulty with any of them. There are four major changes. Of the four we find ourselves quite able and willing to support two of them.

The first is the question of the fines levied upon conviction being paid to the municipality concerned, not to the provincial Treasurer—that is meant as no reflection on the way in which the Treasurer spends his money—and we think that's a worthwhile approach. We can also agree with the other major amendment which provides for the building official to designate certain areas of buildings which must be kept open until inspection. If he should arrive at the scene and find that those sections of the building are closed, he can order them opened up again at the builder's expense. That also meets with our approval.

The other two major changes present something of a problem. The third major change is the extension of the time for which charges for contravention can be laid under the act. That has been extended from six months to one year. We realize that is the appropriate direction to take, but we really can't see a very good reason why we couldn't extend that period longer. Perhaps two years would be a more suitable length of time. Unless the parliamentary assistant has a fairly clear, reasonable and sensible argument to make for one year as opposed to two years, I would suspect our caucus will put forward an amendment to extend that period further than the one suggested by this bill.

The other area is the question of the municipal chief official being empowered to refuse the issuance of a building permit where a builder of a residence is not registered under the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act. That was the matter that was referred to earlier in this debate by the critic for the official opposition. The concern I have deals by and large with those people who would find themselves unable to purchase a new home because of the incapacity of this government to provide affordable housing for its citizens who are then forced to build their own home in an effort to obtain such accommodation for their families.

As I understand the intent of this change to the act—and I really hope I'm wrong—it implies that while an individual would still be a builder by the definition of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, that is "a person who undertakes the performance of all the work and the supply of all the materials necessary to construct a completed home whether for the purpose of sale by himself or under a contract with a vendor or owner," that individual by my understanding would be placed in a position where the chief municipal officer could quite rightly refuse him or her a permit to build a home.

Frankly, it doesn't make a great deal of sense to me that a person should have to be a member of HUDAC, or be specially considered or recommended by HUDAC, before being permitted to build a home.

Obviously, there are certain protections under the building code. People are not allowed to go out and build shacks that are going to cave in the next day—although when you see some of the homes that are built by supposedly reputable builders you wonder about how strictly the code is considered by some builders. I think that people who have built their own home have put very special effort into it and have by and large probably built better homes than they could buy on the market from some of the people we allow to build homes.

I would like very much to have the parliamentary assistant clear that matter up so we are not putting people in this province in the position where they will be denied building permits when they try to build their own home as a means of putting a roof over the family's head since the government, through the Ministry of Housing and in other ways, has made it so difficult for them that they have no other alternative.

Finally, there are two other matters I would like to raise with the parliamentary assistant at this point in time. One of them concerns what we are going to define as a building. I understand that certain municipalities have enacted their own bylaws which have the effect of defining an excavated hole with the beginning of a basement in it as something that needs to have a fence around it. But I'm not sure that we've really picked up on that quickly enough with the building code to make it incumbent on people to recognize the danger to public safety caused by those kinds of partial buildings. I hope that the parliamentary assistant will know whether or not he thinks the legislation does in fact do that.

The other matter I am curious about is the effect that the change in legislation would have in the case of the holder of a building permit found by the inspector or chief official to be in contravention of the building code. Would it allow a party to the dispute to apply to the building code commission for a hearing and determination of the question? Could the parliamentary assistant tell me whether it would require construction to be halted until the building code commission arrived at a conclusion or would the person be allowed to continue building, finish the building before he got to the building code commission and then find out that he shouldn't have been building the building anyway? That's a question I would like to have clarified before we proceed much further.

Mr. Speaker, I won't continue. There are a number of my colleagues who have very serious concerns about areas of this legislation and I suspect they will address themselves to that. I hope the parliamentary assistant will remember the questions I've raised and offer me some responses when he concludes the debate on this bill.

Mr. McClellan: I wanted to take the opportunity to make a few remarks about one of the main things this bill does. In section 3, it excludes builders who are not registered under the HUDAC home warranties program from the possibility of obtaining a building permit.

At the conclusion of questions today I introduced a petition on behalf of 325 people who had purchased homes from Pastoria Holdings. Some of the members who have been here longer than I have will remember Pastoria Holdings and Rembrandt Homes as perhaps the most exotic of the construction industry ripoff artists. It was probably the excesses of Pastoria Holdings and its associated companies that really led to the pressure which resulted in the government having to bring in a home warranty program of sorts. This bill purports then to extend home warranty protection even further. But I'm not sure how much protection the people of this province can expect from the HUDAC scheme. We're in the crazy position of having no recourse but to support the bill and the provision that extends the inclusionary powers of the HUDAC scheme, but we have doubts about how much protection it actually offers to anybody.

If I could take a little trip down memory lane, I have a quote from the Globe and Mail in April 1975 which describes some houses built by Pastoria Holdings Limited, I'm quoting: "Owners of the houses showed him"—"him" is Frank Drea, Mr. Speaker—"leaking roofs and crooked floors and said they'd been unable to get repairs from the builder. Mr. Drea, who walked around the houses poking holes in concrete floors and muttering such things as 'Jesus' said he hoped the new provincial legislation would prevent a repetition of this kind. Mr. Drea was shown cracks in the walls and floors, doors that would not close, floors that were not level, nails coming through the ceiling, leaks around the windows and through the roofs."

The Globe and Mail in April 1976 describes the wonderful product of this marvellous company. The owners, members of the Rembrandt Home Owners' Association, banded together some four or five years ago to try to obtain redress from the shoddy and disgraceful violation of normal business ethics to which they'd been subjected. "They complained of faulty roofs, poor insulation, faulty ceilings against the ingress of water, the use of a wooden beam or steel was specified, sagging floors an off-centre pillar and a concrete basement floor in which a dog could dig holes."

[4:30]

What's so interesting is that Pastoria Holdings is registered under the HUDAC home warranty scheme today. It was registered when the scheme was brought in and if Pastoria Holdings—as I said, the ripoff artists of all time—can be registered under the HUDAC home warranty program, what protection does the extension of the HUDAC program give to anybody?

What use is the section in this bill that extends a home warranty program that can cover a company like Pastoria Holdings? Pastoria Holdings' little episodes don't end with the fact that 325 people are again petitioning the Legislature today for redress of the grievance that they have been stuck with a shoddy house.

In August 1977, we find Pastoria Holdings hauled in front of county court, charged and convicted on two counts of violation of the Combines Investigation Act. After their convictions, they remained registered under the HUDAC home warranty program.

We have raised this matter in the past. What good is this kind of home warranty program to anybody? I really don't know and I don't know what good the extension of this kind of a home warranty program does for anybody. The principle of the bill in the extract is certainly sensible, that building permits should only be issued to commercial builders who are registered or enrolled in some kind of a viable consumer protection warranty scheme. Unfortunately we don't have that in Ontario. It would be nice if we got it some day. So far we don't have it.

The parliamentary assistant who is sending a blizzard of notes to his officials off in the wings, clearly doesn't have the slightest idea what this bill is about—it's a shame the minister has taken a powder for the afternoon—

Mr. Makarehuk: He wouldn't have any idea what it's about either.

Mr. McClellan: —but I am sure that the blizzard of notes will—

Mr. Nixon: I think that's unfair.

Mr. McClellan: —come back and increase the knowledge of the parliamentary assistant a thousand-fold—

Mr. J. Reed: Cast your bread upon the water.

Mr. McClellan: —and then he can answer some of the questions that we are putting to him on both sides.

Mr. Nixon: The only snow job we are getting is from the honourable member.

Mr. McClellan: The honourable former leader of the Liberal Party should recall that it was his colleague from Armourdale who was the champion of the Rembrandt Home Owners' Association whose cause I alluded to only seconds ago.

Mr. Nixon: Are you referring to a well-known judge?

Mr. McClellan: The very one, yes, the very judge himself.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Would the member please address himself to the bill?

Mr. McClellan: Indeed I will. I want to know whether section 3 has the effect of forcing a person who is building his own home or doing a job on his own home himself into the HUDAC scheme. I doubt if that is intended by the ministry but we are not clear whether the legislation as it's written forces the do-it-yourself builder to be enrolled in the HUDAC scheme. If that's the case, I am sure the ministry would want to make the necessary amendments.

Mr. Makarchuk: There are a few matters of concern to me which have been brought to my attention by municipal officials who pointed out that the bill is half baked perhaps, in some of its approaches as compared to what it could do. It seems to me if the minister is going to introduce legislation, he should have consulted with the municipal people in the province—

Mr. M. N. Davison: It's likely that he did.

Mr. Makarchuk:—and then brought in a more adequate bill. One of the problems pointed out to me is the fact that the bill does not provide any means for dealing with buildings that are partially constructed and then abandoned.

As an example, and this is a situation that has developed in my community, a builder can obtain mortgage funds, put in basements, in this case 45 basements or holes have been dug and cement has been poured, and then depart, leaving the mess to sit there. As a result, the basements have become filled. There's about three or four feet of water in many cases. The children in the neighbourhood are congregating and there have been two or three near-drownings. If the parents aren't alert and the children aren't warned off, there could be a drowning.

The municipality, in an effort to try and do something about it, found they have no legislation to enforce any kind of action on the part of the existing owner, who has departed but who still owns the property, to remedy the situation. They've exhausted every legal means.

The definition of the building in section 6(4) of the bill should probably be expanded to include that a startup or any kind of act on the part of the construction firm would be considered as part of the building, giving the official an opportunity to deal with the problems I have outlined.

Also of concern is section 9 which says, "No proceeding under this section shall be commenced more than one year after the time when the subject matter of the proceedings arose." This is too short a time.

It takes most people some time to understand what is going on when they get settled into a home. It takes time for buildings to settle, and they do settle. It takes time for faults to appear in buildings, and they do appear. It takes time for people even to discover the fact that most of the walls or the ceiling have only partial insulation. These are the kinds of things people who have just bought their first home are not aware of. As a result, they are in a difficult position at this time, even with the HUDAC warranty, to take any kind of action.

As my colleague pointed out, HUDAC is not working. They have no way of getting back at the builder. They could probably go through some lengthy legal case which would involve a great deal of money, but it's difficult to get at the original builder. In many cases he may have operated under one corporate shell; he put the houses up, the corporate shell was dissolved, he proceeded to acquire another corporate shell and away he went on another project. The people are left holding the bag.

This bill should have provided some protection. It could have been an opportunity for the minister to provide better protection for people who are acquiring homes. It also could have given the municipalities more power. The reason I'm advocating more power for the municipalities in this case is the fact that the HUDAC plan isn't working. It's not working as it should or in the way it was envisaged.

Hopefully, the people on the municipal level will then have the power to enforce new standards to get back at the builders. If necessary, take some action against the builders who may want to continue building in the municipality by withholding their building permit until such time as they have remedied a previous situation. This is just one of the means available.

In general, we intend to support the bill. But I hope the parliamentary assistant can explain to us what he intends to do about the matters raised. If not, we will be introducing amendments to the bill to bring it more in line with what we think are legitimate reasons or legitimate complaints or concerns on our part.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to debate Bill 91? If not, the member for Cochrane South.

Mr. Pope: I regret the member for Bellwoods (Mr. McClellan) isn't present. Having offered the opinion I didn't know what the bill was about, he proceeded to leave the Legislature.

With respect to the problem of excavations, I would have to know the specific municipality concerned. I would say that this government has been attempting to encourage municipalities to pass maintenance and occupancy bylaws primarily by attaching them to the Neighbourhood Improvement Program. I think an examination of the standard maintenance and occupancy bylaw that was provided to most municipalities would cover the kind of situation they are referring to.

Mr. Makarchuk: They have the bylaw and it doesn't touch it.

Mr. Pope: It has been dealt with in that manner in other municipalities. I would also reply to the question concerning the time period for proceedings under the act. The six-month limitation arose from the fact that there was reference made to the Summary Convictions Act. Prior to the reference to the Summary Convictions Act there was a one-year limitation on prosecution. It was felt that the request of the municipalities themselves that the one-year time period should be re-introduced.

I must emphasize that there has been extensive consultation with the municipalities, the various building inspectors and their organizations throughout the province of Ontario. As the minister mentioned in his opening statement in the Legislature when he introduced this bill for first reading, it is the result of their requests and the substantial number of meetings that have been held since this legislation was first passed in 1974 that these proposed amendments have been brought forward.

There are ongoing consultations with the construction industry, the building inspectors and the municipalities. When specific problems arise, the government has shown its willingness to bring forth legislation to attempt to resolve these problems. I don't think it's fair to say that there has been no consultation because the record will show that there has been extensive consultation and there is ongoing consultation.

The primary problem that has been raised by the honourable members relates to section 3(1) of the bill. It states: "Subsection 1 of section 6 of the said act is amended by striking out 'or' at the end of clause (a) and by adding thereto the following clause '(aa) the applicant is a builder as defined in the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, 1976 and is not registered under that act.'"

That act defines "builder" as follows: "Builder means a person who undertakes the performance of all the work and supply of all the materials necessary to construct a completed home whether a vendor or owner." It's my interpretation, and I think the interpretation of the ministry concerned, that that does not include an individual who is building his own home for occupancy by himself.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Does that then mean he can't sell a house, once he's built it?

Mr. Pope: Again, I suppose, we get into an argument, under the Act to provide certain Protections for Purchasers of New Homes as to when the triggering-in period would be. Quite frankly, I'm not here to debate the HUDAC program with the different complaints that have been made about various companies operating under that program or the definition of that act. I just would say that if the home is being built by an individual for occupancy by himself—and I assume there would be some test involved—then he is not caught by that act.

Mr. M. N. Davison: It's going to have to be clearer because that means that if you build your own house you can't sell it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is not a question-and-answer period. It's second reading of Bill 91.

Mr. Makarchuk: We're just suggesting.

Mr. M. N. Davison: We're trying to help the parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Pope: I understand that the members are trying to help the parliamentary assistant. All I can tell them is that as interpreted the act would not apply to individuals who are building their own homes. I assumed that was the problem being raised here, not the problem of someone trying to circumvent the HUDAC program by building homes for themselves ostensibly and then at some subsequent time turning it over. I thought the concern was, on the other hand, that members were concerned about an individual who's building a home for himself perhaps being restricted from obtaining the necessary building permit because he was not registered.

[4:45]

What I am saying is that that is covered because the interpretation that has been given to the definition of builder in the act does not include someone who is building a home for himself. Therefore, that problem has been met.

The problem was not raised in the comments by the honourable members as to someone circumventing the act. That is another issue. I think that answers the problem of the individual builder. I would also say that there are two separate and distinct tests that have been proposed as a result of this amendment. I would refer to them.

Section 6(1) of the act says: "The chief official shall issue a permit except where the proposed building or the proposed construction or demolition will not comply with this act or the building code or will contravene any other applicable law." There is another section with another test. The applicant as a builder is defined in the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, 1976 and is not registered under that act.

Even if the HUDAC plan would apply to the builder, he would also have to adhere to the provisions of the building code. When he files his plans and specifications for the construction project itself, that would be something that the chief official could refuse to issue his building permit for. I believe that that might answer some of the problems with respect to repair because I would remind the honourable members that the definition of construction in section 1(e) of the act is fairly broad to include repairs.

I would say that with these two tests in section 6 and, in addition, the filing of the drawings, plans and specifications there is adequate safeguard and adequate tests set out for the chief official to exercise his discretion for the protection of a prospective purchaser of a new home, namely, that the building permit has been issued after the chief official has been satisfied that the provisions of the building code, as passed by regulation and as amended from time to time by consultation with the chief officials, with the building inspectors and with the various organizations in the construction associations, have been complied with. I believe that the building code itself contains safeguards for new homes and that they are being enforced in this province.

Getting back for a moment towards the extension of time period, I think there has to be some cutoff date for prosecutions under this act and that at some point in time the maintenance and occupancy bylaws have to be triggered and prosecutions take place under that act. We are also talking in some instances about failure to obey orders to comply or stop-work orders. If there has been a failure to obey a stop-work order, application could be made to the courts to compel work to stop. There is also a provision for a fine under the act for failure to obey that order. In that instance, the past practice, from my own knowledge, has been that a court order will be issued compelling the builder to stop work on the project. There hasn't been a history of a delay problem where there has been a refusal by a builder to obey a stop-work order.

With respect to orders for compliances there has not been a history of any problem that might take the time period beyond the one-year limitation period. Orders for compliance have a different role from the stop-work order. I think we are talking about major problems in construction where it is normal for a stop-work order to be issued. If that is disobeyed, then there are other procedures that are regularly taken in order to force the contractor to stop building.

There is a legitimate concern that work might be carried on when there has been a breach of the building code, but I think in practice it has been taken care of by the procedures set out in the Building Code Act and by other remedies that are available to the municipalities and others who might seek redress. I think that the one year limitation has been suggested to the ministry by the municipalities and by the other associations and organizations concerned with the enforcement of this act. It is in response to their suggestions that this solution has been arrived at of reverting back to the one year limit program.

I hope I have answered the concerns of the members. I'm sorry I wasn't aware there had been arrangements not to refer this to committee today, but I am advised that it is so. We will proceed, if there are no further questions, to second reading and deal in perhaps a little more detailed way with these matters in committee.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

MUNICIPAL AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Ashe, on behalf of Hon. Mr. McKeough, moved second reading of Bill 80, An Act to amend the Municipal Act.

Mr. Ashe: As the honourable members know, these amendments to the Municipal Act, the principal components thereof, are to recognize the recent changes in the Municipal Elections Act. These brought about the change in the election date, the change in the commencement date of the term of office; many of the amendments contained within Bill 80, in effect are a followup of that.

There is also an amendment that will enable the council to assign responsibility to a committee of the council for holding public hearings. This came as a response to requests from numerous municipalities throughout the province.

There is also an amendment proposed to broaden the municipal authority to establish their own form of remuneration, both directly and also for the reimbursement of expenses for members of council and local boards who are appointees of the respective councils. As a followup to that, there is a responsibility for the municipal treasurer to publicly table a document at the end of February of each year showing the actual expenses and remuneration paid to each member of council during the preceding calendar and fiscal year, and all members of boards appointed by that council.

There is also an amendment to allow the municipalities to clarify how and why municipalities could temporarily close roads. There is authority given to municipalities to establish bicycle paths and also to establish bicycle lanes. There is also a much sought-after allowance within the amendments proposed in Bill 80 to allow municipalities to insure municipal employees for liability in the carrying out of their duties. There is also an expansion of the definition of fire routes to include parking that has previously been known as "parking lot areas."

There are also many other minor changes to remove imperial measurement units from the act. Rather than convert these units in the omnibus metric conversion bill, it is felt in many instances that the relevant imperial measurement units are really not necessary in any measurement form; therefore, they are being deleted.

Mr. Epp: I would like to speak to these bills. Although the parliamentary secretary to the Treasurer has not indicated that there are a series of bills here, as everyone knows in the next hour or so we are going to be dealing with Bills 80, 81, 82, 83 and 84, all of them essentially dealing with the same items but as they appear in different statutes or different acts which this Legislature has passed over the years. We are responding to the Municipal Elections Act which this Legislature passed last fall. It incorporated into it a number of important amendments, such as the change of the election date to November and also a number of other complementary amendments to that particular change.

At that time, this House didn't see the wisdom of a few important amendments I made with respect to citizenship being the only qualification for being an elector at municipal elections or the lengthening of the term for municipal candidates; but I presume in the not too distant future the House will see the wisdom of those particular amendments and have an opportunity to adopt them.

With the passing of the Municipal Elections Act, 1977, a number of changes and therefore amendments are required, and my party is going to support those changes in principle.

Later on there may be one or two amendments suggested by the member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart), and we will listen very closely to what he has to say in support of those amendments to see whether or not they require our support.

I can appreciate that there have been a lot of amendments come forth over the last number of years, suggestions from the 835 municipalities across the province of Ontario. Some of the amendments or suggestions made by municipalities have been incorporated into the five bills before us.

Unfortunately, we don't have the many other amendments recommended by the various municipalities, which have gone either directly to the government or to the government via the Association of Municipalities of Ontario or one of the other municipal associations.

There are probably other amendments or other suggestions made that warrant our support, but the government has chosen at this time not to incorporate them in the act.

We see this bill essentially as a housekeeping bill. I was going to list some of the amendments. The parliamentary assistant to the Treasurer, has done an admirable job in listing some of the changes incorporated in Bill 80 and I am sure he will list some of those incorporated into the other bills coming before us.

With respect to Bill 83, which deals with Metropolitan Toronto, we could have an opportunity to change the election of the chairman of Metro Council. This could be a very important amendment in that it would limit the choice to the members of regional council at each election.

Only a few weeks ago our party took a very strong position that when the government brought its response to the Robarts report, brought in legislation based on the Robarts report, we would make an amendment to that act, and we hold to that commitment. As soon as the government sees fit to bring in that particular act we will move that the regional chairman be an elected person.

The way it now stands, the person could be a chairman of the regional municipality or Metro Toronto without ever holding an elected office. We feel that is somewhat inequitable. We feel it is shortsighted and the government has not indicated that they are going to change that. It is incumbent upon us to make that change and we feel at that time the government will see the wisdom of our suggestion and support us.

It is obvious that the chairman should be an elected person because, as we have seen in the past, in some instances the person didn't even live within the municipality, as was the case in Sudbury. He was picked out of Toronto and made chairman in Sudbury; which I think was unfair to the people of the Sudbury municipality at that time. We think that particular principle should apply to Toronto as well as to other municipalities.

[5:00]

We will support this bill in principle as well as the others. I await the comments of the member for Welland-Thorold with respect to the few amendments he has to propose.

Mr. Swart: The debates on all of the bills this afternoon seem to have been rather harmonious and orderly, though they may have been a little critical now and then. Perhaps I can continue that harmony by saying that the bill which we have before us, Bill 80, is going to be supported by us. I think every clause in the bill makes an improvement in municipal operations.

Mind you, Mr. Speaker, I have to say that some of them may be long overdue. I have to say that some could be further improved and that some have been forced on the government by the changes in the Municipal Elections Act. Having said all of that, I would say they do make improvements and they all have some merit. I think it's true to say in general it gives more authority and more autonomy to local municipalities.

The parliamentary assistant to the minister will know that I have submitted a number of amendments. In fact, it's really only one amendment, which I'm sure he'll find out. I apologize for not getting that to him and to the municipal affairs critic for the Liberal Party until noon today. When I heard in a previous debate that the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. F. S. Miller) hadn't got his amendment out in the time required I didn't feel quite so guilty about not having done that.

As I say, we support this bill. The parliamentary assistant has outlined many of the provisions of the bill. Many of them are necessary to change the date of the first meeting of the municipal councils, whether they be local councils, county councils or regional councils. The qualifications for the candidates at municipal elections are also defined in this bill. I have to say I'm very pleased to see that at least the candidates in municipal elections are going to have to be qualified voters, even though the Municipal Elections Act permitted their nominators in some circumstances to be other than qualified voters. It's nice to know that at least the people who are going to represent us on council have to be qualified voters.

I want to say that I, personally, and my party, strongly support sections 21 and 22 which give municipalities full authority on determining the remuneration and the amount of expenses that are going to be paid to municipal councils and to the local boards of the municipal councils. I'm particularly pleased that clause 389(d) provides for public disclosure of the amount of money and expenses paid to members of council and boards. There's always difficulty in determining what may be legitimate expenditures because of differences in the necessary expenditures as between members of a council or between members of this provincial Legislature. All of us know that when the expense reports come out on members of the Legislature that the fact that one person has spent a lot more than another does a disservice to some of those members of the Legislature who may not have tie-lines to every area in the municipality and so on. In spite of that, it is terribly important that the public know what remuneration and what expense money their elected officials get, in spite of the dangers of there being some misinterpretation because all of the information cannot be given. That is accomplished in this bill.

I have listed here, as did both the parliamentary assistant and the member for Waterloo North (Mr. Epp), the changes that are going to be made by this act, but I am not going to enumerate those. I just want to say that the amendment which we will propose in second reading expresses some concern with the short limitations in this bill relative to the time in which a municipal council may pass bylaws to change the composition of council or to the minimum time prior to election, where ratepayers may petition the council, and the council may then submit that to the electors. The 10-day period prior to the posting of the notices of the candidates, I suggest is just not sufficient. Let me give one example to members of this House to show what it would mean.

A county council could pass a bylaw which would prohibit deputy reeves from sitting on county council. It has that authority. This act would provide that the council must pass that bylaw not later than 10 days prior to the posting of notices of the offices which will be up for election in the municipality in any given year. Those are posted seven days before the last nomination day. This means a county council could decide that it was going to remove all deputy reeves from the county council 17 days prior to the last day that a person could be nominated as a deputy reeve. You may say that's adequate time for candidates to make up their minds as to whether they want to run for deputy reeve, but I suggest there is another aspect to this.

The other aspect is that if a county council decides to do this, there should be some time in there for input from the public to that county council. I am not suggesting that a great many county councils would do this—perhaps none would do this—but if we are going to set up these time limits, and we have not had them before, then I think they should be adequate for public input, to give people time for some thought to this. Surely to require that it be 30 days instead of 10 days is a reasonable proposal.

The same thing holds true of the people who wish to petition a council to change the composition of the council. They may no longer want wards, for instance. If they make a petition to that council, there may be a great many people there that evening—and I have been through these kinds of things many times myself—and the council will pass a bylaw. There may be others within the municipality, when it comes out that the council has passed that bylaw, who want to have their input too. They will go to the next council meeting but it could well be too late, because the machinery will have already been under way to have the vote taken at the municipal election.

I hope the parliamentary assistant perhaps will agree to have this included. It seems reasonable to give more adequate time for public discussion before the actual changes are made or before the council passes a bylaw which can't be reversed because the ballots are already being printed or something else of that nature. I admit, quite frankly, this doesn't happen very often but, if we are going to put these time limits in, then I think the time limits should be reasonable.

Mr. Speaker, as I say, I think there are six or seven amendments which all do exactly the same thing but they apply to different sections of the bill and in some instances they apply to counties, other cities, other towns, other villages and townships. With that one exception, we will be supporting the bill as it is presented here.

Mr. Ashe: I appreciate the support received from the members opposite. It's refreshing to know that things are going to go so smoothly.

Mr. Foulds: Don't tease the bear.

Mr. Ashe: The member for Waterloo North brought in some questions and comments relating actually to Bill 83. As the Speaker knows we are at the moment only speaking regarding Bill 80, albeit there's no doubt that 80 to 84 do have some overlapping similar sections. We'll leave the further comments and response relating to Bill 83 and the regional chairman until the appropriate time.

The member for Welland-Thorold spoke about some amendments and the fact that they came a little late. They sure have, because I still don't have them, so obviously we can't deal with them today. Through the medium of the telephone I have some idea of what they're about. I might make him feel a little better to say that based on the gist of what we got on the telephone, we probably don't have any great problem with them.

On the time period of 10 days, relating to changes that might come about through the composition of the county council or other changes that come about because of petitions to council, the 10 days came about and we felt it was reasonable. As the honourable member has already acknowledged, it virtually never happens. We do have at least one situation that prompted the placing of a time period at all. That relates to a county council which, based on the old regulations, passed a bylaw in county council excluding deputy reeves following an election, a right they previously had. That was finally acknowledged even by that council to be somewhat unfair and they postponed the implementation of the decision for two years. That solved the problem.

That's why there was a time period put in. If the honourable members feel that 30 days is better than 10 days, that's fine. You could practically put in any time you want. As the member for Welland-Thorold already acknowledged, it virtually isn't used anyway. We just felt some protection should be in there. I suppose it can just as legitimately be 30 days as 10 days.

With those few responses, I think it's in order possibly to put the motion to second reading.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

REGIONAL MUNICIPALITIES AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Ashe, on behalf of Hon. Mr. McKeough, moved second reading of Bill 81, An Act to amend certain Acts respecting Regional Municipalities.

Mr. Ashe: Bill 81 does many of the things we spoke about in the Municipal Act. I think the primary consideration to do with the remaining bills, 81 through to 84, is that they in no way purport to be reactions on the implementation or otherwise of the majoring restructuring reports that have been tabled with the government. Those will be coming forward separately. They are not being overlooked. They were just not to be, and are not part of, these particular pieces of legislation.

In Bill 81 there are, as well certain parts of the planning sections of various regional municipalities being clarified. Finally, there are some amendments in the bill to effect certain requested changes to a few of the regional municipalities in very specific terms. [5:15]

Mr. Stong: In speaking to Bill 81, I have discussed this matter with our critic and we are supporting this bill in principle. However, there are two concerns arising with respect to the section as it deals with the regional municipality of York, and amendments will be offered by myself in committee stage. We will be asking that section 27 be amended because although I believe it arises out of a typographical error, it is short one council member to conform with what the town of Markham has already proposed and done. The total in section 27 should be 10 members rather than nine members; the mayor and 10 members rather than the mayor and nine members.

This was conveyed to the ministry by the town of Markham pursuant to a letter, and the information I have received was that they were informed that is one amendment that will be offered in committee. Those are basically my remarks. We are in agreement in principle with what Bill 81 purports to do.

Mr. Swart: As we did with Bill 80, we are supporting this bill too. In fact, I have no amendment to this bill. By and large, the thought that has gone into this bill has been good. The method of determining that remuneration being paid to the regional council shall be exactly on the same basis of self-determination, and in fact incorporating the sections of the Municipal Act into this act is the sensible way to do it, rather than having two separate interpretations as was the case before between the Municipal Act and the acts of the regional municipalities.

I draw particular attention to that move, because the same policy wasn't followed in the amendments to the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act. I would like to see it, and when that comes up we'll be moving the amendment to have it conform with the changes in all the other regional municipalities.

This bill removes the prohibition for paying regional council members on police commissions from the section, but doesn't automatically provide that they shall be paid on that police commission. The determination is left up to the regional council. Having sat on a regional council for a number of years and having two members from there sitting on the police commission, I realize they had no heavier work load than the other members of regional council, because although they sat on the police commission they didn't sit on the works committee or some other committee in regional council, so the work load was levelled off. Any regional council should be able to give this kind of consideration to whether members of council who are sitting on outside local boards should receive special remuneration because they sit on those boards.

This bill leaves that decision to the regional council and this is the way it should be.

I would ask the parliamentary assistant, I'm not sure whether he's just stepped out, if he could comment on the matter raised by the member for York Centre (Mr. Stong), because I, too, was wondering exactly on what basis one additional member was added for Markham. The population figures seem to indicate Markham might be entitled to more than one additional member when their population has reached 60,000 which I guess, is close to being double of that of any other municipality in that region. Perhaps somebody will convey the question to him when he returns to his seat.

I would also like to ask the parliamentary assistant if the purpose for extending the time from April 1 to July 1 in the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton with regard to the redivision of municipalities into subdivisions is in anticipation of change in municipal boundaries because of a bill which may come in relative to carrying out the white paper proposals in the Ottawa-Carleton area, or is there some other reason of which I am not aware why this change is being made from April 1 to July 1? Those are all the questions I would like to ask and all the comments I should make on this bill that is before us.

Mr. Hodgson: I would like to speak on part III of this bill as it relates to the region of York. Though I am supporting the bill, I can't say I am all that happy with the bill and I don't think the regional council of the municipality of York is all that happy. Maybe the parliamentary assistant can answer a few questions.

Mr. Conway: It is just more of the Treasurer's (Mr. McKeough) mixup.

Mr. Roy: Give him hell.

Mr. Hodgson: No, I am not going to give him hell. I just want a few answers. Did he have any correspondence or any indication from the region of York council on appointing an extra member from the town of Markham for regional council representation? What criteria did he use in regard to population when appointing an extra member to Markham? Back in 1970, the criteria was 10,000. If it was over 15,000, they were entitled to two representatives.

I am quite disappointed. The ministry had resolutions from the four smallest municipalities in the region of York, namely Whitechurch-Stouffville, King, Aurora and East Gwillimbury asking for consideration to allow the council to appoint a representative in the mayor's place in case the mayor could not attend the regional council meeting. There are several council meetings in the region of York which the mayor is simply unable to attend: He could be doing some other duty or he could be sick or there could be several other reasons. Then that municipality has no representation at all.

Mr. Conway: You don't like what they are giving the member for York Centre (Mr. Stong).

Mr. Hodgson: I would like to see a minimum of two representatives from every municipality. That has not been suggested, but it has been requested by those four municipalities that they be able to appoint a representative of the council of the local municipality to attend regional council meetings. Maybe when we go into committee on this bill, I might be bringing forward a resolution to that effect.

Mr. Stong: I won't support anything against Markham.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Ottawa East.

Mr. Conway: The mayor of Vanier.

Mr. Roy: May I have some order in this place so that my comments can be registered fully and precisely on the record?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps if you chased the honourable member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway) back to his seat, it might be helpful.

Mr. Roy: I think it would be an excellent idea if he went back to his seat. In fact, I would support an order of that kind.

Mr. Cunningham: Back to Renfrew.

Mr. Roy: In view of the fact that Bill 81 deals with various regional municipalities along with the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton, I felt compelled to make a few comments on the bill.

The section that I am concerned about is section 1(2). My concern is based on the fact that the government continues with its old policy of the election of the regional chairman. It seems to me, in view of the fact that the government has had suggestions over all these years about alternatives to how the chairmen should be elected, that it shouldn't continue to have a clause which would allow a person not elected locally to be elected chairman.

In other words, we feel that on the basis of proper representation and following the normal democratic process by which all of us here are in this House, these people should be elected at one level or the other. There has been some dispute about whether the regional chairman should be elected at large or should be elected on a ward or district basis. We feel that his responsibility, whether it's at large—the former leader of our party is whispering something to me—very inoffensively.

Mr. Nixon: It wasn't meant to be inoffensive.

Mr. Roy: We used to have a policy that the chairman should be elected at large; but whether he's elected at large or in a district or ward, he is in any event responsible to the electorate. There should be some method whereby this individual, who is after all the most important politician in all of these regional areas, is subject to the will and whims of the electorate at one level or another. I'm very disappointed that the government has not found a way whereby this is done automatically. The way the legislation reads now, the chairman can be a member of regional council or any other person. It seems to me that should be changed.

The parliamentary assistant has indicated that other legislation will be forthcoming dealing with various regional areas, subject to the reports that have been brought forward in various of these areas, such as the Roberts report on Metro Toronto or the Mayo report on Ottawa-Carleton. I understand there were further reports on Niagara.

The fact is that we in this party—and I have discussed this matter with our critic who is a knowledgeable gentleman in his field—look forward to this further legislation. At that time, hopefully, we will put across our views, that I must say I will fully support, that the regional chairman be elected at one level or the other; that the most important politician in all of these regional areas should be responsible to a group of people who elect him, and not only to the members of regional council.

Mr. Swart: On a point of order: although I may agree with what the member for Ottawa Centre is saying—

Mr. Roy: No, no, no. Your leader is from Ottawa Centre. Don't confuse me, please.

Mr. Nixon: What a mistake! You should be ashamed.

Mr. Swart: That's the greatest compliment you've been paid in this House. I rise on the point of order that there is nothing in the bill about the election of the chairman, therefore the speaker is out of order.

Mr. Speaker: There is really nothing out of order.

Mr. Nixon: Except the member.

Mr. Speaker: You may rise to correct the record, but there is really nothing out of order.

Mr. Swart: I am rising to say the speaker is not speaking to the bill. There is nothing in this bill about the election of the chairman, or non-election of the chairman, or how the chairman is going to be selected. I suggest the member is out of order.

Mr. Cunningham: Yes, there is.

Mr. Roy: With respect, Mr. Speaker, if I may, on the point of order: Possibly my friend from Welland-Thorold—it wouldn't be the first time he is confused, but it any event we are sympathetic and very charitable in this party.

I would read to him the section that I was talking about, that is section 1(2) where he will notice that on the right-hand side it refers to election of the chairman.

Mr. Nixon: Right. Got that, Mel?

Mr. Roy: I have been accused sometimes of mish-mashing the English language and not understanding what is happening in that language—

Mr. Nixon: Hardly ever mish-mash.

Mr. Roy: —but here we are, "election of chairman." It talks about, "the regional council shall . . . elect as chairman one of the members of the regional council, or any other person." Is the member going to apologize?

Mr. Nixon: You didn't get your QC for nothing.

Mr. Swart: I rise again on a point of order. The section he is speaking about refers to the timing of the election of the chairman. It has nothing to do with the procedures of the election of the chairman or whether the chairman should be elected or appointed or anything else of this nature. I just make the point once again that the speaker is out of order when he is talking about whether regional chairmen should be appointed or elected.

Mr. Nixon: Or "any other person."

Mr. Speaker: The member for Ottawa East can continue.

[5:30]

Mr. Roy: Thank you. I might state that we in this party are very fortunate that our critic is not as confused as that. I'm sure the parliamentary assistant must appreciate that, at least, to get some suggestions that are in order.

To continue—in fact, I was winding up, Mr. Speaker, when this happened—

Mr. Swart: There is a difference between winding up and winding down.

Mr. Roy: If I may state my position again, the bill calls for the election of the chairman, whether he is one of the members of regional council or any other person; when it talks about any other person, that is the part I object to. As I was saying, when the government finally brings forward legislation that will incorporate some of the suggestions of these various reports, I hope we will have an opportunity at that time to bring forward our views by way of amendment. At that time, when we bring forward our amendments and when we spend some time with the party to my left and their critic in explaining what the amendment is all about, maybe we will receive their support and then we would hope to be in a position to change that system and make the regional chairman responsible.

Mr. Swart: You have just been reading our speeches for a couple of years.

Mr. Roy: I look forward to this legislation, although I must say in relation to the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton there won't be very much in that legislation that is coming forward, because we have spent $250,000 on that report and all the recommendations have been put aside and have not been accepted.

Mr. Nixon: Except for the school board one, which you are going to get.

Mr. Roy: Yes, but the Treasurer is not going—

Mr. Speaker: That is not part of this bill.

Mr. Roy: I accept your ruling, Mr. Speaker. If I may wind up, we look forward to this other legislation—

Mr. Nixon: Then we will fix you.

Mr. Roy: —we will stop this system and we will make the most important politician in the regional areas accountable to the people he represents.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak to the second reading of Bill 81?

Mr. Nixon: Nothing is left to be said. Well, hardly anything.

Mr. Cunningham: Mr. Speaker, very briefly, I too would like to indicate through you my concern about the ramifications of not having a regional chairman elected on a local basis. We in our area are now entering our fifth year, I guess of our regionalized structure. With no disrespect to the incumbent chairman, that individual has yet to be reaffirmed or ratified by the public. I suppose there is sometimes at least potentially a lack of accountability that may flow from that circumstance. Personally, I find it somewhat distressing.

We too have had a report in our area which was the subject of some discussion and controversy today outside the Legislature. I guess that would be an understatement. Notwithstanding the expense associated with that particular report, I do hope that it may be shelved; if that is the case, I suppose the existing system may continue as it is.

I would like to indicate to the honourable parliamentary assistant that I personally regard the election of a chairman to be a very important matter. The functioning of our region, if it is going to exist as it is, I suppose, will exist largely at the pleasure or the existence of some leadership provided by that one individual, however he or she may be elected. Currently we have a lady who has had considerable experience at the city level and who certainly has carried herself, I must say, fairly objectively throughout her activities as a regional chairman. But whether that individual is going to be Mrs. Jones, as we have in our area, or whether it is going to be some other person, I think it is important that we take a very serious look at seeing that the individual serves in an elected capacity within the region that they serve.

It might also be a time for some serious consideration at least of the voluntary kind of aspect they used to approach when they were considering who would be a county warden. I am sure that the honourable parliamentary assistant, having had a great deal of municipal experience, is certainly well aware of that particular practice.

I am distressed, really, that the potential exists in my area, and in some of these other areas, for an individual not to be ratified by the public nor, in an elected way, be accountable to the public. I want to suggest that some serious consideration be given to seeing that these individuals are elected at some local basis.

I don't think, in my own particular region, that the people, either in the city or the outlying areas, are so small or narrow in their approach to regional government that they would look at things in some parochial fashion. I think I could see people in the rural communities supporting somebody from the city if that individual was capable, and of course an elected individual. Likewise, I could see the city favouring the rural areas with that same kind of support for a capable individual. I think the basis of a person serving as chairman should be some elected qualification.

Mr. Breagh: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to speak briefly on that one part of this bill which deals with the matter of regional chairmen.

It's been my feeling for some time that the chairman of something as big, as powerful and as awesome in spending terms as a regional government certainly ought to be someone who enjoys the support of the electorate. This bill does not do that. It causes me some anguish that it does not do that, because the matter has been discussed in a number of regions, particularly in my own region of Durham, where it has been the matter of considerable debate. Unfortunately, the precedent in regional government is rather destructive in the sense that regional chairmen are almost always appointed in the first instance. It's some compromise person who is not a member of that council, and who from that point on leads the region through its business.

I'm concerned about several aspects of it, the first of which primarily concerns itself with democratic institutions. No one in such a powerful institution as the chairmanship of a region, no matter how wonderful a human being he or she might be, no matter what great administrative powers that person might have, he shouldn't hold such an office unless at some time he had sought and received some form of a mandate from the electorate in that area. That still is not the case in virtually any of the regions that we have.

The tag on the end of that is that many of them—I would guess most of them—at one time or another held some elected office there. But at no time did they ever take a program, or a platform, or even a personal set of views out to the electorate and say this is the reason why you should or should not vote for me. I think that's one of the basic problems that we have in all our regions. The people who—

Mr. Roy: He is out of order, I think.

Mr. Swart: If one person's out they're all out.

Mr. Nixon: The member for Welland-Thorold said that wasn't in the bill.

Mr. Breugh: I believe it's in the bill. I accept a ruling from the Speaker in that Chair and not the speaker in this chair.

I think that it's a cause of increasing concern because we do have people who function as regional chairmen, who exercise a great deal of jurisdiction over the council, over the programs and policies of that council; and they are supposed to represent the public.

As a compromise position—it has been put forward by a number of people—if they get elected as a regional councillor thereafter the regional council itself could choose that person. This bill proposes to do much the same—it says that someone could be a member of the council and then be chosen as regional chairman, but not necessarily so.

I think that's a part of our thinking on regional government in this province that is a fundamental flaw. In the first instance they were provincial appointees, and they have considerable expertise in the field of dealing with the council thereafter, and that tends to make them a logical choice to be subsequent chairman of that particular region.

It was my experience and I think it's shared in other regions, that very often the person who becomes regional chairman becomes one because he's a compromise person. He doesn't particularly have to believe in anything. As a matter of fact, it's probably better if he doesn't. He doesn't have to propose any policies, or programs or new directions for the region to take. He simply has to find some kind of consensus or common ground among the council. I think that's a dangerous precedent for us to have set and I think it's a basic flaw in the way we set up that tier of government.

I don't purport to be against the bill because it's essentially a housekeeping bill. But I want to put on the record some concerns that I have had for some time on how people become chairman or chairlady of a region and how they carry out that office. It's a basic fundamental flaw in our own democratic process that we put someone in a rather important and influential position without giving him the opportunity to seek a mandate from an electorate.

Mr. Ashe: Mr. Speaker, a great many of the remarks were not out of order in the strictest sense of the word, but they were not really too relevant to Bill 81.

Mr. Nixon: That's my friend, good old George.

Mr. Ashe: There's no doubt the more appropriate time will be when subsequent legislation comes forward, but I appreciate on that particular subject—

Mr. Nixon: Everybody's friend.

Mr. Ashe: I appreciate the various views on that, at the very least, controversial subject.

Mr. Conway: Appreciate it, George; support it.

Mr. Ashe: I personally don't support it but I don't want to give away all my arguments rights now.

There's no doubt it's a very personal thing. But let me react to the various points made by the honourable members. The member for York Centre brought forth a suggested amendment, and as we have discussed privately neither of us has received from the region the particular items referred to. We would be happy to look into it and be able to respond to the particular amendment at the appropriate time. The local council in effect changed the size of their body by bylaw, I assume within the past week or so, and I would suggest to you they really don't have the right to assume it is a fait accompli. They can express their opinion and apply for an amendment to the legislation or they can apply to the Ontario Municipal Board. They may or may not get approval but we are quite prepared to look at this to be sure of exactly what they are attempting to do. We will be able to respond more specifically to that amendment at the appropriate time during committee consideration.

The member for Welland-Thorold brought up the particular point relating to the change in Ottawa-Carleton from April 1 to July 1. This is not in recognition of any other legislation or possible legislation relating to the Mayo report; in actual fact it's recognizing a problem that exists this year in Ottawa-Carleton that will have to be remedied come what may. Ottawa-Carleton used the voting machine method in a past election and are changing their method.

Mr. Cunningham: I recall the Tory leadership convention. What a mess they got in after that.

Mr. Ashe: Yes, that's where they borrowed the equipment to save the taxpayers money. But in any event, they wished to change the procedure for this year's election. Unfortunately, they have passed the deadline relating to the relationship with the assessment department, namely April 1, and this recognizes a change in time for that particular purpose. It does not relate to any other possible changes that may or may not be coming forward; so it's just recognizing a procedure they have to go through since they missed the last date, which previously was April 1. We are prepared to accommodate their predicament through the medium of this legislation.

The member for York North raised various questions relating to representation of the town of Markham on the York regional council. There was correspondence back and forth between the minister, the region and the town of Markham over a period of several years. The minister indicated on more than one occasion that he really did not want to become involved in suggesting changes to the representation on regional council and asked regional council to do so. On at least two official occasions, they have declined the invitation of the town of Markham to review representation and have declined to look kindly upon the Treasurer's request to look at that.

[5:45]

In a letter dated December of 1977 to the regional chairman, the Treasurer indicated that representation remain as presently constituted and that he intended to discuss with his colleagues in the legislative assembly and in the cabinet the possibility of amending the Regional Municipality of York Act to increase from three to four the number of members of the regional council elected from the town of Markham because the regional council had declined, hopefully, its right to do so. There's no doubt we would much prefer that the regional council on its own volition would look at representation from time to time and come forward with some kind of consensus of its own to the government so that legislation can reflect its views. When they don't really want to take on that responsibility, then, unfortunately, I think, we must eventually act.

Mr. Stong: I had asked for that in the House as well.

Mr. Ashe: Good. Here are the criteria that have been used, to give a little statistics to the background in the problem. In 1971 Markham's population, at just over 36,000, constituted 22 per cent of the region's population, yet it elected just under 19 per cent of the members of regional council. Between 1971 and 1976 the region grew by nearly 41,000 people, approximately a 25 per cent increase. In that time, the Markham population grew by 20,000 people, which was an increase of something over 56 per cent of the total regional growth during that five-year period.

We're not using 1977 figures which would show to a greater degree the imbalance of the representation from that particular municipality. By the end of 1976, the regional population had grown to something in the area of 200,000 residents, of whom approximately 56,000 came from the town of Markham. Although they had approximately 28 per cent of the regional population, they had less than 20 per cent of the voting rights on the regional council.

What this particular amendment is doing is increasing their representation and the total regional council size by one. In other words, it is not in any way taking away a seat or a vote from another area municipality. It is increasing the total by one. It still leaves the town of Markham with a proposed percentage of total regional council representation of 23.5 per cent, although it does have 28 per cent of the population. At least, it brings them back to some relationship of balance similar to what they had in 1971.

Another very valid point raised by the member for York North relates to a problem which is not only true in the region of York but is true in many regions throughout the province where a particular area municipality is represented only by one representative. It's not as prevalent in the newer legislation as it was in some of the older. There's no doubt it creates a problem. I'm not sure that the answer is just to increase their representation by one each, because that further compounds the problem that already exists in trying to get any semblance of a relationship of representation to population.

Another alternative has been suggested, which we have been looking at and which was already mentioned by the member for York North. There is much reluctance to this, I might say, and great diversions of opinion even within councils and in particular regional councils. It is whether in the absence of the elected member, particularly in the instances where we're talking about the mayor, there should be the option of having an alternative from the local municipality able to sit in place of and assume all the voting rights and responsibilities of the elected member.

As I mentioned, this is being looked at and will be looked at further. I think it's a very valid argument. On the other side of the coin, there's no doubt there are some great differences of opinion within the municipal sector as to whether they want somebody else who is not elected to that particular position to come on to the council to cast a vote. In the case of York, there are four municipalities that fall into that category of having only one person on the regional council.

The members for Ottawa East, Wentworth North and Oshawa spoke about the situation of the regional chairman. As I indicated, I think it's probably more appropriate that we're going to have what I'm sure will be a great debate on that particular subject at a later date. There is no doubt there are pros and cons to the argument of whether the regional chairman, first of all, is as powerful as some would believe. I personally don't think so.

There is also the difference of opinion as to how you're going to elect a chairman. There are, I suppose, three ways of doing it. One is to elect a chairman-at-large, which I think is unwieldy and expensive and therefore would narrow greatly the number of potential candidates.

The second is to go the route of the county council format where a person is elected as the chairman of the council and retains his or her local seat. I think that in most regions the regional chairman probably has more responsibilities than the wardens generally used to before restructuring took place. The third is to elect somebody from within the council and to fill the vacated seat by a by-election.

I suppose that in theory the third option is the most practical of the three methods. But I really think, having been an elected person in that kind of situation, that if a person declared himself or herself in advance as a candidate for regional chairman it's quite conceivable that the local electorate would be turned off by the prospect of a possible by-election. Hence that person might lose the election just for giving advance notice of his or her intentions.

There are of course, two sides to the argument and I personally am looking forward with a degree of open-mindedness to the time when we will be debating that particular issue. All in all, I appreciate the support in principle of what has been put forth so far on Bill 81. We will require, of course, to go into the committee stage. We do have an amendment ourselves to section 63 that I understand both opposition parties are aware of. It's an oversight type of thing, a typographical omission in the actual printing of the bill. As it is not a substantive change it can be left for consideration at the appropriate time.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

DISTRICT MUNICIPALITY OF MUSKOKA AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Ashe, on behalf of Hon. Mr. McKeough, moved second reading of Bill 82, An Act to amend the District Municipality of Muskoka Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Any opening comments?

Mr. Ashe: No, Mr. Speaker. There's nothing new here. It's exactly the same as we've been discussing in a general sense in the five pieces of legislation.

Mr. Epp: I agree with the member for Durham West. We have been discussing a number of these factors and my party will be supporting this bill on principle.

Mr. Swart: We concur, too, in this bill. There is not a thing in it that hasn't been dealt with in the other bill. On the principle, I suppose I could use this opportunity to deal at great length—

Mr. Stong: Spare us.

Mr. Swart: —with the matter of whether the regional chairman should be appointed or elected.

Mr. Breugh: Go ahead.

Mr. Swart: I might just point out to this House that as long ago as 1966, in a report to the study commissioner in the Niagara region, I made strong representation that the regional chairman be elected; preferably from the whole region, but failing that, at least he must always hold some constituency from which he was elected within the region.

Mr. J. Reed: Do you know how much that would cost?

Mr. Swart: Everybody else has put this on record, so perhaps I should at this time. But we will not be asking for this bill to be referred to a committee of the whole House.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for third reading.

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading on motion:

Bill 82, An Act to amend the District Municipality of Muskoka Act.

Bill 90, An Act respecting the Ontario Student Housing Corporation.

The House recessed at 5:56 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

STANTON PIPES LIMITED

54. Mr. R. Mackenzie (Hamilton East): What action has the Ministry of Labour taken to see that a first aid station is available in the plant at Stanton Pipes in Hamilton? Did the ministry take any action as a result of the coroner's jury recommendations that there be a first aid facility available in the plant, following the death of the Stanton Pipes employee, Robert Folbigg, last June 21, 1977? Is the minister aware of another accident on May 6, 1978 in the same Stanton Pipes plant where the injured employee walked to the first aid station in the National Steel Car property only to find it closed and unattended. [Tabled May 16, 1978.]

Hon. B. Stephenson (Minister of Labour):

Regulations concerning first aid facilities in industry are made under the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Representatives of the Workmen's Compensation Board contacted Stanton Pipes Limited in July, 1977, to obtain details of the first aid facilities which they operate jointly with National Steel Car Limited which adjoins the Stanton Pipes plant. In November, 1977, the first aid facilities were inspected by the board's representatives, and the jointly operated facilities were found to be in accordance with the regulations. Discussions were held with management concerning the availability of trained first aid personnel on each shift in the plant, and the company advised the board that sufficient employees had been trained to provide first aid when necessary.

In view of the union's complaint of May 11, 1978, following the accident of May 6, 1978, the board's representatives will again inspect the plant's first aid facilities and will also meet with union representatives, to ensure that the first aid requirements at Stanton Pipe are fully satisfied at all times.

I shall provide further information to the honourable member as soon as I have received a further report from the Workmen's Compensation Board following the meeting between the company, the union and officials of the Workmen's Compensation Board.

INJURED WORKERS

55. Mr. O. di Santo (Downsview): How many injured workers have been assessed for permanent disability, year by year, from 1970 to 1978? How many of the injured workers so assessed were referred to psychiatrists and psychologists? How many of them have been granted disability for psychological and/or psychiatric reasons? [Tabled May 16, 1978.]

Hon. B. Stephenson (Minister of Labour):

1. The number of injured workers who have been assessed for permanent disability year by year since 1970 is as follows: 1978—4,007 (first quarter); 1977—13,372; 1976—13,160; 1975—10,629; 1974—11,070; 1973—13,529; 1972—11,774 (estimate, actual figures not available); 1971—11,774 (estimate, actual figures not available); 1970—10,724.

2. This type of statistic is not maintained since it is not utilized in treatment control mechanisms, nor as an aid to management. At the time of examination for permanent disability, all medical documentation is evaluated including any previous psychiatric consultations. There would be very few psychological examinations and testing carried out, since this is used less frequently than psychiatric consultation. An analysis of medical aid accounts relating to psychiatrists' fees for service for the period 1974 to 1977 was supplied in response to question 38, April 25, 1978. It should be noted that a large proportion of psychiatric consultations are requested and arranged by the treating family physician rather than by the board's physicians.

3. This type of statistic is not maintained as it is not used in the board's operations.

GREENING DONALD COMPANY LIMITED

59. Mr. R. Mackenzie (Hamilton East): Would the Minister of Labour please ascertain if any provincial funds were provided to retrain employees at the Greening Donald wire drawing plant in Hamilton? Were any provincial funds provided to train or retrain employees at the new Greening Donald Company Limited plant in Erin, Ontario? Were any development grants given to the new Greening Donald Company plant in Erin, Ontario? Were any employees, other than management, either transferred or given the option to transfer, to the new plant in Erin, with the closing of the old plant in Hamilton?

Hon. B. Stephenson (Minister of Labour): There were no provincial funds provided to either retrain employees at the Greening Donald wire drawing plant or to train or retrain employees at the new Greening Donald plant in Erin, Ontario. The Ministry of Industry and Tourism advises that there were no development grants given to the new Greening Donald plant in Erin. All employees of the closing Hamilton operation were given the option to transfer to the new facility in Erin.

Background Summary: Greening Donald Limited operated three plants in Hamilton, Ontario, manufacturing wire rope, slings, wire screen cloth, wire and other wire products. The company closed its wire mill operation in Hamilton due to land expropriation by the city, and relocated in Erin, Ontario. All employees at the closing Hamilton plant were offered jobs in Erin but, because of the 50-60 mile distance, only five employees (four staff/one hourly) accepted the transfer.

All but 14 of the 65 employees of the closing Hamilton plant have been absorbed into the two remaining Hamilton operations (excluding the five moving to Erin). These 14 employees have been terminated and are being assisted to find alternate work. Seven of the 14 are very senior employees who have received early retirement pension assistance.

When the Canada Manpower consultative service and, subsequently, the Ministry of Labour became involved, two Manpower adjustment committees were established. The first in December 1977, was set up to assist in developing Erin operations and to train the new work force. The second was established in January 1978 to assist those employees not moving to the new operations, but who would be absorbed into the remaining two plants in Hamilton. Although both of these Manpower committee agreements were signed by the Minister of Labour, there was no provincial funding involved since neither case was considered to be a termination adjustment situation. Both committees are funded on a 50-50 basis by Canada Manpower consultative service and the company.

The Ministry of Industry and Tourism advises that there is no indication of any provincial development grants; and, similarly, the Canada Manpower officer was not aware of any federal funding. The Erin plant is a brand new facility which will produce the same products as the former Hamilton plant. It is anticipated that the work force will reach 40, and the Erin Manpower committee is now in the process of training newly hired employees.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, MAY 30, 1978

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

MINISTRY OF CORRECTIONAL SERVICES ACT

Hon. Mr. Drea moved second reading of Bill 85, An Act to revise the Ministry of Correctional Services Act.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I want to serve notice that there will be some amendments to Bill 85. There will be amendments to sections 22, 38 and 42.

The amendment to section 22 is relatively minor. It serves to clarify the investigation aspect of the ministry's inspection branch as well as a formal inspection.

The amendment to section 38(3) is made necessary by the decision of the Supreme Court of Ontario in re Grenier. That case was decided following first reading of this bill. This proposed amendment deals with a calculation of the remainder of sentence to be served upon revocation of parole.

Finally, the third amendment to section 42(3) simplifies the appointment of the supervisor of probation services by not requiring that the minister make the appointment.

Mr. McClellan: On a point of privilege, if I may, could the minister repeat his last statement? I'm afraid I simply missed it and it was kind of important. Could he simply restate the last amendment that he indicated would be forthcoming?

Hon. Mr. Drea: The third amendment, section 42(3), simplifies the appointment of the supervisor of probation services—that is adult—by not requiring that the minister make the appointment. Actually the change is that instead of "the minister shall" it says "there shall." It's just housekeeping.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, we in the official opposition are generally in favour of this bill. It has, as the minister indicated in his statement, many housekeeping items, but it also centres the attention of the province on a number of positive aspects that have taken place and that we have dealt with in the estimates of the Ministry of Correctional Services.

Many of them are initiatives that have been taken by the present minister. I note that he has been wise enough and magnanimous enough to indicate that his staff has had a lot to do with this. The minister recognizes that being the controversial type of individual he is and the colourful type of individual he is much of the media coverage centres on his own personality. He has personalized his ministry to a certain extent and I think we indicated during the estimates that it was a good idea to dramatize many of the programs that are being put forward. He did give credit where it was due to his staff. We think that many of the initiatives that have been taken are positive and progressive.

I look at the fact that there will be authorization to enter into agreements with other jurisdictions in Canada for exchange of services and transfer of inmates which seems to be a very logical step. Even within the province itself—not necessarily with provinces—we recognize the benefit of having those who are convicted of particular crimes located as close as possible to their community in terms of being subject to visits from family and friends, and ultimately bringing them closer to the rehabilitation process that we look forward to. Certainly, extending this across the country in terms of the agreements that can be reached is a beneficial step.

We have in this Legislature—certainly in the federal Parliament there has been discussion in this field as well—talked about confidentiality. Provision being made for confidentiality in the personal records of inmates, parolees and probationers is, again, a positive step. A portion of the population in this country tends to believe that when a person enters a correctional institution or enters the care of the Correctional Services ministry, or in the case of the federal government the relevant ministry there, somehow all their rights are to be cast aside. When we don't have the kind of confidentiality that we're talking about in this case, it seems to me that the rehabilitative process is much more difficult.

When an individual finishes paying, as we say, for the crime through a sentence of some sort that is carried out, this person should have the opportunity to integrate back into the community without suffering from the kind of discrimination that has existed in the past and which to a certain extent will continue to exist. We feel this step will certainly diminish that.

I will have some questions a little later on about the third part in the explanatory notes which says: "The minister may designate employees of the ministry as police constables for specific purposes." Perhaps the minister could make a note of what is meant by the minister designating ministry employees as so-called police constables for specific purposes. The provincial bailiff now has the power of a constable when conveying an inmate from one institution to another. I am wondering what this may involve. I am sure the minister can elaborate on that.

Another positive aspect of the bill, again using the terminology of the notes, is that "the Lieutenant Governor in Council may pay compassionate allowances to inmates who are permanently disabled"—and I will have some further questions on that as to permanently disabled—"as a result of injuries sustained during authorized activities of the correctional institution and to other persons who suffer injury or damage caused by an inmate."

We have had this experience—not so much in the provincial system, but more so in the federal system, though we could see experiences in the provincial system — where there would be serious injury sometimes of a permanent nature to an individual involved when there is a riot situation or even when it is something less than a riot situation. There may be other circumstances when a person is engaged in an activity of a vocational type where an injury does take place and payment can be made. The minister might elaborate and be a little more specific on that. I may have misinterpreted his intent in this particular section.

The fifth portion that I look at in terms of the explanatory notes is the one which has received the most attention in this Legislature and in the media in recent months. That is the section in the bill providing for the designation, operation and management of community resource centres for the rehabilitation and supervision of inmates in a community setting. The critic for the New Democratic Party, members of the New Democratic Party and members of the Liberal Party who sat in on the justice committee deliberations during the estimates of the Ministry of Correctional Services last autumn indicated very strong support for the concept of the community resource centre.

I think we in this province and we in this country recognize that in Canada, and in Ontario as part of Canada, we incarcerate far more people than is ever necessary. If we compare ourselves to many of the examples which we see, in western Europe in particular, we find that many of the offences for which we jail people in this country are certainly not the type of offences for which people should be jailed, unless these people are deemed to be a danger to society as a whole or a danger to others within the society or there is a genuine reason to believe further crimes will be committed.

If the taxpayer likes to look at it in these terms, the community resource centre does serve to save money. If we compare the cost of incarceration in one of our provincial institutions to the cost of a person being stationed in a community resource centre, and many people like to look at it strictly in terms of the amount of money it is going to cost the taxpayer, we find the cost is substantially less under the care and custody of those who are not necessarily employees of the Ministry of Correctional Services.

We also find that not only does the public benefit in economic terms of the price of keeping people, but the public also benefits from the fact that the rehabilitative process is probably very much enhanced by locating people in community resource centres, particularly to avoid incarceration and by what I sometimes call education. They receive education of a negative kind, younger inmates particularly when they are placed in institutions with the veterans of the trade. We look very positively upon this move.

We know the difficulties that can be faced. The minister has indicated, though I have not had this confirmed, that there are certain municipalities where bylaws make things rather difficult in terms of establishing community resource centres. Integration into the community of people who have specific problems in other areas has always been difficult, but we see the ultimate benefits. All members of the Legislature should unite in saying that they see this as a positive move, that they don't see great dangers, since I know the minister is not proposing that we put people who are dangerous to society in a community resource centre but rather people who can function; and I presume there is a reasonable screening process to ensure this. Taking that into consideration, we have to be prepared to support the ministry in its efforts to integrate these people into the community through community resource centres.

I mentioned during the estimates of the Ministry of Correctional Services that we were obviously going to run into some problems with the odd person "breaking out" of a community resource centre or causing some problem for a community. But to throw out the entire program when we experience this type of activity would be wrong and it stands to reason that all members of the Legislature would support that statement.

I don't know how accurate this report is, but some have told me the community relief centre is more popular. This is the terminology that was used with me. A community relief centre is more popular with the civil servants within the Ministry of Correctional Services than the community resource centre. I was rather confused by this statement. The suggestion was that they would prefer people who had nearly reached the end of a sentence to be put in what I would call a halfway house. This was more popular with the civil servants in the ministry than community resource centres, which ultimately mean fewer people would be institutionalized in the province. The minister might comment on whether or not it's a significant remark.

Perhaps I might diverge a little from the bill itself and say I know the minister will be looking carefully at any designated work that might be done in the community by those housed within correctional services to ensure that they are not taking away jobs from others. We have to emphasize this constantly, particularly when we suffer from rather high unemployment in the province of Ontario.

The bill is in keeping also with changes made in federal legislation and it is sensible that we would make certain our bill is in keeping with federal legislation so we don't have one working at odds with the other.

I am interested in situations mentioned here where the minister is permitted to remove inmates from a correctional institution if the institution becomes insecure. Perhaps the minister would elaborate on what he defines as insecure. It looks rather straightforward but he may have a further elaboration on that.

The minister may direct that a psychiatric assessment be made of an inmate by a physician and the more psychiatric services are made available to inmates in our correctional services institutions, the better for that individual and for society as a whole.

The public is interested in the particular aspect of the bill deeming that an escape by an inmate while outside the correctional institution on a work project is to be the same as an escape from an institution itself. One of the concerns you will run into in a community which perhaps does not entirely understand what the minister is working towards, is that custody of the individuals might not be the same as it would be within the walls of an institution. They would want to be assured that if a person were to escape the less stringent custody that would be available at that time, that person would face the same penalty as if escaping from an institution. This may be negative to a certain extent, but certainly it would be reassuring to the community at large.

Rather interesting, and again I think we'll be dealing with this further on, is the fact that "an inmate may surrender the whole or part of his remission in order to prolong confinement in a correctional institution for medical, humanitarian or rehabilitative reasons that are acceptable to the superintendent." Having had the opportunity to spend considerable time visiting the Glendale Adult Training Centre, and looking at the program that was available there and is available to a certain extent in other institutions across the province, one can easily understand that some who are in midstream, so to speak, in terms of a vocation they might be involved in, in terms of some other form of education that is taking place, or in terms of some service that is being provided, would be rather reluctant to use the remission that would be available to leave early and, by leaving early, perhaps would not be in a position to integrate into the community in a meaningful way. To provide them with the opportunity to stay longer, should they wish, and not take advantage of the provisions for remission, I think is humanitarian in itself, although on the surface one might think the opposite to be the case.

There are some sensible things in here as well, common-sense and practical things. For instance, the bill allows for "the early release of an inmate whose day for release otherwise falls on a weekend or a holiday if the early release will be of benefit to the inmate." There are going to be people saying that somehow you're babying the inmates by doing that. It's a rather reasonable and practical step, involving, as I understand it, very little time anyway. It's something more practical than otherwise; for instance, in terms of transportation on a holiday weekend. It is something that does set someone back into the community in a more positive light than having a bad experience to begin with. Again, the community at large benefits as well as the former inmate herself or himself.

I'm sure we will be looking at further matters in this bill that are of importance. I will have some questions on the probation officers a little later on. I will be looking at why the minister feels that section 12 is necessary at all; it seems to repeat sections 2, 4 and 5 of the Proceedings Against the Crown Act. The minister might just mention justification for section 12.

I notice, too, that section 13 permits compensation to inmates for permanent disability arising from injuries sustained during the course of an authorized activity. Of course, what we'll want to know is what is defined as a permanent disability and an authorized activity, and why does the disability have to be permanent in order to be eligible for this compensation? What, if any, special compensation is available for a non-permanent injury? Is it the intention of the act to exclude non-permanent injuries suffered, for example, by an inmate who is attacked by another inmate or a guard? Lastly, does section 16(1) refer to both male and female offenders? It seems to me that the 1970 Act had a special section dealing with females. Perhaps the minister can tell us whether section 16(1) refers to both male and female offenders.

When we get into looking at the bill clause by clause, I will be interested in the powers of the probation officers. It seems to me, when the probation officer was under a different act, that he had the power to arrest and so on. Now, being appointed under the Public Service Act, perhaps there is a change here. Perhaps the minister will elaborate on that.

Mr. Speaker: The member for High Park-Swansea.

Mr. Conway: Shulman, is it?

Mr. Blundy: The voice of experience.

Mr. Ziembra: The Liberal support worries me, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Samis: Tell us about the hotels in Pembroke.

Mr. Ziembra: We see this bill as complementary to the federal bill, C-51, which deals with three things, basically: the province's taking over the provincial parole system, establishing community resource centres, and community service orders as a third sentencing option. We're going to support it with reservations.

The third option, in my opinion, is critical to this legislation because it is going to focus on alternative sentencing.

People who aren't enamoured of prisoners, people who would like to see bread and water and the lash brought back support the minister's policies as well as reform-minded people. It's amazing to me that he's managed to get support from both sides. He comes out with some very tough-sounding statements about no free rides and getting prisoners to work and contributing $10 million to the province's economy in free labour.

Mr. Conway: Pure socialism.

Mr. Foulds: Impure.

Mr. Ziembra: It's in my opinion far better than the present system of incarcerating people and having them sitting around in jail cells, and I am sure the prisoners are the first to agree with him. The Law Reform Commission states that 80 per cent of all prisoners in Canada are in prison for non-violent crimes and could safely be on the outside.

He's also changing the statement of purpose of his ministry, a statement of purpose which up to now talked about rehabilitation and treatment. I think the minister recognizes that imprisonment is simply warehousing and of very little human value. Also, I think the minister makes virtue out of necessity. I don't think the province can afford to build any more jails—it's darned expensive, $12 million a throw.

Hon. Mr. Drea: How much?

Mr. Ziembra: I think last year they spent $36 million on jails.

An hon. member: Whatever you say, Ed.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Forty million.

Mr. Ziembra: So it's very timely that we have legislation that suggests community resource centres, sending the offender back to the community that he came from and establishing community control over its offenders; and also as alternatives to imprisonment, restitution orders and service orders.

Mr. Bradley: And here I thought his motives were completely pure.

Mr. Ziembra: I think the minister is an unwilling landlord, considering some of the charges laid against some of his residents. I will just give three very quick examples. The headline of this little column is "Hard Boiled Crooks or Only Funsters?" It describes Alan Lee, 21, and Paul Harrison, 19, who were sentenced to 30 days in jail and nine months probation March 16 on a mischief charge after being convicted of throwing two eggs at an OPP constable's Bradford home.

Mr. Sterling: The member for Simcoe Centre (Mr. G. Taylor) brought that up.

Mr. Ziembra: That's a 30-day sentence that the minister had to look after. We have at about the same time another sentence here: "Stole Two Salamis and given 10 Days in Jail." This is in Hamilton. "A 39-year-old mother of two was led crying from provincial court after being sentenced to 10 days in jail for stealing two salamis valued at $15.70.

"Judge Robert Morrison sentenced Maria Pilarczyk to the jail term after she had pleaded guilty. Her lawyer said the woman stole the salami to feed her two teen-aged children and an unemployed husband. The court was told that the family's only income is $35 a week which Mrs. Pilarczyk receives as a cleaning woman and $100 a week her husband collects in unemployment insurance."

We have another case here; and this fellow wasn't too hard done-by. The heading is "Sudbury Contractor Fined for Conspiracy." The story goes: "Mr. Lebel, former chairman of the hospital board, was jailed for six months when he pleaded guilty last year to accepting $26,340 in secret benefits from Janin in return for promising to rig bids to build a hospital in 1971. During Mr. Lebel's trial there was evidence that he had promised to do Janin favours, but investigations did not prove whether he had done such favours." Well, he got six months for a $26,000-theft. That works out to about $1,000 a week; and here is a woman who did 10 days for stealing two salamis.

Mr. Sterling: How many salamis does that work out to, Ed?

Mr. Ziembra: I haven't figured that out, but it would be interesting. I don't know if Mr. Lebel is interested in exciting food.

Mr. M. Davidson: There is a difference; Lebel was never starving.

Mr. Conway: Ted Bounsall is.

Mr. Bounsall: Indeed.

Mr. Ziembra: I don't think this government can build jails fast enough. The one part that worries me is the work gangs, although I can see the value of that. In fact, if I were in jail I'd be the first to volunteer to go on a work gang just to get out of the place.

But what could happen is that it could in the long term be an incentive to municipalities that are under economic pressure to make use of convict labour to do work that they'd normally pay someone to do. When the minister talks about $10 million this year, he's talking about 1,000 jobs that aren't being done in the public or private sector.

I wouldn't want to see happen here in Ontario what we learned happened in Georgia during Governor Jimmy Carter's tenure, when convict labour depressed wages as well as provided slave labour for small communities and also groups.

Mr. Bradley: Didn't I hear the Georgia system was too soft?

Hon. Mr. Drea: It is.

Mr. Ziembra: I also worry about some of the jobs the minister has assigned his charges. Many of those jobs, I imagine, could have been done by students this summer. It's really distressing to read headlines in the Star that—

Mr. Sterling: You have to pay them though, Ed. Where are we going to get the money to pay them?

Mr. Ziembra: —the first pay cheque many students get is from welfare. In my opinion it would be wrong to go to jail to get a job but it seems to be one of the surefire ways of getting employment these days.

Also, one of the amendments speaks about earned remission. I'd like the minister to explain what earned remission is and if an offender could earn his way out of jail by really hustling and working extra hard.

I also would like the minister to table, on a regular basis with this Legislature, work projects that are either undertaken or projected, as he has done last week to keep us informed. I understand he's contacted a number of labour groups to check with them before he's undertaken major projects, which is the correct way to go about assigning these work orders. I think the constant monitoring of the work projects is in order.

I think that pretty well covers our thoughts on this legislation. Other than that, we'll be supporting this bill.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak to this bill on second reading?

Mr. Roy: I'd just like to make a few comments on the amendments to the Ministry of Correctional Services Act because I have a few concerns about this act.

I might say that the minister, who some of us here have known for a period of time, has by and large, apart from a few wild statements that he made back in Georgia and the occasional statement here and there, taken a somewhat—

[8:30]

Hon. Mr. Drea: Even Clayton Ruby likes me, which shocks me.

Mr. Samis: You must feel uncomfortable.

Mr. Roy: You should start to worry.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I do.

Mr. Conway: The question is, is the minister still going to elect the Supreme Court of Canada?

Mr. Roy: I won't hold against the minister some of the late-night statements that were exchanged here. If he will recall when he was sitting in the back row there and some of us were sitting in the back row here, we used to exchange a few pleasantries later on in the evening. I would say to the minister that by and large he has given the ministry a profile, or at least an image, of something that is active and positive. We're seeing some of it in this legislation.

Mr. Conway: The new Fred Cass.

Mr. Roy: It's no secret that the Ministry of Correctional Services used to be run something like the Ministry of Revenue where usually ministers made a stop on the way down and were not making stops on the way up. In that sense, this minister has seemed to take a realistic and objective interest in the ministry and is bringing forward certain programs which the community can fully accept.

If I have one criticism of the minister, it's that sometimes he personalizes things a bit too much with "my boys," "my penitentiary" and "my institution."

Hon. Mr. Drea: I've never used that word.

Mr. Roy: There are times when certainly that connotation has come across.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The member should correct himself. I have never used that word.

Mr. McClellan: Take him outside.

Mr. Roy: I don't want to get the minister overly excited, but I really think there have been such times—and that's normal; he's a sort of bravado type, he likes personal involvement it what he's doing. I suppose some of these things are so natural that we get that impression. But I must say, in comparison to some of his predecessors, certainly it's a fantastic improvement. I don't want to get personal about some of his predecessors, but I recall—

An hon. member: Some of them have well-paid jobs now.

Mr. Speaker: I must remind the honourable member that the legislation doesn't even mention the minister's name.

An hon. member: That was an oversight.

Mr. Foulds: It does mention "the minister" in the definition section.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, all this was sort of a preamble to my comments on the bill.

Mr. G. Taylor: Have you got more?

Mr. Roy: It's nice to see some of the members from the other side awake for a change. It's nice to see the member here and it's nice to see him awake.

Mr. G. Taylor: If you were around here more often you would keep us awake.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Who is getting personal now?

Mr. Makarchuk: You fellows better make your acquaintance; you should get acquainted.

Interjections.

Mr. Roy: My God, this place is alive. There was nothing personal there.

Hon. Mr. Norton: It's like the end of the week.

Mr. G. Taylor: We can take you once a week.

Mr. Roy: I'd like to ask the minister about one of my concerns, in view of the fact that he's embarking on some of these make-work programs of having the inmates do something useful for a change. I think that is something all members welcome, which our community out there certainly welcomes and which is actually going to be in the best interests of all of us, because one of the concerns about penitentiaries, reformatories or any institution which incarcerates is that very often the inmates inside are removed, are in a vacuum and are insulated from the real world. Sometimes there wasn't sufficient association with the crime, the reparation, community involvement and doing something positive. By being incarcerated in an institution, very often there was nothing positive happening there. That's why we welcome this initiative on the part of the ministry.

In getting involved in this new type of program, my concern is why would the minister require such sections as section 12 about the protection from personal liability. Possibly that existed; I haven't had a chance to look at the old statute as to whether that in fact existed in the legislation at that time.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It did.

Mr. Roy: I'm reviewing it here very quickly.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I told the member it did. It is just a change in wording.

Mr. Roy: It did. Possibly it is a change in wording; but I am confused, I must tell the minister very frankly, by the wording in the section. I'm talking about section 12 of the bill which says: "No action or proceeding in damages shall be instituted against the deputy minister." Then it goes on to say, "any alleged neglect or default in the execution in good faith of his duty or for any act of an inmate, parolee or probationer while under his custody and supervision." My concern is simply that it is not all that comforting to the community. One of the concerns in the community is that we have these work gangs, as the slang calls them, out there working in the community. Then they look at section 12 and they say, "Well, you know there seems to be some form of immunity built up towards the minister, towards the ministry, towards the deputy minister in relation to any acts done by the inmates, parolee, probationer or people of this nature."

My concern, Mr. Speaker, is that I wonder why that section is even necessary. It seems to me that in jurisprudence, by and large, people are not deemed to be negligent. They are not deemed to be responsible or liable for certain torts if they acted in a reasonable fashion. Why do we have to have it legislated in this fashion, especially when subsection 2 seems to be—

Hon. Mr. Drea: To make it easier to sue me rather than having to sue all kinds of intermediaries.

Mr. Roy: Especially in the light, Mr. Speaker, that subsection 1 says that "No action or other proceeding for damages shall be instituted against the deputy minister or any officer or employee of the ministry or anyone acting . . ." So what the minister seems to be suggesting from across the way is that we sue the minister.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Sue the crown.

Mr. Roy: Sue the crown, okay. Well, I think there is a way of clarifying subsection 1 and subsection 2, because you look at subsection 2 and it says the Proceedings Against the Crown Act does not relieve the crown of liability "in respect of a tort committed by a person mentioned in subsection 1 . . ."

Possibly the minister could explain to me what the meaning of all this is—why it is necessary that we have this what I call legalistic confusion in section 12 of the bill. Frankly, after looking at the legislation it appears to me that it is not that comforting to the community if we are saying to them, "Okay, these people will be working out there in the community, but on the other hand if any tort is committed there is certain restricted responsibility."

I accept the minister's explanation if he says that all that does is take away the responsibility from the officers and places it on the crown, but I am not sure that that is such a good idea. It is a good idea in the sense that the crown has more money than the individual officers if you are suing in tort, although with the deficit this government has I am not sure how long it will have enough money to pay off its judgements should it have any.

Hon. Mr. Drea: As long as we are able to pay legal aid cheques we'll have the money.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: If you cut off legal aid we'll be okay.

Mr. Roy: Legal aid? My God! If they all worked at the same rate as legal aid they wouldn't look so prosperous across the way there.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Two days a week is all you have to work to make a fortune.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Norton: You are treading on dangerous ground, Albert.

Mr. Roy: The Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck) is resplendent there in pink—well, not pink, that pale blue—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Will the honourable member please get back to Bill 85?

Mr. Foulds: He is not only off the topic, he is colour blind. He can't tell pink from blue.

Interjections.

Mr. Roy: I don't know what good it is in the sense that the officers, in view of this section, may be somewhat cavalier in their approach to this type of project. The minister certainly should keep that in mind.

Secondly, I say to the minister, that he should try and clarify section 12, subsections 1 and 2. I think there is a way of drafting this so we don't have to run to four statutes to find out who we are going to sue if something should happen.

I say this sincerely to the minister because I think it is somewhat confusing. I read section 12, subsections 1 and 2, a couple of times and it seems to me that it sort of takes away in one section and gives with the other.

Mr. Foulds: That's exactly what it's designed for.

Mr. Roy: I think there is a way of clarifying that confusion.

The other part is—and I want to be complimentary to the minister—there is an awful lot of discretion—

Mr. Warner: Oh, oh, you're in trouble now.

Mr. Samis: He's ready for it now, Albert.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Clayton Ruby and Albert Roy on the same day.

Mr. Makarchuk: Let's face it; you settle for what you can get, the hell with the rest.

Mr. Roy: What I have enjoyed about the minister is that when he discusses some of the programs, in fact some of the programs that are in this legislation—

Mr. Conway: Albert, why don't you come in on weekends?

Mr. Roy: For instance, last week when he was on Provincial Affairs—

Mr. Makarchuk: That was the week before.

Mr. Roy: —he was talking about community involvement. I didn't quite understand that one line when he said that, "we're having the inmates get involved in community affairs and have association with the community"; and then he puts them out there and they construct a 20-foot wall between them and the community. I didn't quite understand the—

Hon. Mr. Drea: You understand; you're the best in the business at saying you don't understand.

Mr. Roy: No, no; I didn't.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Oh, come on.

Mr. Roy: I smiled. You didn't see me, eh? I smiled on Provincial Affairs.

Hon. Mr. Drea: With some of the turkeys you defend we need a wall.

Mr. Roy: I want to say to the minister that we in the opposition, and of course in the community at large, are going to keep a very close eye on this because there's an awful lot of discretion given to the ministry in this legislation. I think my colleague, our critic, has mentioned this. If some other minister may appear more irresponsible, we may have certain reservations about all this discretion. Because this minister has exhibited in the past such concern and such enthusiasm about some of the programs, I suppose the attitude we must take here is that we'll have to learn from experience what he can do, what it is practical to do, and what in fact is in the best interests, not only of the inmates but of the community.

These are the few comments I have to make about this legislation.

(Applause.)

Mr. Conway: More. More.

Mr. Roy: I'm sure I can continue here. Isn't it surprising when you see the enthusiasm from these people to my left? They can listen for hours to boring speeches from their leader and just sit there mum, and a poor little opposition fellow gets up and says a few words and they're all enthusiastic.

Mr. Samis: A poor lawyer, Albert?

Mr. Makarchuk: We were suggesting you move to another forum.

Mr. Roy: I should worry if they're my fans.

Mr. Conway: If you're a good boy, they'll make you an enumerator in North York.

Mr. Ruston: Then they'll want 25 per cent of your salary.

Mr. Makarchuk: He might make as much in a day as in half an hour.

Mr. Roy: The approach that we have to take as members of this party is to view with a certain amount of concern all the discretion that is given in this legislation.

Mr. Samis: What's the prevailing scene in Ottawa East, Albert?

Mr. Roy: There are many sections in this bill that are extremely wide. When you look at the treatment of inmates and the control of inmates and the variety of programs that can be involved, I think it's exceedingly difficult to be more specific.

Mr. Makarchuk: Has he started all over again?

Mr. Roy: I think the approach that we're going to take is to view very closely, very objectively, how these programs are working; hopefully we'll learn from experience and amendments will not be necessary.

Mr. Foulds: Is there a tomorrow? Darn it, there is.

Mr. Roy: Having made these comments, these last comments— Isn't the minister going to respond?—Having made these comments—

Hon. Mr. McCague: You rest your case.

Mr. Roy: —we of course, as my colleague the critic has said, shall vote in favour of this legislation.

Mr. Bradley: Where did they have supper?

Mr. M. Davidson: First of all, I'd like to say that the statements made by the member for High Park-Swansea (Mr. Ziemba) more or less echo the feelings of the members of this caucus.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That doesn't happen very often.

Mr. M. Davidson: I would, in fact, like to congratulate the minister, if I may, for bringing forward what perhaps is one of the most progressive bills introduced by his government since I've had the opportunity to sit in this Legislature.

Mr. Bounsall: However.

[8:45]

Mr. M. Davidson: I find it rather unfortunate to think that the Liberal critic made such an eloquent presentation of his party's position and the latest speaker, the member for Ottawa East, found it necessary to stand up and belittle a bill that deals with human beings, and one which I take very seriously.

If he chose to practise his lawyer's technique, he perhaps should have done it in front of a mirror, and if he wanted to use his ability as a legislator and discuss a bill that in fact deals with human lives and human beings, he perhaps should have played that role.

An hon. member: Right on, right on.

Mr. M. Davidson: In fact he played the part of a court jester, I would suspect, to enliven what he considered to be a very dull legislative debate.

Mr. Roy: If we gave you a mirror you would fall asleep.

Mr. M. Davidson: Unfortunately, I did not find that very entertaining. I would just like to say this is the kind of legislation that should have been introduced into the Ministry of Correctional Services a good number of years ago. Perhaps one of the reasons it is being introduced now is because of the debate that took place in the estimates last fall in which the Liberal critic and myself, as critic of Correctional Services at that time, had the opportunity to express to the minister, our parties' views on the very issues that appear in this bill. Perhaps it is because we expressed our concern on some of the issues that we debated at that time that the minister is able to come out with the kind of bill that we have before us today.

I congratulate the minister and the minister for bringing forward this type of legislation.

I am sure the Liberal critic and I fully understand that there may be flaws in this legislation. No doubt there will be, because it is a progressive piece of legislation and the kinds of programs it is putting before us are the kinds of things that have never been attempted in this province before.

If all parties sit down and work together, we can iron out any difficulties that may come before us over the next period of years and see that the kind of programs and legislation we have before us will in fact become the model for the rest of Canada in how to deal with those incarcerated or sentenced before our courts.

I know the minister does not like to hear this said of him, but one of the things it does is bring some humanity into the system of corrections within the province of Ontario. Although the minister does not consider himself to be a humanitarian and simply feels he is doing what he considers to be the proper thing, there are those outside who look upon this as a humanitarian issue and who congratulate him for the effort he and his ministry have put into the development of this legislation.

In response to the member for Ottawa East, I don't know why he would reflect on the 20-foot wall, because I am quite certain he doesn't even know where it is.

I do know where it is. I know why it was built. I know the purpose for which it is there. I know who built it. I know all of the consultation that took place prior to that. It is dead-centre in the middle of my riding.

It is a rather sad situation when you try to divide the kind of a program before us here by talking about a 20-foot wall between the inmates and the community. It may surprise the member for Ottawa East to learn that the inmates who built that wall built it from the outside, not the inside. They were not divided from the community in their efforts to put up that wall.

One of the things that does concern me, however, and I have discussed this with the minister previously, is putting inmates to work outside correctional institutions doing various jobs. On several occasions in the past the minister has assured us that this would not in any way, shape or form take away from work that would normally be done by persons employed in that type of work; nor would it normally be done within communities where money was available to carry out that kind of work.

I would like to point out again to the minister the system that exists in the Guelph institution where you do have people who do go outside the institution, work in an organized factory and get paid the wages being paid through a negotiated agreement.

I would like to remind some of the other people in this Legislature who might not be aware that these people are paying a certain portion of their wages back to the institution as what one would normally call room and board, a portion of that money is being sent to help maintain their families and another portion is being kept in trust until such time as they are released and they have moneys available so that they can go out and search for work within the community without having to go on the welfare rolls and without having to seek alternative methods of providing for their families.

I would like to suggest to the minister that perhaps this is the kind of program that he should be looking to expand on, because I think it is proper and right that we should allow people to continue in their work area: We should allow people to get equal value for equal pay for the work which they are doing. I also feel that it is right that they should be paying back to society some of what they have taken away.

But here we have a situation where people who have committed some kind of injustice to society are incarcerated but they are allowed to work, they are paying room and board within a public institution, they are supporting or partially supporting their families and they are setting money aside for their return to society. I see nothing wrong with that. I would ask the minister to try to expand upon that form of program, because I think that in itself is far more beneficial than some of the other things we may get out of putting people to work outside.

Those are the few comments I have to make on the bill. Once again, I would like to congratulate the minister for this bill. As I say, we may find later on that we will have to make amendments to it, and I am quite sure that we can but, for God's sake, at least we have started in the direction of dealing with people in correctional institutions on a humanitarian basis, and it's about time this was started.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for Simcoe Centre.

Mr. Samis: Thirty seconds.

Mr. G. Taylor: Thirty seconds? On a bill such as this, my friend would allow us only 30 seconds to speak? My heavens, the NDP has changed its policy completely.

Mr. McClellan: As long as you are not opposed to the bill, you can talk.

Mr. Makarchuk: You can talk for ever as long as you are relevant.

Mr. Bradley: For all the speeches you've made, George, you should be a parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Eakins: Thank you very much for the fine speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. G. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As have other members in this Legislature this evening, may I give plaudits and accolades to the minister for bringing forth this piece of legislation.

Mr. Roy: It's a good night, eh, Frank?

Mr. Makarchuk: It's "Frank Drea for Premier" night.

Mr. Breaugh: You can have this and you can have that.

Mr. G. Taylor: We don't often get pieces of legislation brought forth after the event. The minister has been putting these programs into position, making them available to the public and making these individuals worthwhile citizens in the community they may re-enter. Here we have legislation after the fact, which may be a new and forthcoming revolutionary plan for this legislative process.

Mr. Makarchuk: How can you utter the words "revolutionary"?

Mr. G. Taylor: When we see some of the programs he has instituted and put forward, these people have assisted the community; particularly in my riding and more particularly in my home community of Barrie, they have assisted greatly in the programs of that municipality. They have been received well. The different service organizations in the community have got behind the minister's programs; they have had him up to speak. They have got involved in the group home aspect, and there will be one in the very near future in the community of Barrie to assist the Correctional Services program.

There has been extreme co-operation between the people in the community and the minister in this program. Without that co-operation and without seeing what has taken place as a very practical situation, they have put people in the community, they have worked in the community, they have done jobs that other individuals would not do in our community. Because of many other programs that are in effect, we can't get those people to do the jobs. These individuals, the inmates in these institutions, will do these programs and are pleased to do them; it gives them far more of a spirit of community and it has given them an opportunity they have not had before in their home upbringing, in their environment and in many other areas. They have had this opportunity made available to them to see what might be called good honest work is and the opportunity to work with some supervision, some of them with slight supervision. I think the program instituted by the minister will see greater rewards in the future.

When we look at some of the other features of this bill that have been put forward, we have learned that he has looked at his program, at his correctional institutions, and at what is needed in these institutions and has put together a piece of legislation that will put those programs into place. The eliminating of indeterminate sentences and statutory remissions, that has been a program that has been under heavy criticism by the bench, by the bar, by the public.

Mr. Bradley: And by the federal Tories.

Mr. G. Taylor: It is one where you see somebody sentenced and very quickly he is out. Maybe now the judge, without sitting there with a calculator to find out what he is really sentencing the individual to when sentences are necessary, will be able to see precisely what the individual is getting. There will be an earned remission of sentence rather than this "let's cut off a bit because the statute says so, and he gets 25 per cent whether he's good, bad or indifferent."

We now have a very precise and logical piece of legislation by the minister who has put a great deal of logic and common sense into penal institutions and a correctional program. He has brought this in, as well as another portion of the bill that comes forward with that logic and preciseness which this minister is able to put forward—

Mr. Bradley: He won't be able to buy a hat if you keep that up.

Mr. Foulds: The minister has many admirable qualities.

Mr. G. Taylor: Let's look at another one about the administrative separation of probation services into adult and youth services. Here again we have a situation where he has recognized the problems and he is segregating those problems; those individuals will now receive the attention that they need as individuals, as human beings, as persons who may need assistance. That is what he is offering forth to them.

I'm sure that he will come to the realization—he has it under explanatory note 14 where we have the probation officer who faces difficulty in following the court directions, and I've read over that section 42(2)—there may be some difficulty and before it gets raised as an amendment later on he might give some consideration there so that it will not become too much of an administrative procedure where the probation officer is back before the court at every opportunity.

Possibly there will not be too much of a break in that solicitor-client relationship—not that we always need it as lawyers—but we should make sure that break does not take place too frequently. Where the solicitor has put forward a position on behalf of the accused which has a great deal to do with the sentence of that accused, he should ensure that isn't changed too greatly by an administrative probationary officer.

Perhaps he would give that section some precise consideration before it gets to the committee stage so that he can make the amendments or possible suggestions for amendments so that it will not become a totally probation officer-inmate situation. For example, the repeated attendances before the judge, will that be in a chamber situation or will that be in open court where the sentence was originally given out? I'm sure those are considerations he will be giving to this bill as it passes through the legislative process of this House.

I bring to this the happy and good comments out of my own community as to the compassion and the work the minister has put into Correctional Services since he has taken over that ministership. I'm sure if his record is as good in the long run as it has been in the short run, we might not have as many people in those jails on repeat performances and the whole community will be better served by Correctional Services in the province.

Mr. Bradley: How can you be so reasonable and sit on that side?

[9:00]

Mr. McClellan: I'm pleased, too, to join in support of the bill. We have argued for a long time, on this side, across the social development policy field, that we need to move away from institutional incarceration and towards the kinds of alternatives that I think are contained within the legislation before us tonight.

I will say, without wanting to become sickening in a chorus of accolades which may well go to the minister's head, that he is the one minister in that cabinet who seems to understand the concept of moving away from institutional incarceration and coming to grips with it in terms of real programs. He is deserving of our applause for that and our encouragement and support, and he will have it, Mr. Speaker.

I think I can offer some advice to the minister. I hope it will be received in the spirit in which it is given and that spirit is a desire to see the program of rehabilitation through work in the community succeed. That hope is shared in all three parties in this House. The minister, if I may say, got off to a bit of a bad start when he talked about his program in terms of Georgia-style chain gangs. That was unfortunate. Perhaps the minister realizes it was unfortunate because it gave a bad impression; and even worse, it gave an inaccurate connotation to what the minister intends to do and seems in fact to be doing.

We have followed the progress of his experiment very closely, and as my colleague the member for Cambridge (Mr. M. Davidson) indicated, we are assured so far that he is proceeding with a good deal of sensitivity. But I want to stress the point that the member for Cambridge made that the rehabilitation program using work for inmates needs to be based on two principles. One he has clearly established and articulated, and begun to implement, and that is restitution through work; but the second of those principles, which is equally important, is that there be decent pay for work. The member for Cambridge indicated how we might structure a decent pay concept for work rehabilitation. It's an enormously important principle that needs to be enshrined in the program if the program is to succeed. If this program is to succeed, there must be not the slightest hint of exploited labour, not the slightest illusion of the traditional bogeyman of the convict slave labour gang or the chain gang or the cheap labour gang or anything like that.

I don't believe the minister intends that to be the model of his program at all, but it needs to be said and it needs to be acted upon by the ministry. There must be no undercutting of wages in the program; I believe if the principle of decent pay for work, even convict work, even inmate work, is developed along the lines my colleague from Cambridge suggested or along other lines which the ministry or others may be able to develop themselves, there will be no opposition from us. There will be no opposition from organized labour. There will be co-operation because the program poses no threat to the income security of working people. I have every confidence that this kind of a program can work because it works very well in European jurisdictions. We have always viewed with a certain amount of amazed bewilderment how it is that some of the Scandinavian countries are able to operate their societies with a fraction of the institutional incarceration we seem to require in this country. I guess we can say we're starting to move away from that and that this legislation and the program of the ministry are a very good start.

I hope the minister will respond to the suggestion made by my colleague from Cambridge and give us some indication of his own thoughts on the issue of a decent remuneration for work.

Hon. Mr. Drea: A number of speakers have alluded to something, but I think I should set it out very clearly. The prime function of this bill is not only to begin but to implement selective deinstitutionalization of incarceration institutions in the province. That is a fancy way of saying that we want jail—and by jail I mean the local jail as well as the detention centre and the correctional centre or any definition you want—to return to its prime purpose. Its prime purpose is to house only the dangerous.

It is not to be a place of rehabilitation, it's not to be a place of reform, it's not to be a place of punishment; very bluntly and very simply, jail is to protect you, and by that I mean society, from people who are either dangerous to citizens on the streets or dangerous to themselves. Somewhere along the way the spinoffs, which are reform or rehabilitation or certain attempts at motivation, have been so intimately connected with the institution that jail has become quite totally, up until now, the alpha and the omega of any attempt to correct.

Jail is probably the worst place to try to correct or to motivate anybody. That is why throughout the four parts, and the regulatory part, which is part V of this bill, we are going to great lengths to clarify and to limit ministerial discretion.

We have had CRCs for a good number of years. It was at ministerial discretion as to what type of contract would be signed with the private social agency, what the program would be and so on. It was all within the confines of ministerial discretion. Since I had previously, or will have up until the passage of this bill, certain rights to introduce programs which would be beneficial to inmates, we took advantage of that very wide and that very broad scope to begin the funding of community resource centres. Now, as members will notice, we have stated things very specifically, or as specifically as we really can state, because we are in the process of changing the scope of the CRC enormously. A year from now or 18 months from now we will regard as very primitive the type of CRC we have now. I'm talking about the structure of it and the scope of what it's trying to do.

Throughout this in every area, not just the CRCs but in the outside work, we've specifically put it into the act to avoid something I don't like, which is a great deal of ministerial discretion. There's no question that under a ministry act today in a complex field, not only for me in this but for my colleagues in cabinet, ministers have to have an amount of discretion. Otherwise they cannot function on a day-to-day basis.

In this ministry there is a total onus upon the minister for total human behaviour far beyond the dimensions of any other ministry. We literally tell people what time to get up, what they're going to eat, what they're going to wear, what they're going to do and how they're going to talk. We do that for a prolonged period of time in two directions. We literally run a glorified boarding house for the court when the person is a remand inmate, which is a very difficult period because he's in there on a warrant from the court and we can't even let them out the front door for any reason without going back to court. Secondly, there is the sentenced inmate.

When you have that type of onus for the totality of human behaviour, then I don't think there should be any more ministerial discretion or any more discretion of the minister than is necessary to provide the ability to cope on a day-to-day basis; to be flexible in approach to the variables of the human condition, and also to the variations of regional geography, regional attitudes and to the variety of languages in many parts of the province. I think that we have done this.

Specifically, I would like to give great credit to the federal government, because without Bill C-51 in the House of Commons, without the enabling legislation there, we would not have been able to bring forward many of the concepts expressed in this bill, not the least of which is earned remission. As the honourable members know, in this ministry I have to operate within the framework of federal legislation almost as a municipality operates within the framework of provincial legislation. I do not have to go as far as the federal legislation allows, but I can go no further.

On July 1 there will be simultaneous proclamation across 10 provinces and by the federal government of the system of earned remission throughout Canada. That was made possible, as was the exchange, by Bill C-51. There's no question that from time to time, because federal institutions don't have the flexibility that we do to move people around, we have boarded federal prisoners. By and large, that was because they were waiting as crown witnesses in certain events elsewhere. This legislation will provide for an orderly exchange.

Quite frankly, it's not going to be much of an exchange, because the inmates are all coming one way. They're coming out of the federal system into ours because they have no room to take any of ours. The federal penal institutions are tremendously overcrowded and under very substantial pressure, particularly in the medium-security area in this province, as well as for females. While the House of Commons has authorized an exchange, really what they are authorizing is the movement of federal prisoners back into provincial institutions on a fee-for-service basis. It's almost identical to the concept that we have of putting the provincial inmate into a CRC on a fee-for-service basis.

I may say there has been some concern about compassionate payments, but let me clarify this. Anybody—inmate or officer—who is injured in the course of criminal activity, that is, by riot, assault, what have you, comes before the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board. The compassionate allowances that we are talking about are purely within the area of the concept of workmen's compensation—a small "w" and a small "c."

As a matter of fact, when an inmate is injured, whether it's at recreation or at authorized work—indeed it may very well be a combination of both where he is doing craft work or building something—provided he is acting legally and is injured, the Workmen's Compensation Board does the paperwork for us, they assess the injury. Remember, of course, that in terms of partial disability, the inmate is not receiving wages.

The concern was raised, "If it's not permanent, why aren't you into it while it's only temporary?" Because in terms of a temporary disability, say a broken wrist, there are no wages to be paid as there would be out in the marketplace. There is no loss of income. It is only after that injury has ceased to be temporary, or the person has recovered, that there is an assessment by the Workmen's Compensation Board as to whatever loss the inmate has suffered. At that time they tell us what they would have paid in terms of pension or in terms of a lump sum because most of these injuries are relatively minor—I shouldn't say relatively minor; relatively on the low end of what a permanent pension would be for an industrial worker. They then suggest an amount that is comparable to what they would pay and we go to Management Board and get it on that basis.

[9:15]

I should point this out too, Mr. Speaker. In terms of our outside work people, one of the reasons we have to have a correctional officer or somebody else around is not for security purposes. It is the fact that the person while digging or while walking or while painting or while doing a lot of things may injure himself. We want a report on it so the injury is properly diagnosed, properly treated and we can go through just as we would do as an employer, except in this case we have total responsibility for sentenced inmates; we have to come to an arrangement on this so it is purely civil.

As a matter of fact, there have been correctional officers who have been compensated by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board for injuries sustained by assaults coming from inmates. It seems to me that there have been inmates who, if they haven't been compensated by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board for assaults upon themselves while under incarceration, the cases are still there and may yet be heard.

I would say that I have never heard the name "community relief centre." There is a comparable federal program, although it is in after care, the community residential centre. That is a halfway house; it is for people on parole. I think it is just coincidence that the two of us happened to pick the same initials.

I do want to emphasize that the community resource centre, the CRC, is not a halfway house. It is for sentenced inmates. It is a jail. In terms of discipline it is under the direct control and under the direct operating authority of the superintendent of the institution to which it is attached. It may be separated physically, but it is none the less attached. The privileges and the responsibilities that go with a halfway house for ex-offenders is simply not present in a CRC, regardless of how flexible our program is in there.

I frankly am very, very concerned about the attitude of the courts towards escape. We have had some disastrous results in the courts where they have taken the position that unless there are walls and wire—in other words, in a minimum security institution—even when they are around institutional property, where there are no tremendous obstacles to leaving, the courts consider it not an escape but consider it simply unlawfully at large, which is a very light offence. It is not a deterrent against escape. Certainly I agree that the public has to be reassured that there must be a deterrent.

These people may be minimum security inmates; there is no question about that. But, by the same token, there is an expense involved when one of them takes off. Nobody has taken off, but when one takes off it is a expense to the police. There is the question of another trial. There is a question of additional sentence and there is also the concern of some of the public that they just don't want inmates running down the street. Usually the people who say this are in the wrong direction, but in any event we want to have a deterrent in there.

I may very well come back to this because I want it to be made a provincial offence. I want it to be made a provincial offence to escape from the work gang or the road gang, anything outside of the institution, because I think the public wants that. They want some assurance that there is a proper deterrent against the ease with which one can walk away, reinforcing the public's attitude that this is a safe and a secure program. That is the basis upon which it operates. There are difficulties. No program I can devise, Mr. Speaker, unless it has the wholehearted support of the public is worth anything in coming to grips with the inmates' behaviour problems or the problems of selective deinstitutionalization that affect us at this time.

It is very interesting that in part IV, which deals with probation, we are doing two things. Quite frankly, I don't know why they haven't been done before, because, when probation was taken out of the Attorney General's ministry with the reorganization of government back in 1972, they forgot to change many of the clauses. The probation officer, unfortunately, remained an officer of the court. This made it extremely difficult for the probation officer to function in an independent ministry. He had been transferred out of being, in effect, an officer of the court; but notwithstanding the fact that he or she was in a ministry independent of the court, his authority still remained as an officer of the court.

Of course, all that is changed. He now becomes an agent of the ministry. I think this is very important. Up until now, the probation officer has been in a difficult area. On the one hand, the law said he was an officer of the court. On the other hand, because of his practical experience and the work he had to do, he had to be completely independent of the court.

I would point out to my friend the member for Simcoe Centre (Mr. G. Taylor) that the reason we want the right for the probation officer to go into court on a normal basis to vary a probation order is that, notwithstanding the fact that the probation orders come on the advice of or the plea of the solicitor, with the consent of the crown and with the thoughtfulness of the judiciary, the conditions occasionally are impossible.

If there has been a sudden change in a probationer's physical situation or in his economic situation or some other things, at the moment we have to prevail upon a kindly crown to let us go back into the court and have the crown ask the bench for the right to vary the order. What we want in this is that, when there is a change in circumstances or the conditions of probation are simply impossible to fulfil by the probationer, we can go into court, make an application and have it heard in chambers. Of course, this would be with the consent of the defence, and obviously would be brought to our attention by the particular probationer, because he or she would be the one who told us the order was impossible to comply with.

Rather than being an attempt to alter the sentence after sentencing had been done or to introduce a new type of appeal on sentence without going through the formalities of the court, this is an effort to have a viable probation system whereby, if circumstances change, the circumstances surrounding the actual reporting and so forth of the probationer can be changed legally and so as not to leave the probationer in the situation where his probation might very well be breached and he might face additional charges before the court.

I don't know where the concept of the community service order was brought into the debate on this bill because we have nothing under our act to deal with the community service order in lieu of incarceration. We only begin to exercise authority after the gavel comes down and the sentence is imposed. It is quite true that when the community service order is imposed, then through our probation services—it's always through probation services, because it is basically a probation order—we begin to operate.

I think it is noteworthy that the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry), under whose jurisdiction that is, is moving towards amendments that would make the community service order a third type of sentence, a real alternative that is not somehow linked together with probation. Certainly it would still have the probation deterrent in it against any default, but we would have an incarceration sentence; we would have a non-incarceration sentence, being probation under loose supervision in the community; and, finally, on an equal basis with the legislation that the Attorney General is seeking, on a straight third level, bringing it right up, not only as a valid sentence but also as an equal sentence with those two types of disposition, we would have the community service order. That is not within the ambit of our ministry. That is within the ambit of the provincial Attorney General and the federal Minister of Justice.

I am pleased that the question of parole was brought up, because, as you know, Mr. Speaker, on or about October 1 we will be assuming parole for all Ontario inmates. Once again, this is enabling legislation from the federal government and without it we would not have been able to go into this area.

The reason I mention this is there was a question from one of the members as to why certain things which were in the previous bill regarding females were not in there. It seemed to have been unisex.

That is because Bill C-51 will abolish the indeterminant sentence, which was applied to females particularly. We either assume parole or we don't, but the indeterminant sentence which was our only authority for parole, has gone with the passage of Bill C-51. That then, is in conformity with the federal legislation.

In regard to the questions about section 12; the function of section 12 is to clarify this business about who you go after if something happens to you as a result of any program by the ministry. We don't want to subject the correctional officer who is supervising outside the institution—or indeed the parks people or recreation people some communities use to take over control themselves—we don't want them subject to any doubt, we want a very clear-cut procedure whereby the litigant will use the proceedings against the crown act. What we want, clearly and simply, is that you sue the crown. You don't have to start the tortuous proceedings about who was the correctional officer on duty, who was the superintendent of the institution, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera. We want a clear cut route where, if there is an agreement between the ministry, that is the crown, and the person, that any loss or damage to the person will have rather quick service in the courts. Again, that is reflected by the fact that we are now outside the institution. When we were always inside the institution, this was a very rare problem.

I want to point out a couple of other things here. We now have 500 people going out daily to work gainfully through the temporary absence program we have had for some time.

They are working in competitive industries where the product is sold commercially. They are paid dollar for dollar, penny for penny, benefit for benefit the same as the people working beside them who are not inmates. They are in all kinds of plants and offices across this province and there is no question we want to expand it.

One of the difficulties in attracting new prison industries is the economy. But we have attracted prison industries such as the abattoir program at Guelph, which is under a union agreement. I am the only minister of the crown in this field in this country, and as far as I know in neighbouring jurisdictions in the United States, who has a union agreement. I have one with the Food and Allied Workers, and it has worked out well.

We will be expanding our mattress operation at Mimico, where we make the new style mattresses that replace the ones guaranteed to asphyxiate within a little more than two minutes if they catch fire. We have concluded an arrangements with the federal penitentiary service where we will be making mattresses for them and they will be making lockers for us. These will be cash transactions between the two of us. The inmates at the mattress operation in Mimico are paid dollar for dollar, cent for cent, fringe for fringe, what they would be on the outside.

In addition, we are now working in north-western Ontario because the Ministry of Natural Resources, even with the co-operation of Canada Manpower, even with the co-operation of social service departments and municipalities, even with the wholesale advertising of these jobs, cannot find people who will plant trees and work in reforestation projects this summer.

Last year we planted one million trees. We were paid for it. This year we will probably have to plant more. They will be paid dollar for dollar the wage that was advertised in the newspapers through Canada Manpower, et cetera. Once again, I suppose, it is stoop labour. Very few Canadians want to do it. We have convicts who will do it and who will do it well. This type of work will go to those who are on a sustained work program who have been working for nothing and have assumed their responsibilities.

With the farm labour program for the summer, once again they will be paid competitively because the product is sold and it would be very unfair for one farmer to have free labour and another farmer to have to pay.

They will pay the going rate, which will be supervised by the specialized people in Canada Manpower.

[9:30]

In terms of our overall work programs, I have said, I have put in writing, I have committed myself. I have met with the people from the Canadian Labour Congress; I have met with the president and secretary-treasurer of the Ontario Federation of Labour; I have met with virtually every union person that I know—and I know a great many. We have said that we will not continue any job, even where there is an area of doubt that someone could lose his job. If there is any possible chance the benefit of doubt goes to the workers.

It would be ludicrous to me that we would, in furthering ministry programs, take away a man's job or a woman's job when that man or woman have done nothing against the community, indeed have been assets. That is simply not fair, so we have taken the greatest precautions. I think the best precaution is that these programs are not operated out of the minister's office but they are operated autonomously out of each and every institution. The local group has to meet our local superintendent and knows full well the area problems and so forth and can make the decision.

I will tell you that we have rejected outright proposals that came to us, even with assurances that they were not going to take people's jobs or erode job opportunities. We told them it was our feeling that it was simply too close to the line and that we thought it should be done by paid labour. We have done that and we have done it very consistently.

I want to make one thing plain to the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy). In no way, shape or form, at any time, have I ever referred to an inmate with the very derogatory comment of "boy." That is what I objected to. I don't mind using the first person. I use that when we have programs where there is an element of risk. I don't expect the professionals in the ministry to have to assume risks that may jeopardize their careers because they have been ordered to by the minister, because we want to be innovative and imaginative.

But in no way, shape or form would I ever call an inmate "boy." And if I ever caught anybody in the ministry using that very derogatory term towards an inmate, he or she would be fired as quickly as were the people in the Don Jail when certain events were brought to light. That was the particular point that I was trying to make at that time.

Mr. Roy: The minister referred to "my inmates."

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes, but there is a big difference between "my inmates" and "my boys." "Boy" is a very, very—it has some connotations which are very significant.

Mr. Epp: I think you are overplaying it.

Hon. Mr. Drea: No, it was raised to me and I objected at the time; and the member went on cavalierly again. So I am just drawing the member's attention to it. If the member wants to make comments to me, he has a seat.

In conclusion, I would like to raise one final point—

Mr. Roy: You see that you go by the rules of the House.

Hon. Mr. Drea: There was the point that with the tort provisions under section 12 it might be an encouragement for officers to be cavalier. If an officer was cavalier and it resulted in damage; first of all, as the crown, we would be prepared to pay for the damage, but we have adequate internal discipline that would be a deterrent against the correctional officer being negligent in his job or allowing something to happen to somebody in the community because he did not take precautions and so forth. So I think quite frankly that is covered.

That ends the comments I want to make, except I would leave with the honourable members the fact that I want to take another look at that section regarding escape by people working on projects outside the institution. I think there has to be an additional deterrent so that there is no mistaking the fact that this is not being unlawfully at large, which is just AWOL, being a little late coming back from a pass. It is a deliberate escape even though there are no fences or no walls.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could rise on a point of privilege in relation to a comment made by the minister. I want him to correct the record on—

Mr. Speaker: A legitimate point of privilege is in order at any time.

Mr. Roy: Yes, that is what I am trying to raise.

Mr. McClellan: This would be the first time, Albert.

Mr. Roy: There was some reference made to the minister, when I was making my comments. I said that he personalized the institution and the inmates. I don't recall the exact words I may have used, but I may have referred to "my boys" or something. There certainly was no intention on my part to have any racist or derogatory connotation on it. I meant really that he'd referred to "my inmates," "my institution," and things of this nature; nothing racist or derogatory in any way.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, the member for Ottawa East had ulterior motives, but I just don't like leaving those things in Hansard, which is widely distributed. There is no misunderstanding, I just want to make it absolutely certain that term simply isn't used.

Mr. Foulds: Hansard is so widely read. Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole.

CHILDREN'S PROBATION ACT

Hon. Mr. Norton moved second reading of Bill 95, An Act to provide Probation Services to Young Offenders.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I would make some few brief remarks. I must say that following the preceding bill, I'm sure that mine will seem like a very humble little bill to be presenting to the House.

Mr. McClellan: It's too bad it's not as good.

Mr. Foulds: You're a humble minister in comparison.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Always.

Mr. McClellan: You could learn something from corrections.

Hon. Mr. Norton: In a very general sense, I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that this is, in a way, a companion to the preceding bill in so far as it is to provide for the continuation and continuity of probation services to juveniles in the province in view of the fact that the preceding bill provides for the repeal of the Probation Act under which these services have been provided up to the present time.

The bill is not a major departure from the provisions of its predecessor, the Probation Act, but there are a number of specifics in which it does vary, including the fact that we are not re-enacting certain sections of the act which have become a little anachronistic as a result of changing circumstances and changing provisions in the public service in the province of Ontario; and also in terms of the fact that the Probation Act applied, of course, to both adults and juveniles.

Perhaps I could touch very briefly on those areas where there is some departure from the previous legislation. In section 2(2), and in section 3, there is a provision which I suspect might be construed by some—they may not understand the full intent of it at this point—as an effort in some way—

Mr. McClellan: That's called contracting out.

Hon. Mr. Norton:—perhaps to reduce the civil service or to avoid the involvement of public employees on an ongoing basis in the provision of probation services. That, Mr. Speaker, is certainly one of the farthest things from our minds at this point.

Mr. McClellan: Abolish the thought, heaven forbid.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I would like to explain briefly what the principle is that is reflected in those sections. First of all, section 3 provides that agreements can be entered into with persons who may not be employees of the ministry for the provision of specific services. The occasions on which that is required are not a great number of cases, but it is important in a ministry that is providing services in communities from one border of this province to another that we have this degree of flexibility.

If I could I will give just a couple of examples of circumstances under which it is essential, I think, that this kind of flexibility be provided.

In some of the more remote communities of the province—and I think of situations such as perhaps on an Indian reservation in the northern part of Ontario which is removed from centres where we might have offices with probation officers readily available to provide supervision for young probationers—in order to service the community, or service the individuals in that community, it may be necessary for a probation officer to go in rather infrequently, perhaps on a monthly trip by air in order to reach the community. I believe it is to our advantage to have the flexibility if there is someone in that community who can, on an acting basis, provide ongoing supervision. This can be coupled with the designation that's provided for in subsection 2 of section 2, because the person would be designated by the nearest office of our probation service to provide supervision perhaps on a monthly basis in that case. But there would be someone on site who would have an ongoing relationship as a supervisor with the juvenile in question.

Failure to have that kind of flexibility would create a situation where we might very well have less than adequate supervision of juveniles in remote areas. I think that's not in the best interests of the young people of this province. Certainly if we wish to discharge our responsibilities in this ministry conscientiously it's important that we be able to have some flexibility there.

Another example of the kind of situation where special services have to be purchased from time to time would be a hypothetical situation—in fact I could perhaps give concrete situations very similar to this—where a juvenile who is under probation order from court might require, rather than merely supervision, some family counselling services which would involve more than the juvenile himself, perhaps his whole family. The caseload in any given community might not be such that it would be possible for us to provide that service to the family from permanent and regular staff.

Where the need is there and it's recognized, I think it's important that we have the flexibility in specific cases to purchase that service—for example, from a family counselling agency within the community—and perhaps, in some of those cases, to make a designation so that one of the persons who would be working with the juvenile and the family could also act as the supervisor of the probationer. If that flexibility is not provided, once again it would I think seriously limit our capacity to respond to the specific needs of the probationer. I hope that we don't ever fall into the situation where we are so rigidly restricted by the legislation that we cannot have that kind of flexibility to respond to the needs of the young people of this province.

The other sections of this act, Mr. Speaker, don't really vary in principle substantially from the others. As was true in the Ministry of Correctional Services Act, we have also included—for the same reasons as the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Drea) explained to the Legislature—the provision that the probation officer might apply for a variation of an order which has proved to be impractical or impossible to comply with. I don't think I need elaborate further on the reason for that; I think the Minister of Correctional Services did that quite adequately.

I guess the only other significant change from the previous legislation—

Mr. McClellan: You're very apologetic about this bill.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —is the description, if you wish, of the function of a probation officer. In that description we have attempted to emphasize the role of the probation officer as a helping professional who will provide guidance and advice, not only to a probationer but to the family of the probationer for the purpose of helping the probationer adjust to and benefit from participation in community life.

It's our hope that the role of the probation officer will be seen more in the context of a helping professional than perhaps in the more legalistic and court-oriented role that has often been perceived in the past. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that many of our probation officers and most of our probation officers are fulfilling their role in conformity with this description at the present time, but it's our desire to see that reflected in the change in the legislation as well.

I think those are all of the comments I have at this point. Perhaps I would have some further comments at the end.

[9:45]

Mr. Blundy: I'm pleased to speak on this bill, An Act to provide Probation Services to Young Offenders. In total, I agree with the bill and we will be supporting it, but there are several comments I would like to make.

First of all, I would like to touch on section 2(2). This particular subsection is giving some apprehension to some of those people who are now employed in the probation services under the Public Service Act. I believe the apprehension which they have suggested may very well have some foundation. Although the minister has made some comment on that particular section, I believe we ought to have greater elaboration from him in that respect.

I had made a note to question the minister regarding section 3 of the act. However, I believe that the suggested possibilities where an agreement may have to be made sounded very plausible and quite likely might be considered from time to time. I particularly agree with the suggestion made by the minister that perhaps some one of the social agencies within the municipality may be in a better position at times than even a probation officer in dealing with a youthful probationer and his family where there are certain circumstances. The explanation that was given by the minister in this case of section 3 does seem to answer the questions I had in mind in regard to section 3 of the act.

I am very pleased with the wording of the function of the probation officer. I think this is what I look for in a probation officer. As well as being what is ordinarily thought of as a probation officer, he has to be somewhat of a guidance counsellor and social service worker to be really effective. I'm quite taken with the description there of the functions of the probation officer.

However, I would like to mention at this time one thing with which I am concerned, that is, the current workload being experienced by many of the probation officers now involved, particularly with the youthful offender. I have been given to understand that the workload is such at times that they are not able to devote sufficient time, energy and direction to the probationer to ensure the success of the probationary period.

We have often seen here where programs are funded by the government and widely touted but often insufficiently funded. I've said in this House and I've said publicly that I don't want the government of Ontario to be spending more of our tax dollars, but there are areas where one cannot prevent that. I believe this is one of those cases because it is so important to the future life and the future living of some of these youthful offenders.

I have been told by a friend who is a probation officer that the workload he is experiencing is making it very very difficult for him to participate fully and to be truly successful in his probation services for the youthful offender. I would really like to try to impress upon the minister the need, the really true need, for sufficient funding for probationer services in Ontario.

There is the old adage that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure; I think this is one of the first lines of defence that can be worked very successfully in dealing with young people, provided we have the right type of person and that he has sufficient time to devote to what is often a very time-consuming and difficult problem.

I would like to impress upon the minister that need in Ontario and with these views that I've expressed, I feel the bill otherwise is quite in order. I have no reservations about it except for section 2(2). I am afraid there may be some misunderstanding about that section among some of our present full-time probationary staff, and I would like to have it more definitively explained for their purposes.

With those few remarks I would like to say that we in the official opposition will support Bill 95. I hope the minister will be able to give me some further reassurances on the one or two points I have raised.

Mr. McClellan: I'm almost apologetic, but I'm afraid we're not able to support this bill because we feel it really represents very bad law. I would prefer that the bill be withdrawn and brought back in a substantially amended form, a form which we could all support.

Let me try to set out my concerns about this bill. Firstly, the bill is made necessary because of the previous legislation, the act to revise the Ministry of Correctional Services Act, and because the two bills separate adult and juvenile probation services. The Minister of Community and Social Services could learn a lot, I think, from the Minister of Correctional Services, particularly with respect to the way one deals with labour when one is trying to bring about major organizational changes or major reforms in one's program.

The Minister of Community and Social Services, if I may say, is doing an exceptionally bad job in dealing with his employees as he makes the transition from one mode of delivery to another. He's doing as bad a job as the Minister of Correctional Services is doing a good job. This legislation before us, Bill 95, further exacerbates the difficulties that the minister is causing for his own employees through his insensitivity.

The original Probation Act, section 1(1) reads as follows: "Such probation officers as are considered necessary for the purposes of this act shall be appointed under the Public Service Act." That is the only route under the original Probation Act for the appointment of probation officers. I note with interest that the bill we just finished discussing, Bill 85, from the Minister of Correctional Services, repeats the wording of the original Probation Act as follows, and I'll read section 42(1) of Bill 85: "Such probation officers as are considered necessary for the purposes of this act shall be appointed under the Public Service Act."

The Minister of Correctional Services understands that that is the route to go through to appoint probation officers. What has the Minister of Community and Social Services done? He has re-enacted section 1(1) of the original Probation Act in section 2(1) of his bill. Then he has added his little section 2(2) which reads as follows: "The minister may designate any person, other than a person who is appointed a probation officer under subsection 1, as a probation officer for the purposes of this act."

In other words, the minister has taken to himself the power—and as far as I can understand it, it becomes a virtually unlimited power—to make his own appointments of probation officers. This has the effect of giving the minister quite an exceptional power to appoint probation officers who will not be eligible for civil service status by virtue of their appointment under section 2(2). It gives him virtually unlimited power to appoint probation officers on a contract basis.

I don't think that is something that members in both opposition parties would want to see us go back to. I guess there aren't any members here who have been in the House all that long.

Mr. M. Davidson: The member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt) knows what it is all about.

Mr. McClellan: I am talking about a long time ago, dating back to the days of Mr. Frost, who operated a one-man employment agency for his cronies. We have worked very hard, I would say collectively, in Ontario politics to move away from the notion of a public service appointed at the whim and discretion of the minister and beholden to the minister for their job security. We have worked very hard collectively over a long period of time to establish the principle of an independent civil service commission and an independent public service. That is a principle that is very important in this province.

We are not prepared to put into a bill—anybody's bill—a section like section 2(2) which gives the minister a wholly new set of powers to appoint, apart from the regular procedures, under the Public Service Act. I understand that under the Public Service Act appointments can be made both to the public service and to the civil service. I fully understand the distinction, but I also understand the kind of innate checks and balances that are built into the operations of the Public Service Act. It is not easy for a minister to exercise his powers to appoint to the public service in rivalry to the right of the commission to appoint to the civil service.

This bill breaks that relationship down entirely. I think it would be abused, to put it bluntly. I wasn't impressed by the minister's instances, I am afraid.

Hon. Mr. Norton: You never are.

Mr. McClellan: Rarely. Don't be so negative. Occasionally I am impressed. Someday I will tell him when.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Except with yourself.

Mr. Foulds: If the minister should last that long.

Mr. McClellan: I wasn't impressed with the instances given here tonight by the minister with the member for York East (Mr. Elgie) breathing down his neck.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I am healthier this week than last.

Mr. Warner: The cabinet room has a revolving door on it.

Mr. McClellan: The instances that the minister gave were the cases of isolated native communities. I have to say to the minister thanks but no thanks. The native communities are not entitled to the kind of second-class career status that contract probation services represent. If there are needs for probation services, let us provide probation services to isolated communities and to special need communities, but let us provide it on a position of equal status. These are not insubstantial concerns.

[10:00]

People, even in isolated areas, in remote areas and in special need communities, are entitled to be accorded eligibility into the helping professions, not on a contract, ad hoc appointment basis, but on a career basis—on the basis of stability, on the basis of full job protection, job security, civil service status and the opportunity to move through and upward in a professional career. I've had enough experience in my own career to be very leery of these kinds of proposals, the kinds of instances given by way of supporting the need for section 2(2).

Hon. Mr. Norton: What about the second example?

Mr. McClellan: I can't remember the second example.

Hon. Mr. Norton: The family service agency. You don't like family service agencies?

Mr. McClellan: Again, I'm very uneasy about the intentions of the ministry.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Just trust us. You distrust us?

Mr. McClellan: You may say that. You may well distrust, Mr. House Leader.

Mr. Foulds: Is that a flamboyantly dressed page walking along making a noise?

Mr. McClellan: Based on past experience.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I said "just trust us."

Mr. McClellan: You can't heckle from that seat.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. McClellan: The House leader is heckling from an illegal position.

The recent hiring freeze which the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) has reimposed—hiring freezes seem to strike particularly severely at the Ministry of Community and Social Services. I have no idea why that is.

Mr. Warner: Does Darcy hate you?

Mr. McClellan: The recent hiring freeze has, I suppose, made the use of contract positions more attractive to the minister.

Mr. Warner: Darcy doesn't like you.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Equity.

Mr. McClellan: I'm not interested in the kinds of games the minister has to play vis-à-vis the Treasurer to protect the integrity of his programs. Let him speak in cabinet for funding to provide adequate services and not try to run around through the back door through the use of contract positions.

Mr. Warner: Get tough with Darcy.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Too bad you can't eavesdrop. Wouldn't you love to?

Mr. Warner: Maybe we are.

Mr. McClellan: I am not reassured through the second example that the ministry gave with respect to contracting out. Perhaps the minister can elaborate more fully on that, but I have expressed numerous times in estimates and other debates concerns about the issue of limited responsibility and diffused accountability within the social service system. I don't see any particular advantage in extending the principle of limited responsibility or further diffusing lines of accountability at this point in time before structures which can establish a new kind of coherent accountability are in place.

We still have the same old shambles that we had before the minister launched us all into the brave new world of social service reform. This is only the second miserable little piece of legislation that's been forthcoming. All of the major legislation is still locked away in the infinite recesses of the minister's task forces, and God knows when they'll be emerging.

I'm not prepared to fool around with the measures like section 2(2) or section 3 until we have some sense that this ministry has a coherent notion of where it's going and we have some evidence that they have the capacity to initiate reforms—capacity which is reflected not in rhetoric or promises or five-year plans, activity that is not simply in the nature of green papers, white papers, task force reports which seem to extend into infinity—

Hon. Mr. Norton: It is especially confusing when you are colour-blind, isn't it?

Mr. McClellan: Indeed it is. The reality is that, unlike the Minister for Correctional Services, this minister has yet to produce anything.

Mr. Foulds: Even the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett) has produced more than this minister has.

Ms. Gigantes: Wonder of wonders!

Mr. Foulds: That took a lot of us by surprise, mind you.

Mr. McClellan: I certainly wouldn't be as cruel as that, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Foulds: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: I withdraw the remark.

Mr. McClellan: Thank you.

We are simply not prepared to support legislation that undermines the stability and the career status, which I think is very important, of probation workers in this province. We are not going to give the minister that power and we are going to oppose the bill on second reading. Should it pass, we will move amendments in committee to try to have the offending sections removed.

Mr. Makarchuk: If that doesn't succeed, we will remove the minister.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, my remarks at this point will be relatively brief. If I may, I will respond in the next few moments to some of the points raised by the honourable members opposite.

The member for Sarnia expressed concern about the principle that might be reflected in section 2(2). I would suggest that the two sections, section 2(2) and section 3, should be read together in that in the kinds of circumstances I obviously didn't explore exhaustively, but used as examples, where it is necessary to engage in the purchase of a service, whether from a family service agency in a community or to make special arrangements in remote areas where, in spite of what the member for Bellwoods said, if you have a community with one or two probationers, it does not necessarily make sense to have on site, on an ongoing basis, a full-time staff person. However, under the supervision of a full-time staff person, one might well have an individual with perhaps a fair degree of professional competence who is in the community doing another task and who would be willing also to assume responsibility as a probation officer in a limited number of cases.

The provisions of section 2(2) are intended, I suggest, to provide that in those situations where there is an agreement for service, the individual may be designated as a probation officer; so the provisions respecting probation officers under the Juvenile Delinquents Act, which is federal legislation, would apply; so the responsibilities and the protections afforded a probation officer in the discharge of his or her duties would apply; and so the controls and supervision that would be afforded to a probation officer would also apply.

In fact, if one views those two sections as companion pieces, I think one can see that section 2(2) is a necessary one if there are circumstances in which the purchase of services is necessary.

I really don't want to get into a discussion with the member for Bellwoods about the alleged labour problems. I would only point out that in the specific instances that I know of, alleged labour problems have not originated among the direct employees of the ministry but have, in at least a couple of cases that I am well aware of, resulted only after action by certain officials of the union apparently to thwart what are really quite publicly well-accepted policies of the ministry.

Mr. McClellan: This is precisely the kind of silliness I am talking about.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Some of the public statements that have been made have not really been very helpful. I have not engaged in that kind of communication nor do I intend to start debating on that basis—

Mr. Warner: What are you talking about?

Hon. Mr. Norton: —with the individuals who have been making those statements.

With respect to the concern of the member for Bellwoods that the provisions in this legislation are not the same as the provisions with respect to probation officers in the Ministry of Correctional Services Act, I suggest he bear in mind that we are not dealing with the same situation at all. We are dealing here with children in communities across this province where the degree of mobility that may exist with adults is not necessarily the case. These young people may well, in most cases, be remaining with their families—in some cases in very remote communities. All I am suggesting is that we really must have flexibility.

I am not really convinced that the member for Bellwoods is enthusiastically and personally behind the words or the arguments that he put forward in the House. Nor did I sense a great deal of sincere enthusiasm on the part of his caucus in response to his remarks. I can understand why he may see it as necessary to put forth that point of view. It is a legitimate one and I am not being critical of it. I think it is something that should be discussed when legislation like this is before the House, in order to elicit an explanation of why certain provisions are in the legislation. But I know the member for Bellwoods too well—

Mr. Grande: What are you saying, Keith?

Hon. Mr. Norton: —to believe that he really would feel there should not be flexibility in the capacity of my ministry to respond to the needs of the young people in this province.

Mr. McClellan: May I have a word on this?

Hon. Mr. Norton: The honourable member has had his word. Is this a point of personal privilege?

Mr. McClellan: A very brief point of personal privilege.

Mr. Speaker: What is the point of privilege?

Mr. McClellan: The point of privilege is that the minister is dead wrong when he says or suggests that I am not being sincere.

Mr. Speaker: That is not an infringement on your privileges at all.

Mr. McClellan: I have made the point, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Norton: If it makes the honourable member feel any better, Mr. Speaker, I would point out to him that I did not say he was not sincere. I said that I did not sense—and that is a personal, subjective—

Mr. Roy: You are entitled to that.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —I really did not. Very often I do sense a great deal of sincerity but somehow I did not sense that he was wholeheartedly behind the argument that he was putting forward tonight—

Mr. Foulds: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I draw your attention to rule 16 (a), clause 9. "The Speaker shall call to order a member who imputes false or unavowed motives to another member." I submit that is what the minister has done with the member for Bellwoods.

Mr. Ashe: He didn't call him—

Hon. Mr. Norton: I clearly did not, as I have said now twice. All I said was that I personally did not sense there was a degree of sincerity I normally identify.

Mr. McClellan: You obviously misunderstood what I said—

Mr. Foulds: That is imputation. Do you know the definition of "impute"?

Hon. Mr. Norton: The fact that my senses may respond in an unusual way to the member for Bellwoods—

Mr. Foulds: You are as muddled about this as —

Hon. Mr. Norton:—has nothing to do with his privileges, I can assure you. I know the member for Bellwoods not to be such—

Mr. Speaker: I submit that the point raised by the member for Port Arthur is not a point that is well taken. It was just an interruption. There is nothing out of order.

Mr. Foulds: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: There is nothing out of order.

Mr. Foulds: Could you tell me how you would interpret "unfounded motive"?

[10:15]

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. I said your point of order was not well taken. You can challenge that if you wish. The member for Kingston and the Islands.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly was not questioning the—

Mr. Lupusella: On a point of privilege, I don't think the minister is speaking to the principle of the bill. He is out of order in his remarks.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member may continue.

Hon. Mr. Norton: If I may continue to respond to the points that were made by the member for Bellwoods, I'm sure his mental set is not so rigid as to suggest that—

Mr. McClellan: You have the ability under the Community and Social Services Act to do whatever you want to do. You don't have to mess up your legislation here.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I may have a more favourable impression of the member for Bellwoods than he would like to think I have, but at the same time I would point out that I don't think he has such a rigid mental set that he would deny flexibility in responding to the needs of the children of this province.

Mr. McClellan: That is not what the bill does, and the minister knows it.

Hon. Mr. Norton: In fact, I think that under other circumstances he might well criticize my ministry, if the situation suited him, for lack of flexibility in many circumstances. Sometimes I would agree with him in terms of the way the ministry has been structured in the past.

Mr. Lupusella: You are out of order again.

Hon. Mr. Norton: But I implore him to support flexibility in meeting the needs of young people in the province of Ontario. I recognize the need that he has to put forward the argument he has put forward tonight, and I recognize the need that he has and his caucus have to go through the procedure of attempting to—

Mr. Foulds: You are attributing unfounded motives.

Hon. Mr. Norton: No, not at all. I am just recognizing that the members opposite have a right to go through the procedure of proposing amendments. But I do hope they will recognize that we must have flexibility in order to do the task that has been assigned us by this Legislature and with which we've been charged by the people of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Warner: You're making a mistake. You should withdraw the legislation.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I'm sure that given a little time to think about it, the honourable members opposite will realize the necessity for this—the fact that the lack of that kind of flexibility may well deny some children in the province the service we really do wish to provide and we have a responsibility to provide.

Mr. McClellan: You have the flexibility under section 4(2) of the Ministry of Community and Social Services Act and you know it.

Mr. Warner: Withdraw or resign, one or the other. Withdraw the bill or resign.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I respect the honourable members opposite for doing what they see they must do.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The honourable minister is becoming repetitious. He has said that three times.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I shall cease to be repetitious and, in fact, cease to speak.

Mr. Makarchuk: He is so flexible he doesn't even finish.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

CONDOMINIUM LEGISLATION

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Later today I will be introducing the Condominium Act, 1978. I wish to take this opportunity to outline some of the thinking that resulted in the new act in its proposed form.

The Condominium Act, as it currently stands, was originally enacted as an instrument to create a property interest in the ownership of space and to govern the conveyancing of these interests. It does not adequately deal with the many issues which have, over the past few years, caused great difficulty to purchasers and owners of condominium units.

The honourable members, Mr. Speaker, I think are familiar with the history of the development of this new legislation. Therefore I need not document the events leading up to today's statement except I should, of course, pause to acknowledge the contribution made by my friend Darwin Kealey and his excellent associates in developing the report of the condominium study group.

An hon. member: We appreciate what he is doing too.

Ms. Gigantes: He is my friend too.

Mr. McClellan: Where is Darwin Kealey?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would like to emphasize at this time, however, that my proposal to you today is, in part, the result of the co-operative efforts of the Ministries of Housing, Revenue, and TEIGA.

In drafting the Condominium Act, 1978, we examined the recommendations of the condominium study group and divided them into those legislative items which fall to this ministry and those which require further discussion and consideration because other jurisdictions are involved.

We have, of course, dealt with security deposits and construction deficiencies already, through the Ontario new home warranties program. In addition, the amendment to the Condominium Act passed in December 1977, giving arrears of common expenses payments priority over most other liens, has greatly decreased problems of condominium corporations in this area.

I should also pause to acknowledge the contribution made by the other members of the House in assisting the speedy passage of that legislation last fall.

Because consumer protection for current owners of condominiums is one of our priorities, we wanted to enact legislation immediately with the following goals:—

Mr. McClellan: It has been for a long time.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —to ensure more information for the buyer at the pre-purchase stage; to safeguard consumer moneys through the pre-title stage; to eliminate the costly burden of correcting construction deficiencies; to ensure top condominium management in order to enhance the efficiency of the dollars spent on management; —to remove some of the day-to-day irritations of condominium living by giving boards broader powers to formulate and enforce rules;

—to ensure that condominium corporations have adequate coverage to avoid any gaps;

—to upgrade financial administration by requiring audited statements and reserve funds, among other things;

—to create an environment wherein boards of directors may with greater flexibility manage the day-to-day affairs of condominium corporations, at the same time making them more accountable; and —to create a mechanism for resolution of disputes among owners and between owners and condominium corporations as an alternative to the court system.

These factors form the basis of my ministry's proposals; that is, a two-part package composed of a Condominium Act and a new administrative concept which I will discuss presently. The act has been amended with two main objectives in mind:

1. Providing more protection to consumers, and

2. Improving the processes by which condominium corporations and owners manage their affairs.

Purchaser protection has been provided by tighter standards of disclosure between sellers and purchasers; allowing time for purchasers to become informed of their responsibilities; and clarifying purchasers' rights during the interim occupancy period.

To improve the processes we have clarified the financial and operational responsibilities of the corporation; overhauled the processes by which corporations set bylaws, rules and regulations governing the operation of the condominium; defined the responsibilities of owners and rights of corporations with regard to arrears; created an alternative mechanism to settle disputes quickly; and obligated condominium corporations to obtain and maintain adequate insurance coverage on the entire property, notwithstanding the responsibility for repairs.

The Ministries of Housing and Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs, the municipalities and the building code branch of my ministry all have a role to play in the revisions to the front-end processes. We have had submissions about the efficacy of the process from virtually every sector. Because of the great divergence of opinion, the planning and approval stages require careful thought. It is essential that we move cautiously in these areas and explore fully the ramifications on municipalities.

Mr. McClellan: You can tell it is private members' day.

Mr. Makarchuk: What are you going to do for rent controls?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The members opposite have been complaining about the delays in condominiums; let them sit there and listen to what we propose to do.

Mr. Cassidy: People have died in the process of waiting for you.

Mr. Warner: You are taking time away from the private members' hour. You could have made the statement tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the members opposite are not interested in condominiums, perhaps others are.

We will be further reviewing processes by which condominium projects are approved and registered to reduce the time and costs of developments; municipal planning standards and provision of services to improve the amenity of condominium living and lower operating costs; and building codes as they apply to condominium construction as part of our continuing review of the building code.

The report also recommends that the private sector review and overhaul some of its practices to make them more responsive to condominium problems. To this end, officials of my ministry will be meeting over the next several months with mortgage lenders and condominium insurers to review their practices.

That brings us to the second part of my proposal, the administrative concept. While the resolution of the front-end and private sector practices will clear up many of the problems, it is clear that an ongoing organization is required to inform and educate the public about condominium matters; assist in the resolution of disputes between condominium corporations and unit owners and among unit owners; ensure that condominium corporations are fully cognizant of financial, operating management practices; and assist in the formulation and conduct of courses for property management.

To meet these needs, the ministry has considered the recommendation in the study group's report to establish an organization within the ministry, under the stewardship of a registrar of condominiums. However, we have opted for an alternative: establishing an organization external to the ministry, comprising the various participants in condominium developments.

We did so for the following reasons: This government is committed to less, rather than more, intervention and regulation of the marketplace. The powers of persuasion of those directly involved in condominiums will be more effective in dealing with the everyday difficulties faced by condominium owners than the direct intervention of a remote government organization. And many owners have already organized local groups and regional associations, and these organizations have proved efficient in dealing with difficulties.

To this end we propose to establish Condominium Ontario as a non-profit, provincially chartered corporation without share capital.

To accomplish this the ministry will provide an interest-free, startup loan, assist in the incorporation of Condominium Ontario, appoint a chairman and executive director and establish a group within the ministry to provide assistance during the startup period.

Ultimately the corporation will operate on the use-pay principle—

Mr. Breithaupt: Who do you have in mind?

Mr. Warner: I wonder if Darwin will get that one.

Mr. McClellan: Is it your make-work program?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —with every condominium owner paying a small annual assessment to finance the operation. The chairman will initially be appointed by the government. In addition, the composition of the board will be 50 per cent condominium owners chosen regionally and 50 per cent representation—

Mr. McClellan: Is this Darwin's summer job?

Hon. Mr. Crossman:—drawn from the private sector such as builders, developers, property managers, lenders, insurers.

Mr. Sargent: Are you going to sell any beer there?

Hon. Mr. Crossman:—the legal and accounting professions and government. The administration of the corporation, under the guidance of an executive director, will provide legal, financial, technical, and informational services.

In general terms, we have two principal objectives in mind; we want to enhance the lifestyle of present and future condominium owners, and we want to enhance the marketability of condominiums as a viable alternative to other forms of residential ownership.

By treating the new act as a form of consumer protection legislation, I think we can accomplish our first objective and I am confident the second will follow naturally.

I would hope for the co-operation of the honourable members of the House in assuring speedy passage of the Condominium Act, 1978, to ensure protection of the 100,000 condominium owners throughout the province.

URBAN TRANSPORTATION DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Hon. Mr. Snow: Recently there was discussion in this House regarding what was referred to as an audit of UTDC and to avoid any misunderstanding, I tabled the UTDC-ICTS project, phase three, interim audit for the period January 1, 1976, to March 31, 1977. That document made reference to the minutes of the post-audit review and I was requested by the leader of the official opposition to table those minutes. I agreed to do so and I am tabling them today.

In the question of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith), he mentioned a final audit. I should make it clear that the audit staff of my ministry does not carry out an audit of the books of UTDC per se, as it is a corporation and it has its own outside auditors.

My audit staff is only involved in the limited role of ensuring that invoices, which we receive under the loan agreement between TEIGA and UTDC with respect to phase three of the ICTS program, reflect only charges which are properly payable thereunder. If my staff are of the opinion that a charge is not proper, it is only a rejection of the item as chargeable under the financing agreement and not an indication that the expenditure by UTDC was in any way improper.

Since this subject was discussed in the House, the provincial auditor has pointed out that it is not customary for the working papers of an auditor, which these documents are, to be made public. In fact, the Audit Act, which was passed in December, specifically prohibits the laying of the provincial auditor's working papers before this assembly or any committee of the assembly. There are sound reasons for this as an auditor, like a lawyer, must feel completely free to make frank and often subjective comments to his clients. On reflection, I have concluded that I should not establish a practice of tabling such reports in the future as a matter of routine.

In his question, the Leader of the Opposition also referred to the monitoring role which my ministry plays under the financing agreement. I am today tabling copies of the ICTS agreements. The agreement between my ministry and UTDC requires that the information which is provided to my staff in their monitoring role is to be kept strictly confidential and I would be in breach of that agreement if I were to make it available. There are corresponding secrecy provisions in the contracts between UTDC and its sub-contractors.

UTDC is a business in a highly competitive industry engaged in the development of new products and concepts, the value of which would be in jeopardy if information made available to my ministry were made public.

[2:15]

ROAD ACCESS LEGISLATION

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Later today I will be pleased to introduce the Road Access Act for first reading. It is modelled on a private member's bill introduced last fall by my colleague, the hon. member for Parry Sound (Mr. Maeck), who sought to prevent the arbitrary closing of private roads, especially in cottage country where owners or tenants are totally dependent on these roads for access to their property.

At the time, the bill received the support of all three parties, whose spokesmen agreed that such arbitrary closures are a problem in many parts of the province. Copies of the original bill and the second reading debate are included in the compendium to this bill. For some time, the government has been studying a related problem, the arbitrary closing of roads which are maintained by a municipality, but which are not registered as municipal property on the titles of the owners whose lands they cross.

The private member's bill proposed what seemed to us to be a reasonable method of preventing the arbitrary closure of both types of roads, which are referred to in this bill as access roads and common roads. We know, for example, of a recent case in the township of Georgian Bay in Muskoka where a property owner challenged municipal ownership of a district road, despite the fact the road can be proved to have been in existence three years before the patent was issued for the land in 1913. Unfortunately, the road was not included in the patent, presumably because it was assumed in 1913 that no sane settler would want to close such a road.

Today's legislation will, therefore, prevent with certain exceptions any person from constructing or placing a barrier or other obstacle over an access or common road unless, one, the person has applied to a county or district court judge for an order granted an order closing the road and, two the person has given 90 days' notice of the application to all affected parties. I believe this new legislation not only will help prevent such road closings, but will also provide a method of arbitrating such disputes in the courts.

BUSINESS LICENSING

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I will be pleased also later today to introduce An Act to provide for the Licensing of Business by Municipalities. The purpose of this bill is fourfold: to give local municipalities a general power to license, to eliminate archaic provisions in the existing legislation, to provide for a hearing when a licence is refused or revoked; and to transfer the power of police commissions to pass licensing bylaws to elected councils.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that similar legislation was introduced in the last session of the Legislature. That bill, Bill 119, was allowed to die on the order paper because it was our intention to receive the views of as many municipalities and businesses as possible before proceeding to enactment. We now have had their reaction. I am happy to say that almost 100 municipalities replied and that, in general, the response was very favourable.

However, most municipalities objected to the fact that the legislation contained no provision for the collection of fees from businesses being licensed. There were three common arguments against the no-fee provision: that licences would not be taken seriously without a fee; that since some benefit accrues to the licence holder, he should pay at least part of the cost of administration, and that customers residing beyond the municipal boundaries who use the service would be paying no part of the cost of protection being provided by the licensing municipality.

We argued that if licensing is for the purpose of protecting the general public from unsafe and unfair business practices, the cost should be covered by general revenues. We also feel that the no-fee provision will encourage municipalities to deregulate and to license businesses only when it is in the interest of the general public to do so. However, this new bill does contain a provision for fees, a compromise that I hope will be satisfactory to all.

The new legislation provides for a maximum fee of $5, but if an inspection is required prior to the issuance of the licence, the municipality will be able to charge up to $25. Such nominal fees will ensure that municipalities do not simply use licensing as a means of raising revenues, nor will they represent a significant threat to existing municipal revenues. In fact, at this moment only about one tenth of one per cent of total local revenue is derived from licensing fees. It is our opinion the proposed fee limits will discourage unnecessary regulations.

The only other objection raised with any frequency was the elimination of county licensing. The Association of Counties and Regions of Ontario and the municipal liaison committee have objected to the fact that counties will no longer be able to license restaurants and auctioneers. Since only two out of 26 counties currently license restaurants and county regulation of auctioneers is very minimal, we have decided to hold to the original uniform proposal that local municipalities, and not counties, be given licensing responsibilities.

Other provisions in this bill are the repeal of the Bread Sales Act, the Public Halls Act, and section 19 of the Milk Act, which are no longer necessary. We also stipulate that a municipality cannot require an examination of tradesmen applying for a licence who have a certification under the Apprenticeship and Tradesmen's Qualification Act.

There is also a provision in the act that enables municipalities to delegate the hearing process to one or more hearing officers, one of whom must be a councillor. The decision as to whether a licence will or will not be issued will remain with council. And of course, as promised, this bill contains a sunset provision giving municipal licensing bylaws a lifetime of five years.

One thing I would like to clarify, because I think there has been a certain amount of misunderstanding in this regard, is that some provisions remain unchanged from the present. The legislation governing nude establishments is that which was enacted earlier this session as an amendment to the Municipal Act. Also, the provisions for licensing taxis are the same as those in the Municipal Act. The provisions for licensing circuses, transient traders, and trailers remain in the Municipal Act, unchanged except for the fact that police commissions will no longer have the power to pass bylaws for these purposes, because they are, in reality, taxation rather than licensing.

YOUTH EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The Ontario Youth Employment Program, now in its second year, has proved to be a most effective job-creating program for young people.

Mr. Laughren: You need a third hand to pat yourself on the back.

Mr. Foulds: That is about the only effective thing you've done.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: In 1977-78 this program created 21,500 private-sector jobs at a cost of about $10 million. This year the duration of the program has been expanded from 16 to 25 weeks and the subsidy increased from $1 per hour to $1.25.

In the 1978 budget it was estimated that 30,000 jobs would be created this year at a cost of $17.2 million. In fact, participation by employers has been stronger than anticipated. As of today, over 15,000 applications representing potentially more than 38,000 jobs have been received. Most of these have been approved and funds committed. In addition, thousands of application forms mailed out have not yet been returned.

If OYEP remained an open-ended program, I believe we may see an influx of another 11,000 requests, for a total of 26,000 employer participants, representing potentially 67,000 jobs across a broad spectrum of economic activity. For example, students will gain experience in the following areas: tourist consulting; farming; sales; clerical; computer programming; construction; drafting; truck driving; landscaping, and apprenticing to various trades. On a fully funded basis, the potential cost of OYEP for 1978-79 is almost $55 million.

Mr. Sargent: Point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Stong: This is what you call a filibuster.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: However, based on the experience of last year, there will be some slippage; that is, some jobs will not in fact materialize, will not be filled, or will be filled only for a short period of time.

Mr. Conway: Who's going to give the weather?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: In spite of this, we estimate that the cost of OYEP would reach $38.5 million if left open-ended, for a budget overrun of $23 million. The government cannot afford this large an increase in spending. We have carefully re-examined our priorities and reluctantly concluded that we must immediately place a lid on OYEP funding. Applications from employers post-marked after midnight today will not be processed. All requests for funds currently in the government's hands or mailed to us today will be scrutinized and, if approved, funds will be committed.

Mrs. Campbell: That's the way to get out of it.

Mr. Cassidy: It's a disgrace.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This news will be a disappointment to would-be employers and students alike. OYEP is opening up meaningful job opportunities, making a substantial dent in youth unemployment and re-directing some of our young people from the edge of the welfare precipice.

Mr. Warner: Why don't you read the phone book while you are at it?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It is providing on-the-job training and experience which is essential to the eventual gaining of permanent jobs. Nevertheless, priorities involve hard and difficult choices and all government programs are under continual performance review. Resources are not available within the current budget to finance a substantial cost overrun. As it is, the program will now cost around $20 million, or $4 million to $5 million over the budget.

Mrs. Campbell: Twenty-five minutes out of question time.

ORAL QUESTIONS

WASTE DISPOSAL

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Minister of the Environment. In the light of yesterday's announcement that the Maple landfill applications have been refused, will the minister tell this House whether he now has any policy whatsoever to deal with the Metro waste disposal problem and with waste disposal problems throughout the province?

I would specifically ask him to attend to the fact that he announced in this House that in his view 10 per cent of Metro's garbage was being recycled and then, by personal note to me, he thought that would be closer to 7.5 per cent. Does the minister not agree that in point of fact the correct figure is 0.76 per cent?

Hon. Mr. McCague: In regard to the 0.76, I won't agree or disagree with that.

Mr. Deans: Keep your options open.

Hon. Mr. McCague: At the time you mentioned 10 per cent, my information was that it was 7.5 per cent. But I will check that out again and if there's any difference in that I will let the member know.

I understand Metro is now working at some proposals from private enterprise to dispose of some of their waste. I don't have any announcements to make on that. I haven't had any announcements from Metro, but that is my understanding.

Mrs. Campbell: You have no concern anyway.

Mr. S. Smith: Would the minister confirm that in the year 1977 the total tonnage of recycling in Metro Toronto was approximately 15,000 tons out of a total load of almost two million tons? Those are the figures I have and would he be good enough to check those? Secondly, what is Metro planning to do, as far as the minister knows, and what leadership is the province giving in a situation—

Mrs. Campbell: None.

Mr. S. Smith:—where landfill sites seem to be its only way of thinking about these things? Even landfill sites are now very difficult to come by. Metro is fed up being sent around the province on a wild goose chase to try to send garbage here or there or somewhere else. What provincial policy exists to deal with the enormous problem of Metro's solid waste?

Mrs. Campbell: None.

Mr. Foulds: Try sending it to the moon.

Mr. Kerrio: They're looking for a big hole in the ground.

Hon. Mr. McCague: I will try to confirm the two figures the leader would like confirmed.

As I said earlier, Metro has some proposals before it, I think. We have a committee of three working with a committee of three from Metro on not only liquid industrial waste but on the whole problem of waste management. I'm convinced they'll come up with a solution.

I don't have any information the member doesn't have.

Mrs. Campbell: Metro will have to care.

Ms. Bryden: Since private enterprise doesn't seem to have been able to submit applications for landfill and waste disposal operations that are acceptable to the Environmental Assessment Board, could I ask the minister if he is reconsidering his position that the province should not get into this business?

Hon. Mr. McCague: No.

Mr. Gaunt: Since the waste disposal problems in this province are, obviously, very quickly coming to a head—a crisis, if you will—has the minister made a determination with respect to the resource recovery plant which was attached to the approval of the Maple landfill site? Has he determined whether that plant will be built, now that the Maple site has been turned down?

[2:30]

Hon. Mr. McCague: I'm not sure to which plant the honourable member is referring.

Mr. Gaunt: It's the plant that was going to be built if the second adjoining landfill site had been approved—the Crawford Industries plant.

Hon. Mr. McCague: No, Mr. Speaker, there has not been a determination made on that.

Mr. Gaunt: Supplementary: Will there be a determination made on it shortly?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Certainly we can make a determination. It may be yes or no.

Mr. Warner: Supplementary to the original question that was asked—there are really two parts to it: How is it that we have reached this point in time when the minister has less than a month to the final date with respect to the Beare Road site and we don't have a policy? There's no government policy with respect to waste disposal for Metro Toronto. How is it we reached that position and when would the minister expect that there should be a government policy regarding waste disposal for Metro Toronto and other large urban centres in this province?

Hon. Mr. McCague: I think Metro and all other large municipalities are quite capable of solving their own problems. It is not the intention of this government at this time to get into that.

HEAVY WATER PRODUCTION

Mr. S. Smith: In the absence of the Minister of Energy (Mr. Baetz) and of the Premier (Mr. Davis), I'd like to ask a question of the Treasurer if I might, both in his capacity as the minister responsible for finding the money for these things and also, I think, as a former Minister of Energy. Would he care to inform this House of what the government's original intention was when it proceeded with the building of the heavy water plant at the Bruce site? Was the heavy water there intended basically for the use of reactors that would be located in Ontario, in Canada outside of Ontario, or for export? Can the minister either recall that or does he have some way of telling us what government policy was when the plans were made to build those heavy water makers?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I assume the member is referring to the story which appeared in today's Globe and Mail—or yesterday's, whenever it was. I think perhaps it might be better if the Minister of Energy answered the question. He will be here, I believe, Monday and probably would give the Leader of the Opposition a full report.

My quick answer was that the four heavy water plants—one, of course, was cancelled—were necessary for Ontario's needs at that time. The experience in Nova Scotia had led us to believe that we would have to look after our own needs. Atomic Energy of Canada Limited felt that production of nuclear plants would go ahead more quickly in the rest of the country, and therefore again Ontario would be required to look after its own needs.

The other point that should be made is that—and I can't give the member the percentages—at both Bruce and Pickering the loss of heavy water, I think, has been much less than was ever anticipated. Therefore the replacement need of heavy water has been much less than was estimated. I've forgotten the exact figures, but I think it was estimated that there would be a 10 or 15 per cent loss or something, and the loss factor has been virtually nil.

But I shouldn't be answering all this. I'm sure the Minister of Energy will be glad to give the Leader of the Opposition a full reply.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: Since the original intention was that these heavy water plants serve the Ontario needs, and since these needs have contracted apparently, due in part, the minister says, to the success in keeping the heavy water that's there—the failure to lose it at the rate expected—but in part presumably for other reasons as well, would the minister undertake either to draw my attention to—if it's already been tabled—or to table the original prediction on which the original decision to go ahead with these very expensive enterprises was made? If we could have those original predictions, I am sure it would be of enormous assistance to us in judging just how far off those predictions are and the reasons for the predictions being off.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I am sure the Minister of Energy would be glad to supply those background papers.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: In view of the fact that the minister was Minister of Energy at the time, I believe, when some of these agreements were concluded, can he explain why Ontario Hydro and, through Hydro, the Ontario government entered into agreements related to the production of heavy water which prevented Ontario from having any access to export markets for heavy water and why there was also no provisions for a buy-back of any excess heavy water such as is contained in the contracts which the federal government concluded over the La Prade project in Quebec?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I am not sure that the suppositions of the member's questions are correct, and I would prefer to leave that question to the present Minister of Energy.

Mr. S. Smith: I would like to ask a final supplementary—for myself, that is; there may be others.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the final one on this subject.

Mr. S. Smith: The final one for me.

Mr. Cassidy: You were hornswoggled.

Mr. Kerrio: Just listen; you'll learn, Mike.

Mr. S. Smith: Could the Treasurer tell us when it first reached his ears as Treasurer that there might be a very serious problem of oversupply in the Ontario market, even from the three Bruce plants that we are speaking of, and can he tell us what decisions he has taken with regard to the news that he has had? Did he approach the federal government at that point to try to arrange a different deal or did he make a decision regarding the question of going ahead with Bruce D? When did he first find out about the oversupply problem and what did he do about it?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The responsibility would be that of the Minister of Energy and, I think correctly, it is not up to me to do anything about it.

To answer the question, I think I probably learned about it subsequent to the decision of the government of Canada and the government of Quebec to proceed with the La Prade heavy water plant, whenever that was—in February or March of this year, I believe. I had some discussion about that with ministers of the Quebec government, but not in a knowledgeable way or with respect to our concerns or related to our problems.

I think the answer to the Leader of the Opposition's question is that I learned about it in a vague way perhaps two or three months ago. Certainly, when the recommendation came forward from the Hydro board a month ago with respect to the various options which had been discussed here with respect to generating facilities, that question also was raised more formally at that time.

I apologize for answering at such length as I have, because these answers really should be coming from the Minister of Energy.

WATERLOO REGIONAL POLICE

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Solicitor General arising out of what has been happening in Kitchener and the charges that have been laid against the Kitchener-Waterloo Record's publisher, its news editor and a working reporter on that paper. In view of the implications for freedom of the press, is the minister concerned about the charges that the Kitchener police have laid against those three gentlemen on the Kitchener-Waterloo Record, and what action does the government intend to take about that particular case?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I am concerned, Mr. Speaker. The charges have not been laid as yet. My latest information as of about noon today was that the chief would be attending before the local justice of the peace there to determine what charges, if any, would be laid. I would assume that the local crown attorney, of course, would also be involved in the event that there are any charges laid against the three sources that the honourable member has mentioned.

As far as the restriction imposed by the chief is concerned, I have had an opportunity to speak to Chief Brown as well as the chairman of the local police commission, and that restriction will be lifted tomorrow.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: We understand in fact that the information has been laid but the charges have not yet been processed owing to the absence today of the justice of the peace. If the charges are proceeded with to that stage, will the government intervene to ensure that they are not prosecuted, since the actions of the police in closing their headquarters to Record reporters would indicate that the clear intention of these legal actions is to intimidate the Kitchener-Waterloo Record and to prevent it from carrying out its job of reporting fully and objectively on the work of the police and on the administration of justice in the Kitchener-Waterloo region?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Is the honourable member suggesting if charges are laid by the chief of police and those charges are processed and accepted by the JP that I should interfere?

Mr. Breithaupt: Following the questions that were asked last week, is the Solicitor

General now able to table the letter from the Waterloo Regional Police Commission which requested the general investigation at this time? More important, and the second part of my question, does the chief of a police force or a police commission have the authority to bar any or all news media persons, or indeed any member of the public, from the headquarters or from other premises of the police force? If there is that authority, precisely what is that authority?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I will table the letter referred to by the honourable member. I would expect to do that tomorrow. According to my information—and I asked for the precise information that the honourable member has requested of me of the law officers within my ministry—apparently, there is a legal right as far as the chief is concerned in restricting people attending within the police headquarters.

I understand the police building in that area is provided by the region. The region provides the police headquarters. There seems to be a legal right on the chief of police to refuse reporters access to the building. This is the legal information that has been handed to me. Whether or not it is wise or proper is another question entirely.

Mr. Breithaupt: Will the minister provide details of that authority?

Mr. Cassidy: The answer to the minister's question is yes.

I would like to ask this: Since the chief of police has indicated to the press that the charges would not have been laid if the pictures in question had not appeared in the Kitchener-Waterloo Record, would the minister, who has now intervened in order to get the police headquarters reopened to the press, also intervene to ensure that these charges are not proceeded with, in view of the fact that far from being frivolous, they are an attempt to interfere with the basic fundamental democratic freedom of the press to report, because they are a means of seeking to intimidate the Kitchener-Waterloo Record from reporting fully on what happens in the police headquarters?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: My information is that one of the charges being contemplated by the chief is the question of receiving stolen property. That type of charge is not in the same vein as the honourable member's question. It doesn't in itself involve freedom of the press.

Mr. Cassidy: He wouldn't have laid them, if they hadn't run the pictures.

Mr. Warner: The picture was returned.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It is not strictly the same type of charge. As to interfering with the charges, that is something I will discuss with the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) in the light of any decision that may be made by the local justice of the peace.

Mr. Roy: Supplementary: In response to the question of the leader of the NDP pertaining to consulting with the Attorney General, would the Solicitor General undertake to review the propriety in this case of two matters, as I see it, from the press reports? First of all, as raised by the leader of the NDP, is the fact that the chief of police suggested that the charge would be possession. Yet he did not seem as concerned about possession as publishing. That is one of the problems.

The second problem is that the chief apparently, according to the police report, seemed to suggest that if the photographs were returned, no charges would be laid. That leads one to the conclusion that there is some type of threat at that point to the local media and that in itself may be an offence under the Criminal Code.

[2:45]

Hon. Mr. Kerr: That is right. If there is any question regarding publishing as implied by the honourable member then, of course in my opinion, no charge should be laid.

Mr. Cassidy: There definitely is.

Ms. Gigantes: Don't be so vague.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: But if it is a question of possession, again I would say, that would be up to the local justice of the peace.

Mr. Foulds: Are you going to suspend Syd Brown?

SKILLED LABOUR SHORTAGE

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Minister of Colleges and Universities. I draw his attention to a number of warnings, including a speech by the incoming president of the Canadian Manufacturers Association, about impending shortages of skilled labour in industrial areas, as in Ontario.

Can the minister tell us whether his ministry has taken into account the identified shortages of skilled labour in our manufacturing sector, as well as patterns of unemployment in the province; and whether they are also taking into account the patterns of issuing of employment visas to foreign workers to come into Canada on a temporary basis in the designing of a new employer centred training program?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: To the first part of the question the answer is yes. I will be making a statement in the House on Tuesday of next week with reference to industrial training and changes we hope will benefit the system.

With regard to the second question, if I heard it correctly, I think it really is more appropriately addressed to the federal government than to ourselves. We are simply saying that it is not an area for us to make a decision on.

Mr. Renwick: Oh no, under the BNA Act there is split jurisdiction over immigration.

Mr. Wildman: It should give you an indication of what grades you should be training.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Is the minister aware that since the beginning of 1976 there have been 14,763 employment visas granted for workers to come into Ontario from other countries on a temporary basis and that those 14,763 workers have come here because of the lack of skilled labour in the province? Can the minister assure us that the pilot projects in the new program will train Ontario workers to fill those jobs?

Hon. B. Stephenson: What are you going to do, deport them?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We are aware of the statistics, a great number of statistics, on that particular subject. I don't think we can solve all of the problems. We are hoping to make a major step of some significance. But I would say, as a word of caution in that regard, any apprenticeship program would take some time for it to develop its full potential. I think all of us will recognize that.

We have some areas that we think we can improve immediately, but it is an ongoing program that will take some time to develop to its full.

Mr. McClellan: Another 35 years perhaps.

Mr. Warner: In the fullness of time.

Mr. Worton: Thirty-three years.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Can the minister explain why the number of these employment visas, which allow workers to come in on a temporary basis because of the shortage of people to fill the jobs in Ontario, has continued to be very high, and yet there has not been action by Ontario to make sure that those shortages are met from within our own manpower and womenpower in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I am still convinced that part of that question should be addressed to the federal government.

Mr. McClellan: You have jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Secondly, all of the figures that the member quotes do not relate to skilled trades training. Some of them are production jobs. Other areas of employment, yes, but not necessarily directly related, as he would indicate, to skills in an apprenticeship program.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Such as university teachers.

Mr. Foulds: Why are the visas granted?

Mr. Renwick: By way of a supplementary question, with reference to the second part of my leader's question and the minister's response with respect to the federal government; is the minister not aware that under the constitution there is a shared jurisdiction in matters related to immigration? If not, would he read a little Tory history and consult with the late George Drew about the airlift to Canada?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The latter part may be more difficult.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think it would be more than correct to say that in the area of trade training, and these policies that relate to the federal government, we have an excellent relationship.

Mr. McClellan: With George Drew?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: It is too bad that the member didn't have a better one in his youth, he would have been better trained.

Interjections.

D.E.S. LEVELS IN BEEF

Mr. Bradley: A question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food: Is the minister aware of tests which took place in a private laboratory in Toronto which revealed that in nine out of 10 beef livers tested, traces of diethylstilbestrol, known as DES were found in beef originating in both the United States and Canada; and that this synthetic hormone used to increase feed efficiency was present in 3.72 parts per million in one US sample, and 1.94 parts per million in one Canadian sample? If the minister is aware of this, does he intend to undertake an immediate investigation in conjunction with the federal Minister of Agriculture?

Hon. W. Newman: I'm not aware of that particular instance but I can tell the member that I do know the drug and know it very well. It's a growth hormone used for better gains on beef. Of course, it does come completely under the jurisdiction of the government of Canada, and we work with them very closely.

What does the member call the drug? The farmers call it stilbestrol, I believe. That's the common terminology.

Certainly, the health of animals branch in Ottawa works very closely with our veterinary services branch regarding any of these particular drugs that are approved or not approved. There's a whole list of allowable drugs that is cleared by the health of animals branch through the CDA people in Ottawa.

Mr. Bradley: Supplementary question: Since DES was banned in Canada as an agent for promoting growth in cattle, I believe in 1973, because of tests that showed that it is a cancer-causing agent in women; and since cattle raised in the United States are supposed to be certified as not having had DES introduced to their systems within 21 days of slaughter, does the minister not find it alarming that these test results on beef purchased in four stores in Toronto have shown such high levels of DES? Really, I think we have reached a very alarming state in this country.

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. Bradley: Surely the minister should be bringing this to the attention of the federal Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question has been asked.

Hon. W. Newman: As a matter of fact, I will be going to Ottawa on Monday. I will be glad to bring it up with the federal Minister of Agriculture, but I'm quite sure that his people are aware of it at this point in time. Certainly, if he wants to use that as a non-tariff barrier to protect our beef producers, that would suit me fine.

Mr. Kerrio: You can't assume that. Come on.

Mr. McClellan: What a nothing minister. A nothing minister.

Mr. MacDonald: When the minister ascertains the facts with regard to this, would he give information to the House dealing specifically with the fact that in Ontario, where presumably this is not being used at all, and there can't be any mix of cattle coming in from the United States, yet one finds levels of DES in meat purchased locally?

Hon. W. Newman: I would like to point out that there are two levels of jurisdiction as far as meat inspection is concerned. In order to make it very clear, our veterinary services branch inspects meat in the provincially licensed slaughterhouses across this province. We have, even with restraints, moved staff from other parts of the ministry so that we could put more inspectors on, to ensure that all animals that go through provincially-licensed slaughterhouses are inspected before and after kill by the appro-appropriate veterinary people under our jurisdiction. All other plants that kill and move beef on an interprovincial basis come under the jurisdiction of the government of Canada and their veterinary inspectors. I assume this is the meat we're talking about.

I'm quite prepared to look into it, and quite prepared to report back to the House in detail on it, because we do work very closely together.

Mr. Bradley: Supplementary again to the minister: Is it not true that this substance can legally be used in animals in the province for certain—I don't know if one would say medicinal purposes, but for purposes other than producing growth in the animals?

Hon. W. Newman: I'm not exactly sure, but I believe that is true, that it can be used for therapeutic purposes.

Mr. Riddell: I think the answer is no.

Mr. Lewis: Is the minister aware that DES is normally measured in microscopic parts per billion, and that in this case high levels of DES were found in parts per million, that is, 10,000 times higher than the normal measurement applied, and in cattle which was Canadian, not imported? Does he not think, therefore, that he can act with some sense of urgency on it, putting it to the federal people that this kind of thing has to be terminated immediately?

Ms. Gigantes: Is your wife eating beef?

Hon. W. Newman: As I said, if anything like that is reported to me at any time, I act on it immediately.

Mr. Foulds: As the minister did with finding out about discount practices?

Hon. W. Newman: Discounts too. We've had cases where we have acted and when we have found out anything we have contacted the appropriate federal people. Unfortunately, I haven't seen that article that was in the paper.

Mr. Lewis: It is a study.

Hon. W. Newman: I haven't seen it as yet. I've been busy with other matters, but I will certainly make sure I do, and I'm sure my people are aware of it right now and are following up on it.

Mr. McClellan: Has anyone in your ministry seen it?

Mr. Foulds: Don't they read anything?

CONDOMINIUM LEGISLATION

Mr. Philip: I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations concerning his statement in the House on amendments to the Condominium Act which will establish an organization known as Condominium Ontario.

Why has the minister not allocated a majority of positions on the board to condominium owners rather than 50 per cent? Has the minister not learned anything from his experience with the HUDAC home warranty plan in which developers and other vested interests manage to suppress the interests of the consumer?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes of course we have learned something from the experience with the HUDAC home warranty plan and that is that it is a very major success. It's treating consumers very well. It has worked better, I think, than the members of this assembly anticipated and I might say, outside of the petition that was filed here the other day, to all those members of the House who think that it isn't working well, it's mainly confined to the third party, and I haven't been flooded—indeed, I haven't even got a trickle of letters from members of the third party pointing out the specifics where the HUDAC new home warranty has not worked.

Mr. Breaugh: The minister got a trickle the other day.

Mr. M. Davidson: You should listen to some of the debates in the House, Larry.

Mr. McClellan: If the minister was in the House for debates he might find out.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In fact, it's one of the major successes of this government. The reasons that we opted for something called Condominium Ontario are well set out in the statement I made, and if the member feels that more than 50 per cent of the board should go to condominium unit owners then I should tell him that the basics of the scheme set out by me today have been discussed in quite some detail with representatives of all parties who are involved in condominium construction. So before they jump to try and get on the bandwagon on one side or the other, I should tell members that the condominium federation we've met with on, I think, three or four occasions, myself included, I think they'll find they are quite supportive of not only the concept but the distribution of places on that board.

Mr. Philip: A supplementary: Of course, the minister does know that he's had plenty of representations about HUDAC from this member, but unfortunately nothing seems to happen with it.

Mr. Speaker: Question?

Mr. Philip: Can the minister tell the House what he means by his statement that every condominium owner will pay a small assessment for the operation of Condominium Ontario? How much will each condominium owner be charged? Does the minister not feel that this is just one more form of taxation on condominium owners, who are already overtaxed in comparison to other forms of home owners?

Mr. Ashe: Let everybody else pay.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course, we can't say the member is not being consistent, because every time we have a problem out there he wants another big government bureaucracy paid for out of the consolidated revenue of the province.

Mr. Warner: Don't say that. Just try answering the question.

Mr. Laughren: Sid Handleman got through to the minister.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Frankly, we make no apologies for the fact that some of our major success programs are those which have been funded on a user-pay principle. One of them is, of course, the HUDAC new home warranty program—

Ms. Gigantes: It's another form of taxation.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—and we think it's worked so well that we can now extend it to this concept. I make no apologies for the fact that those who will be the major beneficiaries will, in one way or another—

Ms. Gigantes: Just another tax.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—pay for this new administrative process which is so badly needed by those very people.

With regard to the amount, it specifically will be left to Condominium Ontario, the private board—and as I have indicated, 50 per cent of the board will be comprised of condominium unit owners themselves—to determine what kind of fee will be necessary per unit per year in order to fund the operation.

In discussions with the federation, the figures we have been tossing around, in view of the fact there are some 100,000 units, is something in the area of anywhere from $5 to $10.

Mr. McClellan: For what?

Ms. Gigantes: Another million bucks on their backs.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That $5 to $10 per unit per year may well vary in the situation in which, for example, the Etobicoke Regional Condominium Association may want to provide a better or more extensive service in Etobicoke. So over and above what they may pay into Condominium Ontario per year, they may want to add a dollar or two—

[3:00]

Ms. Gigantes: Oh, more taxes.

Mr. Warner: Half a million a year.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—in order to have more accessible services to their own people. But in accordance with our philosophy we think those are decisions which should be made by the condominium unit owners themselves as to whether they want that additional service and coverage and not made by Queen's Park.

Mr. Breithaupt: Supplementary: With respect to the minister's statement that he wants to enact legislation immediately and that he hopes for speedy passage of the Condominium Act amendments, since this bill could not possibly receive second reading in the House before Tuesday, June 13, under the ordinary schedule, and since the House is expected to adjourn 10 days later for the summer—

Hon. Mr. Welch: Recess.

Mr. Breithaupt:—to recess, correct—is it the minister's intention to have this matter dealt with by any form of hearings or opportunity for further public input over the summer months and be dealt with when the House returns, in fact, at the committee stage, or just what are his intentions?

It would appear that while the press release calls for a much more positive and encouraging form than may be practical and may get wide publicity, in fact it may not be possible to deal with this legislation at any time in the next three weeks available to us.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I must say that I do hope to get the legislation passed before the House recesses.

Mr. Warner: You have got to be kidding. What happened to the public?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Obviously, if it runs into any disagreement or, indeed, lengthy discussion without disagreement—which I quite anticipate could happen; it is a rather lengthy act—I should add that it is not an amendment to the current act, it is an entirely new act and will replace the old Condominium Act.

Mr. Warner: You want to exclude the public.

Mr. Breithaupt: You are bogged down with the Securities Act.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is quite conceivable that that will happen. At the moment I am inclined to get the legislation in place and to give it a try to see if we can get it through in time.

Ms. Gigantes: When are you ready for your next amendments?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I should pause here to make a couple of points. First, the Kealey study group had extensive public hearings and received—I don't know the figure—I think 220-odd submissions.

Second, the report was distributed widely by us, including a copy to every municipality in the province. A copy was sent as well to each and every condominium—

Ms. Gigantes: At $2.50 a copy, another tax.

Mr. Warner: We have an act.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Why don't the members let me answer the question?—to each and every condominium association in the province.

Mr. Breagh: You don't usually do that. We have to write it for you.

Mr. McClellan: Read your statement again.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In the last few months, our consultative process has included extensive meetings with condominium federations as well as meeting with HUDAC, UDI and so on.

Mr. Breagh: And so on and so on.

Mr. McClellan: Et cetera, et cetera.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As a result of that process, I must say that I think there has been rather extensive and lengthy consultation. It is because of that process that we have decided we will move forward with the consumer protection portion, which, to a large extent, has received rather unanimous support from all those people I have mentioned and, indeed, rather extensive support from various quarters in this assembly with regard to the basic concept.

In other words, what I am saying is, I think the members will find, when everyone has had an opportunity to read the act, there are fairly straightforward, rather essential gut changes being made to the day-to-day operations. The more far-reaching ones in terms of the planning process, the more complex ones, are ones that are not included in this package.

Mr. Ziemba: What are you saying?

Ms. Gigantes: Is that an answer to that question?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So I would, in summation, urge the members of the assembly to read the act carefully and assess whether or not we really can get the legislation through next month. I don't think it is an impossible task—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been answered. A new question.

Mr. Brethaupt: Supplementary: The minister is bogged down with the Securities Act—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a bill that is going to be introduced later on this afternoon and there will be ample opportunity to discuss it.

Mr. Brethaupt: I hope so.

PIANO TECHNICIANS

Mr. Cunningham: I have a question for the Minister of Labour in her capacity as the minister responsible for the Ontario Human Rights Commission.

Is the minister aware, or have members of the public or members of the Ontario Guild of Piano Technicians been in contact with her or with her ministry with regard to the possibility of discrimination against people who are blind and involved in piano tuning?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have had a letter from one of the blind piano tuners bringing to my attention some information which was distributed by an association of piano tuners in which there appeared to be some statements which I think could be construed as discriminatory. They have been brought to the attention of the human rights commission.

Mr. Cunningham: May I ask, through a supplementary question, whether or not the minister will involve herself, in her capacity as Minister of Labour, in this rather invidious practice to see that it is discontinued?

Hon. B. Stephenson: The matter is certainly one of discrimination based upon a specific problem suffered by a certain group of people and it is one which I have asked the human rights commission to review and to report to me about, and I shall most certainly do what I can to resolve the problem.

Mr. Mackenzie: How many years will we hear that?

Mr. Lupusella: Another 35 years.

SPADINA EXPRESSWAY

Mr. Grande: My question is for the Minister of Transportation and Communications, who was here a few minutes ago and has now disappeared, and I don't know where.

In the absence of the minister, if he's not in the wings, may I ask the Premier the question? The question is in regard to the disposition of the properties on the Spadina right of way, south of Eglinton Avenue.

Given the fact that the province and Metropolitan Toronto are losing $700,000 per year in interest, maintenance and taxes on these properties and given the fact that the Cedarvale Metropolitan Properties Tenants' Association have carried out a survey which shows that 40 of those tenants are willing to buy these properties, has the Premier or the Minister of Transportation and Communications made a decision on the proposal of the Cedarvale Ratepayers and Residents' Association and the borough of York council which suggests to him that the expropriated homes should be placed on the open market, given the fact that there are 40 willing buyers?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will try to get a particular answer from the minister for the member. I am once again going by memory, but my recollection is that those properties were ultimately to be transferred to the Metro Housing Corporation, which would have the responsibility for their administration. I don't recall the question of whether or not those properties would become available for purchase being explored at the time; it may have been but I don't recall it. I will get further particular information for the member and perhaps have it here tomorrow morning.

Mr. McClellan: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: You can try.

Mr. McClellan: May I ask the Premier whether he would not agree that to transfer the properties to Metro, as is planned, offers no guarantee that at some future date—Metro is still, unlike the Premier, pro-expressway—the properties may be brought back into use for expressway purposes and that my colleague from Oakwood's suggestion is eminently sensible? Would he not agree?

Hon. Mr. Davis: With great respect, if the member for Oakwood was suggesting that if there are some pro-expressway enthusiasts selling those properties to individual owners would preclude then the possibility of Metropolitan Toronto again expropriating from those private owners, of course, the question is really quite irrelevant. I think what is relevant is who has control over the properties, the three-foot reserve—

Mr. McClellan: Whatever happened to that? Whatever happened to the three-foot reserve?

Hon. Mr. Davis:—not all of the land is covered by residential accommodation—

Mr. Warner: Whatever happened to the three-foot reserve?

Hon. Mr. Davis:—and the ownership of that particular land. So while I appreciate the constructive suggestion, rather than a question, being put by the member, I really don't see that as being an anti-expressway sort of legal solution that would not have complications that could be resolved if Metropolitan Toronto attempted to build the expressway in any event.

ENERGY CONSERVATION

Mr. J. Reed: In the absence of the Minister of Energy (Mr. Baetz), I shall once again call upon that repository of all knowledge, the Premier, to come into the breach. I wonder if he would be kind enough to find out—I realize he may not have this information at his fingertips—and report to the House—

Mr. Peterson: Ask it anyway.

Mr. J. Reed:—if in fact Ontario Hydro is planning within the next year to abandon its energy conservation program in view of the recent announcement that the director of energy conservation, Mr. Wright, is being transferred to northeastern Ontario and that no replacement for him has been announced?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will endeavour to get that information for the honourable member. But I would be surprised if Ontario Hydro were abandoning its approach to the conservation of electrical energy. Certainly there would be no rationale for them doing so. It may be that they can alter administrative structures in order to accomplish the same objectives.

Mr. S. Smith: According to your minister, conservation costs money.

Hon. Mr. Davis: There is no question that one has always to weigh the conservation ethic, or whatever terminology one may use. I know that all of us support it in some respects and don't when it suits us in others. That is not unusual. I would only say that I would be very surprised if Ontario Hydro were going to suggest to the electrical consumers of the province that they now start to use far more electricity than is necessary. I will find out, but I will be surprised if they have that in mind.

YOUTH EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Laughren: A question for the Minister of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs on his statement today on the progress report on the Ontario Youth Employment Program—although I don't know how guillotining a program can be called progress.

In view of the fact that the Ontario Youth Employment Program was the only real job-creation program in the budget and in view of the fact that the large number of applications for the program by employers is an indication of the need for such a program and the success of the program, why is the minister at this time transferring the obligation for young people who cannot get jobs to the municipalities? Why is he further increasing the financial problems at the municipal level? That's who will be picking up the tab for those people.

Interjection.

Mr. Laughren: Perhaps if the minister doesn't understand, I could clarify: On page three of his statement the Treasurer says, "OYEP is opening up meaningful job opportunities, making a substantial dent in youth unemployment, and redirecting some of our young people from the edge of the welfare precipice." Is he not saying, in effect, that the municipalities are going to be the ones who will pick up the tab, rather than the province through its Ontario Youth Employment Program?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: General welfare assistance, which is what the member is referring to, is a program shared by all three levels of government. I would say that the statement doesn't refer specifically to the dollars-and-cents aspect of general welfare assistance; it refers more to the problems coming from lack of employment. There is no attempt in bringing to an end, unfortunately, a program which is too successful; but at some point you have to say no.

Mr. Foulds: At some point you have to say yes, too.

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary: I don't understand—perhaps the minister can explain it—does he not think it is somewhat unfair to cut off the program tonight without giving some notice to those people who may have applications in the mill so that they could be considered on their merits? Could the minister not give them a week at least, after his announcement, to make sure all the paperwork that is being processed now could come to his ministry for approval?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes, for paperwork which is being processed now and that which is in the mail. But at some point you have to stop.

FARM LABOUR SUBSIDY

Mr. McKessock: I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food. In view of his announcement this week pertaining to the pilot youth employment program and in view of the present controversy over kickbacks and rebates, why does the minister get involved in such a controversy?

Mr. Foulds: Why isn't McGuigan asking this question?

Interjections.

Mr. McKessock: The announcement states that the farmer will have to pay a fee of $90 per day for five young people. At the end of the program farmers will be reimbursed $35 for each day they have used the service.

Hon. W. Newman: We developed this new program this year to help the farmers in this province. They are really like a flying squad of young people who will go out and help a farmer for a maximum of five days.

Mr. McKessock: That's right.

[3:15]

Hon. W. Newman: I hope the member read the whole release. They are to help where the farmers have got problems—seedling or harvesting or something else. They are sent out on an experimental basis in certain counties this year. We have a group of five who will go out and work for a farmer for a maximum of five days, if they get to know of a particular problem where somebody's sick or something has to be done. It's a whole new concept—it's what I call the flying squad—a group of young people who have been organized through our ministry to go out and help individual farmers.

Interjection.

Hon. W. Newman: Don't start talking about kickbacks over there. Their leader, for instance, takes a prompt payment discount with zero credit risk that doesn't give volume discount. Do the members realize that?

Interjections.

An hon. member: Take it easy, Bill.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Sweeney: You are stuttering Bill. Even you don't understand that.

Mr. Kerrio: There's a connection there somewhere.

Mr. McKessock: The members didn't miss anything. The question is, why does the farmer have to pay more than the $55 right at the start, because he's going to be reimbursed $35? Why charge him $90 and give him $35 back?

Hon. W. Newman: The whole purpose of the project is to make sure it works well. We are charging them so if there are problems, and there could be from time to time, we want that holdback in order to make sure the program works effectively.

Mr. Peterson: The Lord giveth and the government taketh away.

SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION

Ms. Gigantes: I have a question for the Minister of Education. Can the minister confirm that there's a proposal before cabinet from his ministry for the development in Ottawa of a French-language residential school for the learning disabled? Is the cabinet stalling on approval for the school?

Hon. Mr. Wells: The answer to the first question is yes. The answer to the second question is no.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary: If the cabinet is not stalling, why was the minister able to announce the development of a site in Milton as an English-language residential school when there's still no word from the government, aside from the minister's response now, on the French-language school?

Hon. Mr. Wells: This matter is still before cabinet and it will be announced in due course.

It saddens me to have to tell the House, because I think it infringes on the privileges of all of us in this House, that a confidential cabinet document on this matter is in the hands of one of the members of the press gallery. I presume that's where my friend is getting her information.

Mr. Cassidy: You sent it upstairs, eh?

Mr. Warner: The good old brown paper envelope.

Mr. Lewis: Why does it sadden you? It's a free press.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Because I think it is leading to the very kinds of misunderstandings—

Mr. Cassidy: Are you going to charge him with possessing a stolen document?

Mr. Lewis: It came unannounced.

Hon. Mr. Wells: No, I'm not going to, but I think it's an affront to each of the members. They could rightly say they each should have the document.

Mr. Lewis: We don't consider it an affront.

Hon. Mr. Wells: If the member doesn't I think he should.

Mr. Martel: I heard the minister sent it to him.

Mr. Lewis: That's what the word is, the minister sent it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order. We've taken the last minute and a half on irrelevant interjections that are out of order.

PIPEFITTERS' UNION

Mr. Sargent: A question to the Minister of Labour. Is the minister aware of the dictatorial hiring and lay-off practices, which in many cases favour Quebec workers, of the pipefitters' union carried out by union Local 527 of Kitchener, where non-union employees for years have had to pay monthly dues of $15 but have received no benefits from them and no receipts are issued by them? Will the minister have a look at this?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Yes. I am aware there are a certain number of qualified skilled tradesmen who are permit workers in the province of Ontario, although they are citizens of Ontario. I am also aware there are some workers from Quebec who happen to be members of the union, and as a result of the negotiated contract and the constitution of that union are permitted free access to those jobs within the province of Ontario. Yes, I will look into it, if you give me the specific number, which will, of course, be recorded in Hansard.

Mr. Sargent: Without getting into the Canadian bit on it, what steps can be taken to assure me or the House and to advise the Premier of what's going on to give our citizens the same protection as the province of Quebec gives their people in the job field?

Hon. B. Stephenson: As this House is aware, this is a matter which has been of some concern to the government and to other members of the House for some time. We have been having a series of meetings in order to try to resolve the difficulties. We were promised by Mr. Levesque that there would be a solution which would reflect equity and reciprocity. We're looking for that solution right at the moment.

I can tell the member there was a meeting yesterday of the officials of the Ministries of Labour of Ontario and Quebec in Montreal. I anticipated meeting Dr. Johnson on Monday of next week, but apparently, I will not be able to until Saturday of next week.

WILKINSON FOUNDRY FACING

Mr. Lupusella: I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. During the estimates of the Ministry of the Environment, I brought to the attention of the minister the issue of Wilkinson Foundry Facing and Supply Company Limited at 81 Florence Street, which is emitting disastrous coal dust in the surrounding residential area, causing health and environmental problems to the people in the immediate area.

On May 26, 1978, around 2 o'clock in the afternoon, the same company was responsible for yet another serious instance of pollution by an unknown polluting agent which is contained in this plastic bag. Will the minister report to this House the details of this particular emission of May 26, 1978, the sources of the problem and considering that the total residential area has been contaminated by an unknown element as shown in these photographs, will the minister analyse the chemical composition of it and report to the House?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Yes.

Mr. Lupusella: Supplementary: Considering that for too many years the residents have been pushed around from place to place seeking assistance and that no progress has been made to date and considering the health hazards involved, when will the minister undertake his responsibility by ensuring that this type of incident will not recur? Will he in this specific instance issue a court order against the company, forcing the company to close its operation until such time as the environmental regulations will be followed, for the sake of the workers and the people living in the community?

Hon. Mr. McCague: The industry mentioned by the honourable member is being monitored. I'm not personally aware of any health hazard. There is a nuisance to the people in the area.

Mr. Lupusella: There is. I will send the minister this sample.

Hon. Mr. McCague: I'll be glad to look into it further and investigate the matter which he brings to my attention.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary: How is it that when my colleague raised this with the minister carefully and at length in the estimates and he undertook to look into it, there is then another very serious dispersal of dust covering everything—gardens, homes and cars—to the depth that one can actually write on it, for instance, if it was on the side of the car? Why is not the ministry moving in on the industry with a rather more serious sense of urgency than was demonstrated in the estimates?

Hon. Mr. McCague: I don't think that there's any slackness on the part of my ministry. I'm not sure whether this occurrence that was mentioned as happening on May 26 was reported to my ministry or not. I will look into it and report back to the House.

Mr. Lupusella: That's a shame. The minister should resign about this particular issue. I spoke for half an hour about this particular problem.

Hon. Mr. McCague: For two and a half hours.

WATERLOO REGIONAL POLICE

Mr. Sweeney: I have a question for the Solicitor General to do with the investigation with respect to police brutality taking place in the Waterloo region. Can the minister explain why the Ontario Police Commission has broadened the scope of the investigation well beyond the original request? Can the minister explain why he refuses to meet with the regional chairman and the chairman of the police commission to discuss the scope of the investigation?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: To answer the last part first, I have never refused to meet with the chairman of the local police commission. Because of recent events I am on the phone with that gentleman probably two or three times a week. I have never refused to meet with him. I have discussed the terms of reference with the local chairman. They have been discussed with the Ontario Police Commission. There is some difference of opinion between the chairman of the Ontario Police Commission and the chairman of the local commission. However, I do not want to interfere in the decision of the OPC to broaden the terms of reference a little more than is desired by the local commission.

There are incidents that are related to the particular security force that is part of the regional police force that concerns the commission and involves more than just the Henchmen incident that took place and which was the reason for launching the inquiry in the first place.

In my opinion, the terms of reference are not too broad. They are wider than the local commission would like, but in my opinion I can't take issue, argue, or find any fault with the decision of the OPC.

PETITION

MINISTRY OFFICE CLOSURE

Mr. Laughren: I have a petition protesting the closing of the Natural Resources office in the community of Foleyet, and the transfer of Ministry of Natural Resources personnel from that community.

The closing and transfer of that office will be of serious detriment to the life of the community involving loss of jobs, declining tourism, and declining population. The undersigned citizens in Foleyet urge the government to put an immediate stop to that plan.

REPORT

STANDING PROCEDURAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Mr. Breaugh from the standing procedural affairs committee presented the committee's report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee has carefully examined the following applications for private acts and finds the notices, as published in each case, sufficient:

City of Hamilton;
City of Thunder Bay.

Motion agreed to.

LABOUR RELATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Ziemba moved first reading of Bill 107, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Foulds: Off the cuff, I'd say it might be skewered.

Mr. Ashe: You're probably right.

Mr. Ziemba: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this long overdue bill is to provide the minister with authority to settle the terms of a first collective agreement.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

ONTARIO FRENCH LANGUAGE SERVICES ACT

Mr. Roy: Prior to commenting on the various aspects of this bill, I'd like to underline—

Mr. Speaker: Would you move second reading of the bill, please?

Mr. Roy: I apologize.

Mr. Roy moved second reading of Bill 89, An Act respecting French Language Services in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: You have up to 20 minutes to speak to the bill and you can reserve any portion of that time for a windup, if you so choose.

Mr. Roy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, if I can get wound up. I would like to underline, prior to referring to certain aspects of the bill, the initiatives taken by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) in insisting on bringing forward this legislation. For two years he has talked about the fact that we should have an omnibus bill in this province whereby we could provide or guarantee services in this province by way of legislation. This bill is the result of the initiative taken by the Leader of the Opposition.

I am deeply indebted to my colleagues in the caucus and people working in the leader's office who have worked with me on the bill in attempting to put forward a bill which reaches a common consensus in this Legislature. I'm extremely encouraged as well in reading the press reports. I have no first-hand knowledge, but it would appear that our party in the large majority will be supporting the bill, that my colleagues to the left, members of the NDP, are supporting this legislation as well, and that my colleagues, the members of the government party, have decided to allow this bill to come to a free vote.

Mr. Peterson: That's a refreshing change.

Mr. Roy: This is an important aspect, and I'm deeply encouraged by this approach by all members of the Legislature. I would say, because of the limit of time, a few words in French.

Tout simplement, monsieur le Président, je voudrais souligner, dans la limite de temps qui m'est donnée, le fait qu'un précédent est établi ici aujourd'hui à la Législature. C'est la première fois, à ma connaissance, surtout depuis que je suis ici, depuis 1971, qu'une législation est présentée dans les deux langues. Et le Bill 89 est un Bill qui est avec nous aujourd'hui en Français et en Anglais, et je trouve que c'est une étape importante ici dans l'acheminement des droits des revendications des Francos-Ontariens. Monsieur le Président, je voudrais tout simplement dire que notre but principal avec cette législation est d'établir un point commun: notre idée n'est pas d'embarrasser personne, notre idée n'est pas de jouer d'une façon partisane avec un point aussi important que celui-ci, mais c'est d'établir surtout un point commun où tout les membres de la Législature ensemble, sans partisanerie, pourraient enfin en venir à une conclusion, enfin arriver à légiférer les droits des Francos-Ontariens. C'est pour cette raison qu'on a procédé de cette façon et je suis fortement encouragé par l'initiative premièrement prise par le Chef de l'Opposition, mes collègues, qui m'ont encouragé et m'ont aidé à produire ce Bill, et tous les membres de la Législature qui ensemble, comme nous en avons l'espoir, vont avoir un vote libre sur ce Bill. Et pour moi, c'est une étape importante, je suis optimiste que ce genre de législation va recevoir l'approbation de la majorité des membres de la Législature. D'après moi, c'est une preuve concrète pour les Francos-Ontariens qui ont lutté si longtemps. Aujourd'hui, on espère acheminer jusqu'à un point, et ainsi leur faire justice et en même temps leur donner la preuve, à ceux qui croient encore au Canada, au Québec, et à travers le Canada qu'ici en Ontario, on est prêt à donner du leadership; qu'ici en Ontario on est prêt, même s'il y a certains aspects d'autres législations au Québec avec lesquels nous ne sommes pas d'accord et même qu'on trouve aller contre les droits des minorités au Québec, que nous ne sommes pas prêts à sauter dans le piège, mais que nous sommes prêts, même dans une situation difficile, à faire des revendications et de légiférer les droits des Francos-Ontariens. Je considère, monsieur le Président que c'est une étape fort importante.

To all my colleagues, I wish to emphasize exactly what the bill does. Basically, its purpose is to try to find common ground among all members here. It was not our attempt to embarrass anybody in this Legislature. We set out to try to find common ground, to try to remove a subject as important as this from all partisanship, so that we, as members of the Legislature, could all see and agree with the fact that the emphasis in this bill is on the aspect of services.

Therefore, we have proposed a bill which would legislate the right to these services. In the process, we have set up a mechanism to do so. We have set up a mechanism having in mind, as well, a cost factor in this. That's why we set up the board; and we think that the board can do its work in one year.

I'd like to clarify and emphasize again that the purpose of the board is simply to make an accounting of the services that are available now, to tell us the areas where there is demand, and what services should be necessary. This is the purpose of the board. The yearly supervision of events under this legislation will of course be the work of the co-ordinator. We feel that with the board there have been sufficient studies made and that the procrastination should end. We're trying to say that having established a common ground we're prepared to legislate in these areas. To this end we have presented a bill which we consider to be reasonable, practical, and extremely flexible.

I would repeat, with emphasis, that what the bill doesn't do is make French an official language in this province. I want to stress that once again, because I've seen reports where people suggest that it does in fact do that. I would emphasize again that we are not about to bilingualize the province. That is not the purpose of this legislation.

I would also stress that we're not attempting to create a large bureaucracy within the civil service, or asking the civil service to learn French. This is not the purpose of the bill. The purpose is to provide services for Franco-Ontarians. That's where the emphasis is in this bill. It seems to me that we should keep in mind that we're not trying to force French on anybody.

I've read comments to the effect that something is being shoved down certain people's throats. That, as I have said, is not the purpose of this legislation. The services are for Franco-Ontarians. Can anyone say that in areas like Prescott-Russell, Sudbury, and Ottawa-Carleton, for example, where there is a substantial number of Franco-Ontarians, these people cannot speak to their government in their language, cannot talk to their doctors in their language, that they cannot get services in the courts in their language? This is where we have put the emphasis in this legislation—on services for Franco-Ontarians.

If we proceed as I'm hopeful we will this afternoon, and if this legislation receives the approval of the majority of the members of this Legislature, we will accomplish a two-fold purpose.

First of all, we will finally render justice to the Franco-Ontarian citizens in this province and assure them that they will be treated with equality and fairness. We in Ontario will show we are prepared to legislate their rights just as we do every day for others. They are asking for no more. They are asking for no less.

At the same time, in the process of trying to arrive at a consensus, and I say to my friends across the way, we are reasonable in this aspect. Anyone who doubts our good faith in this should consider that we worked together on the amendments to the Judicature Act which the Attorney General put forward. All three parties got together on it. My colleague from the NDP, the Attorney General, the critic in our party and myself discussed it and produced a piece of legislation which we consider to be practical because all of us here know that there are problems in this province in having wholesale matters of principle legislated, and that the legislation must be flexible and practical. We have done that, I suggest in the Judicature Act.

Just as important, it seems to me that the majority of the members of the Legislature of Ontario together approve this type of legislation, and approve the principle, we are sending a very strong and positive message to the federalists in the province of Quebec, to our federal colleagues and to the majority of the people in the province of Quebec who still believe in Canada and who still believe in this country. I think we are sending them a very important message in light of the fact that over the horizon the referendum is coming.

It is important that these people have some ammunition at a time especially when the PQ strategy seems to be to annoy and sometimes to intimidate to a point where they are hopeful that the majority of anglophones and the rest of the country will say: "Let them go, for God's sake. They are getting to be a pain. Let them go, and good riddance." By taking the step that we are here today, we are not falling into this trap. We make the distinction between a separatist government and the majority of the people in Quebec who still believe in federalism. That's the message.

In my opinion, it's a ringing declaration of what we believe in in this province and in this Legislature. At a time when the PQ is attempting to restrict schools to certain classes of Canadians, we pass a bill here like the Essex school bill; at a time when they are attempting under Bill 101 to restrict the use of English in their courts, we pass amendments to the Judicature Act; at a time when Bill 101 and other culture reports which are just on the horizon are coming forward, when we see something as ridiculous as we have here read about recently about the changing of signs and so on, we, the members of this Legislature, are not about to be intimidated. We see what is going on, but we are still prepared to give leadership and we approve a bill like Bill 89 by a majority of the members in this Legislature.

We are prepared, by approving this bill, to give this type of leadership. For those who think the battle over the referendum is limited to Quebec, I ask why is it that when they are discussing certain legislation over there, people like Laurin and Morin point to Ontario and say, "Look what is happening in Ontario." They think it is important and I say to members that it is important what happens to our sister province. I think it is important when they are looking at the way we treat our minority that the majority in Quebec will be very impressed by what we are doing here. When Camille Laurin points to Ontario, we can stand here with leadership and start enumerating some of the things that we have done in this province.

In closing, may I say that in some of my discussions with some of my colleagues—and I can remember discussing this with the member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway)—we used to discuss what happened in the early days of Confederation between some of the Fathers of Confederation. We are left with the impression today that at that time, all of these people were great buddies and great friends, that there were no major issues really dividing them and that it was a time of friendship with no animosity or prejudice or anything of that nature.

One has only to read some of the debates of that time and to look at them closely to wonder how they managed to be in the same picture, in view of some of the things they were saying to each other and of the prejudice that existed at that time, and the animosity between the linguistic groups.

What the Fathers of Confederation were able to do, in spite of all this, was to have a common goal and, in their attempt to achieve their common goal, they were able to compromise. Wanting to achieve this common goal, they were prepared to make concessions. In so doing, they set a tremendous example for us.

Since the election of the PQ government back in 1976, I have had many people who have come, sincere, in good faith, and said, "What can we do? What can we do to help? Is the debate limited to Quebec? What can we do?" And basically what I try to tell people is simple, "First of all, you have got to keep your sense of perspective. You can't get carried away by one event, whether it's the boing of the national anthem sung in French at a baseball game or whether it's some other situation in Quebec where people who are trying to speak English at a meeting are shouted down." I think we have to keep things in proper perspective.

And the other matter that the people have to keep in perspective is to try to be informed. When people make wholesale declarations or when people—for instance, in this legislation—say this and this, we should at least take the time to read it and see exactly what it does and what it doesn't do. I think we have a duty all of us to do this.

But it seems to me that a question is asked of us here: "What can we do?" I think we as members of this Legislature, leaders in our own community—and I understand that there is not 100 per cent support for this thing; that some of my colleagues in many of their ridings will have great difficulty with this—surely have a duty to explain it, explain what it does and what it doesn't do; even to rise above that, to rise above it, and to say: "What can we do?"

I think that we are given an ideal opportunity here to send a message and to send ammunition to our friends in the province of Quebec. I think it's an opportunity and when my colleagues ask: "What can we do?" I think we are afforded an opportunity here to do not only justice in this province but to give leadership across the country, something that this province should do and has done in the past.

I wouldn't want to miss this opportunity. I don't think we should let it go by and I think this is the purpose and this is what we are attempting to do. We have found common ground on Bill 89. We are prepared to sit down and work together on it. We are prepared to accept some amendments to it, suggestions from the public but, surely to God, the principle should be important enough for all of us together, in the majority, to support this important principle, while at the same time doing justice for the citizens of this province—Ontarians, Franco-Ontarians—and at the same time make it very clear to the people in Quebec fighting for Canada, fighting for federalism, that they have allies here in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The member for Ottawa East has three minutes remaining. Do you wish to reserve that time for the end?

Mr. Roy: I may, Mr. Speaker, thank you.

Mr. Cassidy: Merci, Monsieur l'Orateur, je voudrais commencer cette journée historique avec quelques mots en français pour accueillir le projet de loi qui vient d'être proposé comme un pas dans la direction qu'on a cherché depuis longtemps et puis aussi pour accueillir le fait que le Premier Ministre de notre province a accordé un vote libre sur cette mesure et assuré le public que la Parti Conservateur ne va pas bloquer ce projet de loi.

J'espère que cela indique un changement de politique de la part du gouvernement et j'espère que ce jour verra le commencement d'une vraie législation pour la protection des droits linguistiques de notre communauté franco-ontarienne.

La vie n'a pas toujours été facile pour les Franco-Ontariens. Nous avons depuis longtemps dépassé l'époque du règlement 17. Les Franco-Ontariens ont fait du chemin depuis cette époque, une des plus sombres et des plus scandaleuses de l'histoire de l'Ontario.

Mais cette route vers l'épanouissement culturel et la reconnaissance de leurs droits les plus fondamentaux a été longue et pénible. Par exemple, ce n'est que depuis dix ans que les Franco-Ontariens ont commencé à acquérir un système d'écoles secondaires publiques.

La nécessité de cette lutte pour avoir une égalité linguistique et culturelle continue jusqu'à nos jours. Est-ce qu'on peut affirmer qu'aujourd'hui les Franco-Ontariens ont vraiment droit de cité dans leur propre province? J'ai bien peur encore que non.

Il est temps d'écarter tout vestige de domination linguistique et économique. L'Ontario se doit de refléter le véritable "partnership" des deux peuples fondateurs du Canada. L'Ontario se doit de donner l'exemple et d'accorder pleins droits aux Franco-Ontariens, la plus importante minorité francophone du Canada Anglais. Pourtant, jusqu'à hier, le Premier Ministre William Davis refusait de déclarer le français langue officielle en Ontario et même de reconnaître en statut la position du français. Il juge que ce serait un geste purement symbolique. On a entendu même il y a deux semaines quand il a répondu au mémoire qui lui a été proposé par l'Association Canadienne-Française de l'On-tario. Alors, je veux croire que Monsieur Davis est un homme de bonne volonté mais ce qu'il ne parvient pas à comprendre, c'est que les droits fondamentaux ne devraient pas être à la merci du gouvernement au pouvoir. La question du droit linguistique ne devrait pas se situer au niveau purement administratif. J'espère, comme je viens de dire, que chez lui on verra un changement de principe de la part du Premier Ministre.

It's been a long time since we've come even as far as the bill that we have today. In welcoming the bill from Mr. Roy I also want to welcome the assurance of the Premier that there will be a free vote on this particular legislation and that his government does not intend to block this first venture into seeing that legislation is passed.

I've been personally involved. As a member with a riding in which 20 per cent are francophones, I've been fighting for this issue since 1971. My party has fought even longer and has, in fact, become effectively a party that works in both official languages over the course of the last six years.

When I spoke in the throne debate last February, shortly after becoming leader, I made it clear what the position of the New Democratic Party of Ontario was. We argued, and we still believe, that the government's refusal to make French an official language has been enormously destructive in the effect on our credibility in contributing to the cause of national unity.

We have welcomed the promises that were made in the throne speech by the government this year about particular services that will be made in French. As a party, however, as I said at the time, we are still looking for legislative and not just administrative protection for the rights of Franco-Ontarians in services to health, in education, in the courts and in all areas of government. It is in that spirit that members of my party intend to support the bill which has been proposed by the member for Ottawa East today.

We do so, however, with a feeling that this does not go far enough, even though it is a step in the right direction. As I said in February, to make French an official language is quite simply a part of the overall approach of guaranteeing linguistic rights for Franco-Ontarians. But an enormously important step is the guarantee of survival to Franco-Ontarians as well as a sign of good faith to the rest of Canada.

I suggested at the time, and it's the case as well today, that after what has been promised by the government, if those promises are carried out to make French an official language, it would be a step whose additional costs are insignificant.

The Premier has taken several stances. He told ACFO he was not prepared to move on French. In Montreal, shortly before the throne speech, he said the government had not rejected the possibility of a statutory framework for the French-language-service commitment that we already had. In the throne speech they talked about specific measures and now the Premier says he's prepared to see at the very least a free vote on this bill.

I would hope very strongly that the government will make a further commitment and that that further commitment is either to see this particular bill, suitably amended, strengthened and improved, passed into law before the end of the year, or alternatively that the government will bring forward its own law to ensure that legally, in the statutes of Ontario, French-language rights are enshrined for good. I would hope that it will bring that bill forward and have it adopted between now and the end of the year.

I challenge the government to make that statement today because then this will be truly an historic occasion, with all three parties of the province of Ontario uniting in making the commitment that we have had for so long to Franco-Ontarians into not just rhetoric but into a reality through the statutes of Ontario.

The bill which Mr. Roy has put forward moves, as I have said, in the direction of ensuring French-language rights. It does, however, have a number of weaknesses which I am concerned about. Many people, including the members of the Liberal Party, have complained about the government's administrative approach to providing an increase in the French-language services. The bill, however, simply substitutes a different administrative approach for the administrative approach which has been taken by the government.

[4:00]

It is therefore a weak bill. It's weak in particular because the proposed Language Service Board, which is meant to delineate what services and in what regions French-language services would be provided, will expire after only one year. After that it will be carried out by a French-language coordinator, an office which already exists at the ADM level, I think, along with representatives from various ministries. That's very close to what we have in practice in the province already.

We're concerned over the fact that this bill might even be adopted with the co-operation of the government and then prove to be ineffectual because of the fact that the civil servants, acting under political direction from the government who are to carry it out after the demise of the Language Services Board, might not carry out the commitment which we certainly have in this party and which I hope and believe all parties now have.

I do want to suggest that while we intend to support the bill of the member for Ottawa East, the bill that was proposed last fall by my colleague, the member for Cornwall, is a good deal more effective and strong in assuring French language rights. The bill that my colleague proposed, for example, makes the declaration of principle about French-language rights and services which was sought by l'Association Canadienne-Française de l'Ontario. This I'm afraid is not contained in the bill which has been put forward by the member for Ottawa East.

ACFO has asked that municipal services be available in French and that is not contained in this bill. ACFO has also asked that it be the Ombudsman who polices this, rather than leaving it to an in-house committee of civil servants. That is not included in this bill, because the oversight over the assurance of French-language services is being left to a co-ordinator.

As I said in French, it has been a long and hard road for Franco-Ontarians to fight for their right to exist. Their experience, because of the inequality of French language in Ontario, has been completely different from Anglo-Ontarians. If you always have to fight over the security of your language, you can't go and picnic and work and study and make love and do all of the other things that other people want to do without that nagging fear of not being able to survive always at the back of your mind. Given the intimate relation between cultural survival and linguistic rights, the measures being proposed now and which we will consider over the course of the coming months are many decades overdue.

The time has come to grant justice to Franco-Ontarians. We believe this is a matter of simple natural justice to provide legislative protection for French-language rights, whether you move by making French an official language as we would prefer, or whether you move in that direction as we have before us here today. We in the New Democratic Party are prepared to take that move and enshrine French-language rights in the law regardless of what happens in Quebec—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Cassidy: —because we think this is an important matter for the Franco-Ontarians in this province alone. But we also believe that, particularly as has been evidenced by the events since November 1976, this is also a vital, crucial and important step to take for Canada and for the continued survival of our party—of our country.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Let Hansard show that.

Mr. Warner: One and the same.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Conway: I think I know what the headlines will be.

Mr. S. Smith: Priorities, priorities.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Monsieur le Président, en tant que Franco-Ontarien, et représentant de Cochrane Nord, un comté dont plus de 60 pour cent de la population est francophone, il me fait plaisir de participer à ce débat, et d'indiquer l'appui en principe du gouvernement au Bill 89.

Mr. Speaker, I am also proud to be a member of the Davis government which has recognized the French fact in the province and whose policy was clearly stated in the Premier's statement in the Legislature of May 3, 1971. I believe it bears repeating, and I quote: "We will provide, within the areas under our jurisdiction and wherever feasible, public services in the English and French languages; we will provide education, wherever feasible, to students of the French-speaking and English-speaking minority in the language of that minority. We will also provide them with the means to acquire a good command of the language of the majority."

The approach which has been developed has been clearly understood. I want to repeat here as explicitly as possible that our approach to French-language services in Ontario will not force anything on anyone. Our policy does not require Ontarians to become bilingual. It does not mean that we are trying to force two languages and two cultures upon every Canadian. As the first volume of the report of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism stated, "a bilingual country is one in which the great majority of its citizens may well be unilingual. Therefore, what Ontario's policy means is that the legitimate requirements of Ontario's French-speaking population are being met and will continue to be met."

The policy of this government was again very clearly enunciated in Her Honour's address in the beginning of this session. I quote: "The fundamental right of Franco-Ontarians to education in the French language have long been recognized in Ontario. Franco-Ontarians also have a commitment from the government for the expansion of government services in the French language in accordance with the need and population distribution. We shall continue to build upon the strong foundation already in the field of education to ensure that French-language programs are available at all levels, where practicable, to French-speaking Ontarians."

Let me outline briefly some of the accomplishments of this government in the provision of services to the French-speaking citizens of this province. Again, in the speech from the throne at the beginning of the session, it was stated "that the present government translation services will be augmented to make more public documents, publications and forms available in both English and French. Of particular importance, a special section will be established to begin work on translating Ontario's statutes into French."

I am pleased to inform this House that a translation unit under the Ministry of the Attorney General is now being established. The government has presently—in English and French—more than 500 publications and forms and documents available in both languages.

Over the last two years, the Ministry of the Attorney General has made criminal division court services available in French, throughout the main francophone areas of the province. Family court services in French are also available in the Sudbury region on a trial basis and it is anticipated this service will be expanded to the Ottawa area and to other designated areas as soon as the necessary court personnel are available.

It is estimated that some 66 per cent of the French-speaking population of Ontario can obtain 98 per cent of their court trials in bilingual or French-language courts. Bills to amend the Judicature Act and Juries Act to allow French-language services were passed in this Legislature in the last two weeks.

There are a number of other programs that are proceeding and which will have direct benefits to the francophone community. The government instituted guidelines to provide that those who communicate with the government in French, either in writing or orally, can expect a response in that language.

The government has established specific organizations which are designed to help support the French-speaking community. These include; the Council on French-Language Schools, to advise the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells) on existing or new policies that will ensure that the French-language dimension is respected; the Council on Franco-Ontarian Affairs, which advised the government of the needs of Franco-Ontarians by identifying their cultural, educational and other requirements; in 1970, the office of the co-ordinator on bilingualism was established. His main job is to advise ministries and co-ordinate their efforts with respect to French-language services, and to recommend to government ways of implementing policy more effectively. An interministerial committee of advisers on bilingualism was set up to assist the co-ordinator in implementing policy.

A policy of financial aid to municipalities providing services in French was established and is now in effect. Several municipalities, many in my own riding, are presently receiving compensation from the province for these services.

I have outlined briefly some of the current programs the government has in operation. We will continue to improve and expand those programs.

As I mentioned at the beginning of my speech, we have no difficulty in supporting the principle of this bill. In accepting the principle, the government has some reservations as to this bill, and to the limitations inherent in drafting a meaningful legislative framework at this time.

This government has not set aside the possibility of a statutory framework as was mentioned by the leader of NDP and others. I quote from the Premier in his speech in Montreal of February 16 of this year:

"We have not as a government set aside the possibility of a statutory framework to the French-language-service commitment we already made. I refer to the type of statutory guarantee already existing in the context of education and of course, now in the Judicature Act and the Juries Act, the kind of meaningful, practical guarantee our population has every right to expect."

This matter was further discussed with ACFO, l'Association Canadienne-Française de l'Ontario, delegation when they were meeting with the cabinet on May 10, 1978, and the Premier indicated his willingness to meet with them again before their September meeting.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, this government is proud of its record of action and its ongoing program of providing French-language services. Let me be clear that in accepting the principle of Bill 89 we are not altering our course of action. We will continue to pursue our policy of French-language service in accordance with our desire to serve the interests of all the citizens of Ontario.

Mr. S. Smith: I am very pleased to be able to rise at this time and take part in a debate of which all of us can probably be quite proud as years go by.

Je veux dire quelques mots premièrement en français seulement pour expliquer que je suis, très fier d'être un membre du Parti et Chef du Parti qu'hier comme membre Monsieur Roy, qui a présenté aujourd'hui un Bill très utile dans notre histoire, un Bill très important à cette époque dans laquelle nous vivons et je suis très fier de donner mon appui à ce Bill et de féliciter Monsieur Roy pour avoir fait quelque chose qui signifie une vraie étape en avant à ce temps dans notre histoire.

What we are doing here today is important for a number of reasons. First of all, I want to salute the government. In accepting the principle of this bill, although I realize they are not really going a whole lot further than what they have already been doing, they made a choice.

There were two options open on the political scene with the presentation of this bill. One was what we might call the low road in politics, the option of assuming that most citizens would not bother to read the bill portraying it as something which was somehow or other going to give us an awful lot more in the way of costly French-language services that would hurt English-speaking civil servants, that would force French down people's throats and so on and so forth. That option was open, and politically it might well have paid dividends for those willing to exercise that option, because it would have forced people like the member for Ottawa East and myself and my colleagues to say, "No, our bill wasn't really doing any of those things," and the defensive is not an easy position in politics.

I want to salute the government for not taking that road and for taking the high road instead. They have taken the high road; they have recognized their own record in the area of French-language service is really pretty good and if they can be faulted for anything, it is the fact they haven't been as vocal as perhaps they should have been in making sure all the citizens, not only of Ontario, but of Canada, knew the extent to which the generosity of spirit of Ontarians has brought us to a point where there are a great many French-language services in Ontario, both in education and in justice, and in certain other areas as well as outlined by the minister just a moment ago. So I am happy about that. The potential for divisiveness which could have hurt politically, and more importantly could have hurt in the search for national unity, has been avoided and I am pleased.

The bill itself is very important. There is a lull at the moment in the national unity debate. It is as though people don't want to hear any more about it. It is as though they feel that now Mr. Ryan has been elected to lead the federalist forces in Quebec we can just relax and everything will be fine. Nobody wants to hear about French and unity and all that stuff any more.

[4:15]

However, this lull is almost in itself part of the separatist strategy. In many ways, it plays into the hands of those who are going about their work in Quebec, trying to persuade the average Quebec citizen that nobody much cares about the future of our country and that, in fact, they would suggest that most people probably like some kind of sovereignty association; only they want another name—they want to call it something else.

It's interesting. If I had to assess what I think the average citizen wants today, outside Quebec, I would venture to say that most of them—probably without thinking much about it—have decided that what they would like is a country with nine English provinces and one bilingual province. Failing that and put to the test, they might agree to have nine English provinces and one French province, and figure that the English in Quebec can somehow muddle through.

Only with a certain amount of resistance can one, I think, create the feeling that our country should be more than just nine English provinces and one French province, that it can be something richer than that. It can't really be 10 thoroughly bilingual provinces in the sense of Ottawa's idea of what bilingualism means. It can be 10 provinces in which, whether you come from English-speaking Canada or French-speaking Canada, you can move, you can visit, you can be transferred, you can study, you can spend a little time during your business career in any part of the country without feeling the necessity to give up entirely your culture, your language, your opportunity to educate your children.

It is a rich and an advantageous thing to have more than one language. To have that around us in our atmosphere, in our milieu, makes us richer and more distinctive as Canadians at a time when our distinctiveness as a country is going to have to be made clearer and clearer to people because our financial cost to remain an independent country is day by day becoming more apparent to every one of us.

All I can say, therefore, is that we in this Legislature must not simply accept blindly the sentiment that we would be okay with nine English provinces and one French province. We must make sure that in Ontario the Franco-Ontarians—granted a small percentage, six per cent or so—feel comfortable; and all of us feel comfortable seeing them comfortable; and all of us feel enriched by their presence here and by the presence of their language; and that we are a place where those Quebecers whose native language is French feel comfortable, wanted, appreciated and at home. That's all that's asked.

The bill itself does deal with emotional, judicial, health, social, municipal—I just might mention "municipal" because I think it was missed by previous speakers but one—and other public services.

Ms. Gigantes: You weren't listening.

Mr. S. Smith: The bill itself doesn't go as far as some would like, but it goes, I think, as far as it should at this time. It does what's right. It declares the right principles and it shows the way by which, first of all, we can remove this matter from the political realm, the divisive partisan realm, into one which is less divisive and less dangerous for the country; and secondly, it gives the Franco-Ontarians the feeling that their rights are being enshrined in the law and are not simply at the whim of a given minister of government, however generous or however enlightened that government of the day may be.

I congratulate my colleague, I thank those who have already spoken for their indication of support, I congratulate the government for taking the high road, and I feel very proud in this small way in this Legislature to be taking part in a debate which may, both in terms of substance and in terms of symbol, be another building block at a time when we are, in fact, constructing over again a nation which had its first attempt at construction over 100 years ago and which I still think will prove in time to be the greatest living example of co-operation and tolerance for this entire world.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The honourable member for Cornwall.

Mr. Warner: The voice of eastern Ontario.

Mr. Samis: Merci, Monsieur l'Orateur. Il me fait plaisir de dire quelques mots en français. Je pense que ma position sur cette question est très claire parce que j'ai déjà introduit un projet de loi à l'Assemblée il y a huit mois. Ce projet de loi donnera la reconnaissance officielle à la langue française en Ontario et naturellement j'appuierai ce projet de loi présenté par le député d'Ottawa Est.

Je ne le regarde pas comme l'équivalent de mon projet de loi mais je peux l'appuyer sans aucune difficulté formidable et j'aimerais profiter de cette occasion pour féliciter mon collègue le député d'Ottawa Est.

I rise in support of the bill, Mr. Speaker, and I would call to your attention the fact that it was over eight months ago that I introduced a bill on the floor of this Legislature which would give full legal recognition to the French language in the province of Ontario. I would also bring to your attention the fact that the New Democratic Party in 1969 in its program passed a resolution that would give full legal recognition to the French language in this province. At our most recent convention in February of this year, we re-endorsed that resolution as an integral part of the policy of this particular party.

When we discuss this bill we should look at some of the other jurisdictions to give us some sense of perspective. The leader of the Liberal Party and I both come from the province of Quebec and we both know the rights of the English minority in that province were enshrined in the BNA Act over 111 years ago. Even with Bill 101, it's been estimated by several groups that the English minority in the province of Quebec still has more rights than the Franco-Ontarian minority has today in the province of Ontario.

I also think of another province that has a large minority, namely, the province of New Brunswick which in 1969 passed its languages act. I would point out that that act has been implemented, supported, endorsed and very effectively implemented by the Progressive Conservative government of the province of New Brunswick. Unlike the Premier of this province, the Premier of New Brunswick was not afraid to take a stand and say, "I support the official recognition of the French language in the province of New Brunswick." He knew there was a backlash. He got flak and criticism but he stood up because he believed it was right and good for the province of New Brunswick, good for les acadiens and good for Canada in the long run.

That contrasts with the record of the province of Ontario. I'm afraid that if we compare the treatment of the Franco-Ontarian with the Acadians, and with the English in the province of Quebec, it's a pretty sorry record. Anything and everything that the French have got in this province they have had to fight for. They've had to put the pressure on the government and the government acts only when it is cornered, only when it has been embarrassed, and only when the publicity has forced it; and when it does act, it gives as little as possible.

I recall quite visibly in my own riding how they had to fight five years ago to get their own French-language high school, while 25 miles down the highway for 111 years they've had the right to English-language high schools in the city of Valleyfield, Quebec. That is no formula for keeping a country together when there are two provinces, two communities side by side with such disparate and unequal treatment of their two minorities. No wonder the French-speaking people of this province are so worried. No wonder they want their rights legislatively enshrined.

All one has to do is look at the assimilation rate. No wonder they're so insecure. In my own area, for example, the assimilation rate is almost terrifying to some people. When one looks at the figures produced by lower Quebec, by ACFO, they are talking in a general average of 27 per cent. When one looks at this monolith to the south and looks at the general anglicization of society, no wonder they do not want compromises, privileges, concessions or breadcrumbs, they want their rights guaranteed by law. And who can blame them? That's what this bill is all about today.

When we discuss this bill, I think we should consider some of the circumstances as well. We're a country that is doing a lot of soul-searching, our whole national unity is being challenged and hopefully we are looking at what have we done in the past, what are we doing now and what lies ahead.

The issue we are discussing today is anything but a provincial issue because what we are discussing today and what we decide today has national ramifications. You can be sure, just as the Premier said no to ACFO when they asked for official recognition of their language—and that made the front page of almost every newspaper in Quebec—that what we decide today will receive equivalent treatment in the Quebec press and the Quebec media. As the Leader of the Liberal Party said, we have to show the people of Quebec that we are prepared to remedy some of the injustices of the past, and the time has come.

Another circumstance of this bill—let's be honest—is that there is a backlash in this province. The word "bilingual" has unfortunately become a dirty word. You can gain votes by playing to that backlash. You can gain added support if you play to that backlash, but it seems to me when your country's whole future is under threat and being questioned by a government, you just can no longer play that short-term cheap political game of either holding seats or getting more votes.

Now is the time, as in 1864 and 1865, when we have to stand up for our country and overcome that backlash, not give in to it, not accede to it, but display leadership and give the people a sense of vision and generosity—that we are Canadians first, Ontarians second.

You know, Mr. Speaker, when I heard the Premier in some of his earlier speeches, as reported in the press, talk about that word "bilingualism," I wonder about the imagery conjured up. The leader of the Liberal Party and the member for Ottawa East also talked about it. Nobody on this side is in favour of ramming French down anybody's throat. Nobody on this side is in favour of taking away anybody else's rights.

What we are trying to do is protect the rights of an endangered minority. What we are trying to do is give equality to minority in this province. What we are trying to do is see that all Canadians in this province at least have an equal opportunity to lead their lives in whatever language, whatever culture, whatever mode of life they want to lead it in.

That is what it is about, not the Trudeau-style bureaucracy. I would really emphasize that if one looks in North America and around the world, there is more than one model of bilingualism. It need not be the Trudeau federal model. There are many models available.

Speaking about the bill, in particular—in the short time allotted—I would say that I do regret the absence of a commitment to recognizing the French language officially. I think that is essential. I wish the mover of the bill had included that.

To me it is somewhat akin to the idea of a man and a woman who have been living together. What this bill says is: Here are the rights of two people in their conjugal state, but who are not going to get married, are not going to formally, officially legalize it. We will legalize the rights of the two parties but we won't call it marriage and we will avoid that word at all costs. I regret that.

The question of the Language Services Board: I appreciate the comment made by the member for Ottawa East, but I would ask him to consider the whole sunset concept. I really don't think it is essential to the bill.

There will be some difficulties in implementing the bill and I would think, if he is not prepared to withdraw the sunset concept, he should at least extend it beyond the one year to overcome any of those difficulties.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would say I support the bill. I think it is a step forward. I think it provides for greater rights for the Franco-Ontarian minority. I think it will remedy many of the injustices current. It will provide for greater equality. I only wish it provided for official recognition for the French language.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I think between men of goodwill there often occur disagreements which are based not so much on principles or objectives, but rather on the implementation of those principles and the means by which to best reach those objectives.

I think the debate surrounding this bill today, Bill 89, is a good example of this type of situation, be that a debate in this House or a debate that has gone on outside the confines of where we are all sitting here today. I would, however, like to believe that there will not be one member of this House who doesn't basically agree with the principle of this bill.

As I have stated previously in this House in many debates, I think Ontario has a very crucial role to play if the French-Canadian component of our national heritage is to survive and prosper in a united Canada. Why do I say this? I say it because the greatest concentration of French-speaking citizens outside of Quebec reside in this province.

Every measure that we as a government have taken—and we have taken many, and we took many long before November 15, 1976—has been first and foremost in the interests of the French-speaking citizens of Ontario. I think we must also realize that anything we do to help preserve our French-speaking community here in Ontario has strong national connotations. We can't get away from that. I would go even so far, as some have already said, as to include the debate that is now going on in this House. This debate today will have certain national connotations.

I am very pleased to join with my colleague in cabinet, the member for Cochrane North; the Leader of the Opposition; the member for Ottawa East, and others in taking part in this debate. I think we have to put on record the framework within which this government operates and that could be no better stated than in the words of the leader of this party, the Premier of this province, when he said recently—this is not a speech from 1971 or 1975, but from only a few months ago—and I quote:

"We must continue to do what is right. What is right for Ontario is continued expansion of French-language services to meet real needs openly and directly. This is our formula. It has no ceilings, no fixed budgets, no artificial deadlines. There are not limits imposed by any preconceived notions. What there is, is a deep-rooted commitment to ensure equality of opportunity for the French-speaking population of our province."

Flowing out of that commitment have been and will be many initiatives. My friend from Cochrane North has itemized many of them. I am particularly pleased to take part in this debate because many of those initiatives flow out of the ministry that I have had the honour to head up for the past six years. I think the initiatives in the education field are very important because from them will flow much of what will happen in many other areas in the future.

I am not going to itemize all the initiatives that have taken place or will take place, except to say very quickly that they have been significant: initiatives such as the appointment of an assistant deputy minister in our ministry; the increase from 16 Franco-Ontarians in our regional offices a few years ago to 30; the new program of providing teams of program consultants to help the French-language units and the French-language schools—21 educators working with these people to help improve the program in the French-language school system; increases in supplemental grants this year—that's grants per pupil above the normal grants for all students from $9.5 million to $17.4 million; establishment and financial assistance of the Franco-Ontarian resource centre in Ottawa—$2.5 million this year and an ongoing commitment for the development of French-language learning materials; correspondence courses moving to provide more and more services for the French language.

I could go on and on. I don't think that's necessary today. All I am doing is illustrating the commitment the Premier stated and which, I have stated many times, is a commitment we intend to keep.

The commitments in the educational field, the law field, and the other commitments itemized by my friend from Cochrane North and known to the members of this House, represents a list of initiatives that substantiate the Premier's statement that the government of Ontario prefers concrete measures to symbolic gestures. I believe the action of the government, in particular the Ministry of Education, will help ensure that the French language remains a living language in this province.

I would say that inasmuch as the bill introduced by the member for Ottawa East will help ensure the attainment of this objective,

I will support it. But I also say this to the honourable members, and probably they all agree, it's not the passage of a bill that counts, it's the action taken that really counts—actions that will significantly improve the situation of the French language in this province; actions that will make it easier for French-speaking Ontarians to fulfil their cultural aspirations; actions that will assist them in checking the high assimilation rate affecting their community. These are what we are concerned about and these are the kind of actions we will take to overcome these fears of this community.

In my term of office as Minister of Education, I've been very privileged to have had the opportunity of getting to know our French-speaking compatriots. I've found them generally to be reasonable in their requests, courteous in their dealings with us, and patient yet determined in the face of the misunderstandings and frustrations they often have to live with day by day.

I think what I am saying here would be echoed by most members of this House. It's my fervent hope that whatever debate goes on in respect of this bill will not create the impression that this House is divided in its support of the just cause these people have, but that on the contrary our discussion here today is motivated by a strong desire to find the most effective response to what I think are the real, legitimate aspirations of the Franco-Ontarian citizens of this province.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for London Centre. You have about two minutes.

Mr. Peterson: I am sorry I only have two minutes. I just want to say a personal note, if I may.

I have never in my brief time in this House participated in a debate that was more emotional for me. I would like to say how proud I am not only of my colleagues, my party, but all members of the House. I am so terribly impressed with the tone, with the moderation and with the community of feeling on this bill. There's been so little heckling today. Everybody, I feel, has been extending themselves to understand the points of their colleagues, their friends, and even the opposition members in the House. That's a constructive thing and it's a good thing.

I suspect, as my leader pointed out earlier, that this afternoon will be a very significant one and an important one in the history of this province. Indeed, as the Minister of Education said, it possibly will have national repercussions.

That tone has been set so beautifully. I compliment the ministers who have spoken and the Leader of the Opposition and my own leader and the introducer of the bill, the member for Ottawa East.

Mr. S. Smith: I am the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Peterson: Leader of the Opposition. I'm falling heir to the same mistake he's made. It's a terrible thing and I apologize for that.

But it's a very important time for moderate men, for reasonable men, to stand up. When we take the vote on this day, I desperately hope everyone stands up together, joins hands and votes on this bill.

We all know it's not easy. We all know it's difficult, particularly for a person like myself who represents a riding in southwestern Ontario that occasionally has a repercussion. It doesn't have a major percentage of Franco-Ontarians there. There's no need for this particular kind of service there, in large measure, with the exception of some isolated pockets.

It's an important act, in terms of its symbolism as well as its substance here. I compliment all the members and I'm proud to participate even for these brief two minutes.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I would only say how encouraged I am about the comments made by all members on all sides of the House on this legislation.

If I may introduce a few moments of levity I would say to my colleague from Ottawa Centre that we Franco-Ontarians have had many problems but one of them has not been that we have any difficulty making love. I should put that on the record.

Mr. Cassidy: You've only got three minutes to talk about it, Albert.

Mr. Roy: One of the things I would say to my colleague from Cornwall is there was no intention of giving any thought or reflection that we were disfavouring marriage. We're all in favour of marriage, families and so on in this bill.

I would say to my colleagues to my left, especially to my colleague from Cornwall, that yes, it may be that it would have been better to go further, to have legislation which had more principles in it. The fact remains that all of us here from various areas, represent the province. It was our attempt in this legislation to try to reach common ground. We felt, with this type of legislation, that finally we were together. All of us are taking a step forward, rather than taking positions, for instance, that are maybe more laudatory principles, but when we sit back and look at each other we say we can't agree.

What I find encouraging is we are in agreement. I think that is important. I would say to my colleagues from the government side, there have been important steps taken towards guaranteeing and giving services in French in this province and they should be underlined. They have received our support. We, on this side have, I think, especially since minority government in 1975, shown our flexibility and shown our goodwill.

The fact remains that Franco-Ontarians, like every other citizen in this province, want their rights guaranteed through certain legislation. After all, what we're doing all day long is passing legislation either giving rights, giving privileges, or allowing people to do certain things. This is what they're asking for.

I'm deeply indebted to all the members who have participated. I'm extremely encouraged, not only for the future of the Franco-Ontarians and the justice that we're rendering to them today, but I'm deeply encouraged in the message and the ammunition we can give to people who believe in this country.

PUBLIC PARTICIPATION FUND FOR ENVIRONMENTAL LEGISLATION

Ms. Bryden moved resolution 17:

That the government consider bringing in legislation to establish a public participation fund to which individuals, non-profit groups and associations may apply for assistance to insure effective participation by the public in hearings instituted under the Environmental Assessment Act, the Environmental Protection Act, the Ontario Water Resources Act and the Pesticides Act. The parties assisted should be representative of the various interests which are directly or indirectly affected by the hearings.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Beaches-Woodbine for up to 20 minutes.

Ms. Bryden: It's only in recent years that public participation in decision-making has become an accepted principle. Governments used to adopt the attitude that father or mother knows best, but for a considerable time there has been some participation of the public in the regulation of rates for monopoly-type public utilities. The extension of public hearings to other areas of decision making grew out of a feeling that under today's conditions of resource scarcity, governments have to make critical decisions in order to meet people's needs. Acceptance of such decisions is more likely if the people affected have a say in them.

Pressure for public involvement in environmental decisions built up when we discovered that our lakes and rivers had been allowed to become public sewers and our air was hardly fit to breathe. Concern about the potential health hazards in the thousands of new chemicals being introduced into industry and agriculture added to the demand for a public voice in standard setting and control procedures. The United Nations recent conference on human settlements stated that, quote, "Public participation is a right that must be accorded to all segments of the population."

[4:45]

So, after a long period of foot dragging, we now have in this province provision for some form of public hearings on approvals for waste disposal systems and sewage works and on environmental assessments of new and expanded undertakings. But all too often there is a gross under-representation of the public interest in these hearings. The public voice is very weak in comparison to the applicant's voice. It is generally a David and Goliath situation.

A hearing which appears to be fair because all interests are invited to participate is really a mockery and a sham if the interested parties are on an unequal footing. We know that most of the applicants for approvals and licences hire lawyers, consultants and expert witnesses to present their case and to conduct cross-examinations of opposing witnesses. Most of the interveners cannot afford this. They are either public interest groups or ad hoc organizations of citizens or individuals.

The applicants can deduct their costs from their taxable income and thereby recover up to 50 per cent of the cost. The interveners cannot generally do this. In fact, they and the rest of the taxpayers in Canada and Ontario make up the revenue lost through these deductions.

The Maple landfill application is an illustration of the problem. A gravel company and a waste disposal company applied for permission to set up the largest landfill operation in North America near Maple. Public hearings started on July 6, 1976, and went on intermittently until November 25, 1977—well over a year. A total of 80 hearing days were required. It is estimated that the companies spent at least $1 million in their applications.

Local residents paid thousands of dollars to monitor the hearings and to make their case against proposals that they thought would be very damaging to the environment and the community. One citizen paid out $600 just to get one expert witness. Others spent large sums on transcripts and preparations of briefs. No one calculated the cost of attendance for 80 days at the hearings by people who lost time off work or by volunteers who sat in for those unable to be present.

The Environmental Assessment Board has recently ruled against this project in very forthright terms. I am very glad the Ministry of the Environment just yesterday has accepted the recommendations of the board. I sincerely hope the cabinet will also accept these recommendations. I feel the efforts of the citizens' groups had quite a bit to do with the decision. They brought out all the counter arguments very forcibly. The residents were fortunate that people were ready to put up the kind of money they did to make their case and there were volunteers to monitor the hearings.

But it really isn't fair to expect individual citizens to finance such expensive interventions out of their own pocket. In many other areas it would not be possible for this kind of activity to be financed without outside help.

The sources of funds available for citizens' groups which intervene are very limited in Canada. We have no huge foundations like the Ford Foundation which might finance them. They cannot raise large sums through membership fees or donations, even with the help of an income tax deduction. Nor do we have large public-interest groups of a national nature such as exist in the United States, partly with the help of wealthy foundations. The Consumers' Association of Canada and the Public Interest Advocacy Centre in Ottawa do yeoman service in public intervention but their puny finances require them to limit their activities severely.

My resolution calls for a correction of the serious under-representation of the public interest in environmental hearings. It proposes the establishment of a public participation fund to which individuals and non-profit groups and associations may apply for assistance to ensure effective participation by the public in hearings.

The principle could be extended to the Ontario Municipal Board hearings and to the rule-making and standard-setting activities of other government agencies. I have chosen to confine my proposal to hearings under environmental legislation simply because I feel this is the most important area where action is needed right now, and also, to put my proposal in the form of a pilot project for legislative action on public participation funding.

The fund could be administered by a small government-appointed board which would be independent of the Ministry of the Environment. It would receive application for assistance and make awards to those it considered needed aid in order to ensure representative public participation in hearings. It could draw up guidelines for determining eligibility. In some cases, it could make awards contingent on groups or individuals with similar interests joining together in their participation to avoid duplication of effort.

Basically, an award would cover such things as legal fees, expert witness costs and research. It could also cover transportation and accommodation, if interveners had to travel considerable distances to the hearings. It should also cover transcript costs and the costs of reproduction of briefs if several copies are needed. In some cases, it might cover a monitor's cost where attendance at lengthy hearings by someone other than a lawyer was deemed necessary.

We already have several precedents for funding of public participants in Ontario and Canada. The Porter Royal Commission on Electric Power Planning funded a number of groups out of its allotment from the provincial government. The Hartt Royal Commission on the Northern Environment did likewise. The former spent about $250,000; the latter was voted $362,000 in the 1977-78 estimates.

The federal Berger commission on the Mackenzie Valley pipeline asked the federal government to fund groups wishing to make submissions. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development responded by making substantial grants to native groups. Some other federal agencies also made grants to other groups. A few groups in Canada have received LIP and Canada Works grants to help them prepare briefs for public hearings on specific issues such as the construction of a dam or the selection of a landfill site. In all cases, the amounts granted are very small and there is no legislation guaranteeing the availability of such funding.

Recently, the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission issued a booklet which endorsed the principle of public funding for public-interest groups participating in rate hearings. It proposed that companies involved in rate hearings should be required to assist in the funding of nonprofit interveners. However, the rules suggested in the proposal are rather restrictive. I hope they will be altered.

For example, subsidies would be awarded only to those groups which are deemed by the CRTC—not by the independent body, but by the CRTC—to have intervened responsibly and to have contributed to the commission's better understanding of the issues. Moreover, only groups which would not be able to intervene effectively without subsidy would qualify. Presumably the CRTC would determine that.

Groups receiving any financing from a government would be ineligible, even if they needed supplementary funds. The worst feature of the proposal is that the selection of the groups to be subsidized and the amount of the subsidy would be determined after the hearing. So the groups would have to gamble on support.

Looking at the US situation, Mr. Speaker, we find that funding for public interest groups is growing through a number of avenues in the United States. Several federal agencies are now funding such groups which appear before regulatory, environmental, health, and public safety hearings.

The federal agencies include the Federal Trade Commission, the Federal Food and Drug Administration, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, the Federal Energy Program, the Consumer Product Safety Commission and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. These agencies have financed public participation in hearings on fuel economy standards, on environmental impacts and on setting of standards for control of hazardous substances.

The 1976 Toxic Substances Control Act in the United States specifically provides for the payment of legal fees and expert witness fees and other costs of participation in proceedings setting standards for the control of toxic substances. In addition, of course, private foundations and corporations such as the Ford Foundation and the Carnegie Corporation do make grants to United States public interest groups. Some of them offer to match funds raised for a group.

I hear that some bar associations have instituted a $10 voluntary checkoff with dues payments for public-interest advocacy. In a number of universities and colleges there is a student checkoff which has been instituted to fund student briefs and student research for appearances at public hearings.

So there are undoubtedly more funds available to public participants in the United States than here, but the amount is still puny in comparison to the amount spent by the companies involved. The public interest groups' activities have generated a backlash. Business leaders are starting their own so-called public interest law centres to counterbalance the genuine public interest groups—for example, a legal foundation which started in California in 1973 with $40,000 now has a budget of $1.2 million from corporate donations. It specializes in environmental and land use questions, advocating broader use of pesticides, more development and more intensive timber harvesting and grazing on public lands.

This sort of activity underlines the need for a legislated public participation program to ensure equality in public hearings.

A bill currently before the United States Senate sponsored by Senator Edward Kennedy and Charles Mathias, requires all federal agencies to underwrite the cost of participation in their regulatory licensing and adjudicatory proceedings. Under this bill, participants would qualify only if they represent an interest that would substantially contribute to a fair determination of the proceeding and they must show that their economic interest in the proceeding is small in relation to the cost of effective participation, or that they do not have sufficient resources to participate effectively. Funds for this program would come either from the government agency or in some cases applicants would be required to pay some or all of the award.

[5:00]

Getting back to the situation in Ontario, the key question is, where will the money come from to finance the public participation fund I am proposing? Public participation in the Hartt and Porter commissions was funded by the provincial government and that is certainly a legitimate source if we believe the province has a moral obligation to ensure there is fair play in hearings. It also has an obligation to see that the views of all interest groups are properly put before regulatory and assessment bodies.

Other sources of funds which might be considered are a levy on the companies involved. This could be either a percentage of what they spend on their applications or a participation fee based on their size or earnings.

The income tax checkoff is another source which should not be ignored. It has been proposed for financing political parties in the form of a voluntary checkoff of $1 or $2 which the taxpayer could opt for on his income tax form. It was recommended in the report of one of our select committees in this House. It could be applied to a checkoff for an environmental fund.

Group checkoffs by lawyers or other professionals on their dues statements could also be encouraged to provide money for the fund. One can argue that lawyers who benefit from the advocacy process have an obligation to assist in making it less stacked against public interest groups. Individuals and foundations might also be encouraged to contribute to such a fund. Bequests could be accepted as well.

In a democracy we have an obligation to assure that there are always equal forces contending before decision-making forums. We are not fulfilling that obligation if we do not institute a public participation fund of the kind I am proposing. I urge the government to give immediate consideration to the proposal and to bring in a bill on the subject as soon as possible.

If there is any time left, Mr. Speaker, I would like to reply to rebutt any comments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member has two minutes.

Mr. Sterling: I wish to reply to the resolution tabled by the member for Beaches-Woodbine.

The general idea set out in the resolution is a commendable one in so far as I interpret it, that assistance be provided so individuals, nonprofit groups and associations are able to participate at hearings at various environmental agencies. Public participation is one of the keystones of our democratic system. No one here would try to refute this point. But the resolution itself is cast in rather vague terms and the assertion of this philosophical concept is, perhaps, its strongest point.

On the other hand, I find many problems with the practicability of the resolution put forward. It would appear to me from the context of this resolution that any fund established would have to be open-ended in order to be effective. If this is the intention then, it is a dangerous and economically unrealistic proposition.

The vagueness extends further into terms of eligibility for those who might partake of those moneys. I recall the words "individual nonprofit groups and associations." This appears to cover nearly everyone who could ever wish to apply, almost a universal eligibility policy. It worries me that among the people who have a genuine environmental interest, and a genuine need of financial assistance to express their views, may also be some people who have a greater interest in the remuneration they might receive. This is where the ambiguity of the definition of recipients could create problems.

Furthermore, on the question of eligibility, the applicant need only have interests which are "directly or indirectly affected by the hearing." This "or indirectly" intrigues and worries me. It appears to allow for anyone, who has merely the vaguest of interest, to apply and receive funds to participate in hearings even where his participation may be unnecessary or irrelevant. It could spawn what I would call frivolous objectors.

Many of us who have had experience with the Ontario Municipal Board have had considerable experience with frivolous objectors who have held up needed development and raised the cost of development on many occasions. Someone with a banner to wave, looking for an occasion on which to wave it, and to be paid for it, might be attracted to this type of fun.

The ambiguity in the question of relevant interest could allow great abuses to the proposed system. Furthermore, the appearance of any frivolous objectors at hearings would likely retard the progress of these boards which, being objective, we all know move at less than a rapid pace. We must remember that every time a project is held up unduly, it costs everybody and, in the end, the consumer, a great deal of heartache in terms of money, in terms of jobs and in terms of development progress.

To return to the philosophical aspect of the resolution, the member appears to be concerned with the public good. I believe this is admirable, but too often the public good is hard to reconcile with something that is essentially removed from the realm of philosophy. There are too many grey areas and apparent loopholes in this resolution to be seriously considered at this time, Mr. Speaker. Therefore, I find I must oppose it.

In addition, it is my view that this resolution deals with expenditures of substantial amounts of government funds and I believe, in my estimation, this is not a matter to be considered in a private member's resolution or bill.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make a few comments with respect to this particular resolution and support it. I think the principle espoused in this particular resolution is worthy of support. It is the principle of providing funds to groups who wish to appear before the Environmental Assessment Act or under the terms of that act at an environmental assessment hearing.

The Environmental Protection Act, the Water Resources Act and the Pesticides Act involve themselves with public hearings. The Environmental Assessment Act and the Environmental Protection Act in particular can be complex in the sense that the issues with which they deal are involved, are detailed and on some occasions are very lengthy.

It seems to me that small groups, and private individuals who wish to appear and who wish to put a particular point of view in relation to a problem under the terms of any one of these particular acts, does have some difficulty, particularly if the hearing is long and involved. The costs are, in some cases, prohibitive. For that reason I think it is a move in the right direction to move in financially supporting these groups where it is indicated they wish to make a submission.

I want to deal with a couple of the points my friend from Carleton-Grenville raised. They are the frivolous objector and the matter of uncontrolled expenditure. I will do so just a little later.

This particular resolution moves in the direction of the bill proposed by my colleague last November, as I recall it, Bill 100. The member for Kent-Elgin (Mr. McGuigan) proposed a bill whose intent was basically the same as proposed in this particular resolution.

The Ministry of the Environment was created back in 1971 in response to a growing problem of environmental damage and pollution. Then, in 1975 the Ministry of the Environment passed the Environmental Assessment Act. That bill, as I recall, was, at that time, considered to be a hallmark piece of legislation. It has had some difficult times and I think it's only now moving from the teething stage into the further development and refining stage. Because of that, public participation should be encouraged to a greater extent than it has been up until now.

I think the Environmental Assessment Act and the other Acts mentioned here are important. I think it's important they don't become instruments of the strong against the weak. As the member for Beaches-Woodbine mentioned, small groups cannot begin to raise the money which is necessary to secure the services of lawyers and engineers so that their case would be properly put when hearings are called.

Mr. B. Newman: It becomes David against Goliath.

Mr. Gaunt: I think the Ministry of the Environment is a very sensitive ministry. It's sensitive because it touches the lives of everyone in one way or another every day, and does involve itself with the protection of the environment, and at the same time the protection and well being of people generally. That's a heavy responsibility. When one involves people to that extent, it's vital that one encourage and generate public participation on these issues.

That can only be done where public funds are used to assist individuals and groups who cannot properly on their own take part in the hearings under the act to which reference is made in the resolution. There has to be a reasonable balance in all of this. The government never has unlimited funds, as was pointed out by my friend from Carleton-Grenville, particularly in these days, so it's important that criteria are established so that available resources can be provided in the fairest possible way to ensure effective public participation.

I see nothing wrong with putting some criteria, some limits, and some guidelines under which groups and individuals can apply. I think the Porter commission has done that and done it with some success and I see no reason why it couldn't be done under a government bill as proposed in the resolution.

We have precedents in this respect, as the member for Beaches-Woodbine mentioned—the Porter commission, the Hartt commission. I believe we have a precedent federally as well, the Berger commission. The Hartt inquiry was allocated, as I understand it, $362,000 up to March of 1978. The Royal Commission on Electric Power Planning, the Porter commission, has provided funds for groups and individual participation in the commission.

[5:15]

So far my figure doesn't quite match the figure indicated by the member for Beaches-Woodbine but the latest figure I had was that the Porter commission had spent about $2 million up to the present time for public participation of various groups and individuals. They've a very open policy. They have a lending library and I went there one day. I was interested in seeing what was available and they had some very good publications which one can either take out and return at a certain time or which one can purchase.

They have certainly encouraged people participation; and I think the thrust and intent of the resolution would generate more public participation which I think, in the final analysis, is all to the good.

The member for Carleton-Grenville referred to people who might appear before these various hearing bodies to object on a frivolous basis. I'm sure that will always be the case, no matter what mechanism one sets up, where one has an appeal structure of any kind. There are ways and devices whereby frivolous objectors can be discouraged and would be discouraged. That's the reason I say that criteria should be set up under which this program would operate.

The member for Beaches-Woodbine isn't saying that there should be a program of full subsidization. The intent of the resolution is to assist groups, not to completely subsidize them in the actions they want to undertake. That in itself surely is some sort of control mechanism in the system. If someone has to put his or her own money up front in order to object, I think that indicates—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Gaunt:—an interest and intent on the part of the person, and I think that's a control mechanism of its own.

I'll close by saying that legislated public participation is important in view of the vested interests of those who wish to promote actions and products which are potentially harmful to the environment or to health.

Mr. Makarchuk: I rise to support this resolution both in principle and also because of a personal experience some time ago in trying to sue the government to prevent the construction of the bridge across the Elora Gorge.

Mr. Sterling: Where is that?

Mr. Makarchuk: I'm sure my friend from Wellington-Dufferin-Peel (Mr. Johnson) will understand the situation.

For the benefit of the members of the House, it was an action that was initiated by the current mayor of Kitchener, Morley Rosenberg, and myself when we were members of the Grand River conservation authority, against the Grand River conservation authority in order to prevent them from deeding lands over to the county of Wellington to facilitate the construction of a bridge across. shall we say, the last remaining natural gorge in Ontario.

In the process we took it to about three different courts. We lost, and it cost us $17,000 for the costs of our opponents.

Mr. Gaunt: You weren't a frivolous objector, were you?

Mr. Makarchuk: We lost the case not only despite the fact that we probably had the best legal services available in Ontario.

An hon. member: Your own?

Mr. Makarchuk: We had one Eddie Goodman, Edward Goodman, who I'm sure is well known to members from the other side of the House. He donated his services which we appreciated. We also had the assistance of the Environmental Law Association and the Federation of Ontario Naturalists. If we had had to pay for the services of the lawyers, the cost would probably have been a lot closer to $30,000 instead of $17,000.

That is an indication of some of the problems that citizens face when they try to deal with matters which relate to government, the environment and everything else. We also discovered that there is a standing doctrine that says: "No person may use the courts to challenge a statute, or an action of government, or a public body, or to seek damages or other relief against a public nuisance unless he or she has some special interest, usually pecuniary or proprietary, or has sustained damage beyond that suffered by the general public."

In this case, we never did have our case heard. We just brought it to the court and were told that we really haven't got the power to take it to the courts. We discovered—and I think this is a point that should be raised here—that the only possible plaintiff in cases where no private interest is at stake is the Attorney General.

We're concerned that there's no reason in principle why members of the public should not be allowed to protect the public interest in the courts. In fact, this is why the public should have the right.

The reasons for challenging the rule of standing have not to do only with environmental protection but with the broader question of the rule of law. This is something that the member for Carleton-Grenville should realize—that a democratic government must be a legal government, it must obey its own laws.

That, in effect, is what this resolution will do—it will give people an opportunity to ensure that the government they elect lives up to the laws that the government itself passes.

It means that when there is a question as to whether a governmental action is within the law or a statute within the constitution, there must be a way for that question to be decided by the courts. To leave it to the discretion of the Attorney General, no matter how much confidence one may have in the Attorney General, who is himself an arm of the government, raises the question of whether there really is sufficient desire for the government to move against the government.

We also have to recognize when we're dealing with this resolution that even with the best will in the world to deal with or show concern about the environment—and we question some of the government's concerns about the environment—that no government really has all the resources to deal with environmental matters. Therefore, the citizen should have the opportunity—and it certainly is his responsibility, I feel—to turn, if necessary, to the courts to protect the environment in which he lives. We have all sorts of evidence these days in our rivers that are open sewers, in our lakes that are polluted and everything else that we are not doing the job. The environment is unprotected.

The matter that was raised by the member for Carleton-Grenville—that it's going to open the courts to a floodgate of litigation, et cetera—is like the matter raised with Bill 132 or Bill 70: If one gives the workers a right to walk off their jobs under unsafe conditions, they're going to walk off. I remember when we were going through the hearings of the bill we asked the corporate representatives over and over again, "How many times have you had workers quit work since Bill 132 was introduced?" There was not a single case where the workers took any kind of frivolous action to stop working.

I think it's the same kind of mythology or demonology or whatever it is that the member is introducing here. He in effect does not trust the good sense of the people of this province. He assumes that if we give them certain rights, they will automatically abuse those rights.

We should look at the United States. An environmental protection law was passed in the state of Michigan in 1971 establishing the right to a clean environment, as well as granting standing to any members of the public to enforce that right. The results show that the courts have not been overburdened. Similar legislation has been introduced in five other states and there is not an inordinate amount of litigation, according to their own attorneys general.

The other point I want to bring to the attention of the House is the statute that's called the Vexatious Proceedings Act that can be used by the government as well as by the individual or the agency that is promoting some project to stop what could be considered frivolous proceedings. Although at times we depend on the government and expect the government to protect the public interest, there are occasions where the government refuses to move. For example, the experience we had in the Elora Gorge, where there was some effort to try and get the government to move in and it refused. The Attorney General has to take this action. He is not dealing at arm's-length and you question whether he would be the appropriate plaintiff in any actions.

Look at the Dow Chemical case. It has been going on for seven years and appears to be at a standstill. There is nothing to indicate that the government or the Attorney General is going to proceed with vigor on some of the outstanding environmental problems with which we are faced, some of the projects with which we have to deal.

Another point we seem to have raised when we discuss this thing—it was said it was going to create havoc in construction or something—is the erroneous belief that private interests are more important than public ones and that the courts exist simply to protect private interests. This assumption is belied by the simple fact that people do find public interest actions important enough to put time, money and energy into them, even though they have nothing to gain as private persons, only as members of the public. The fact that we have managed to preserve the Elora Gorge in its natural state is something of benefit to the people of Ontario.

It should be noted that permitting the public to have access to the courts will in no way impede or restrict government initiative actions against polluters or other law breakers. More liberal standing will simply add a new and effective dimension to judicial redress for existing and threatened injuries to the environment and to civil liberties. In a sense, it will restore one of the paragraphs in the Magna Carta that says, "To no one will we deny, to none will we delay, rights or justice." It seems to be a reflection on our society that 763 years after that document was tabled we are here discussing the possibility of extending rights to people who have earned the right, as I have and as every other citizen in Ontario has, to fresh water, to fresh air, and to a healthy environment. What this resolution does, in effect, is it provides that kind of leverage or that additional help to give this.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Makarchuk: I would suggest to the members that this resolution merits the support of all members of the House. In the interests of justice, I am sure they will support it.

Mr. Johnson: I am very pleased to rise and speak, especially after the member for Brantford, because he has caused me considerable problems in my riding in the Elora Gorge district. He is also talking to the member for Wellington South (Mr. Worton), who shares my sentiments. Maybe he can convey the message.

I am concerned about this type of legislation which could cause delays such as we are experiencing in Elora. I can speak from personal experience regarding these delays. They date back to 1964 when the county decided the Elora Gorge bridge should be built. It carries through year after year, until we come to July 10, 1974. At that time a writ of summons was issued by Messrs. Rosenberg and Makarchuk against the conservation authority. This was their first court appearance. This was dismissed.

On July 15 and on July 23 they appealed again—I am sorry, they appealed for the first time. On April 29, 1976, the decision of the Court of Appeal given unanimously affirmed the earlier decision, awarding costs to the county of Wellington and the Grand River Conservation Authority. On September 27 the same two appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada. On October 19, 1976, Chief Justice Laskin and Justices Judson and Spence of the Supreme Court of Canada dismissed the plaintiff's application for leave to appeal with costs. I believe these are the costs the member is concerned about.

[5:30]

Mr. Makarchuk: We never did touch on the subject matter.

Mr. Gregory: Shame. Shame.

Mr. Johnson: It has proceeded to the OMB. There have been several hearings on it. The cost to the county, at the present time, amounts to between $60,000 and $70,000. Legal costs are another $30,000.

It's unwarranted, in my opinion, that any group can take 10, 12 or 13 years to overrule a county. Many members of this House pretend to support the principle of local autonomy. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what credibility is given to locally-elected officials to exercise their judgement when they have it overruled or unduly delayed by individuals and organizations not directly affected by these decisions but yet are able to prevent the project from being carried out? Twenty-one municipalities in the county of Wellington unanimously supported, in a recorded vote, the building of the Elora Gorge bridge. They are denied this right to do so. This is supposed to be a democratic process, but at the same time it's costing the people of Wellington an escalation in the cost of building the bridge from a little over half a million dollars to well over a million dollars.

As I mentioned, there was also the cost of another $70,000 to $100,000 for legal proceedings. It just seems to me there is something wrong when a group of supposedly concerned people can prevent a county from proceeding with building a road or a bridge or something of this nature when the county officials are elected to do this by the people of their area.

Mr. Makarchuk: We're not stopping them if they put it someplace else. There are all sorts of other places for that bridge.

Mr. Johnson: You can prevent anything from happening by claiming you're going to kill a couple of alligators or lizards or whatever you have.

An hon. member: Butterflies.

Mr. Johnson: And butterflies.

Mr. Makarchuk: I didn't know they had alligators in the Grand.

Mr. Gregory: Or turkeys.

Mr. Johnson: Turkeys.

Mr. Gregory: Turkeys. There are lots of them over there.

An hon. member: See you later, alligator.

Mr. Kerrio: You don't have to worry if you're on a big yacht.

Mr. Worton: If I had known there were alligators there, Jack, I wouldn't have supported it either.

Mr. Makarchuk: I guess there will be no swimming in the Grand this summer.

Mr. Johnson: I think we are so concerned with protecting the rights of a few individuals that we forget about the rights of the majority of the people.

This is the danger of endorsing this type of resolution. Maybe the principle merits support, but certainly the method doesn't.

There are many questions that come to mind. Who is to administer the program? Does this mean setting up another level of bureaucracy? Who is to judge the applications made by individuals, non-profit groups or associations? This is a judgement call; who has the right to make that decision? If it is thrown back to the minister, then we don't need it in the first place.

Would funds go to groups such as Pollution Probe which is non-profit, but already has an existing level of funding? What happens in a case where an application is rejected? Do we set up another level of bureaucracy to hear the appeal? When groups are preparing briefs to appear before these bodies, would these funds be used to pay for lawyers, consultants and other professionals? If so, I could provide the names of a couple of lawyers who are quite hungry for this type of legal work.

How do we define an interested party affected directly or indirectly by the hearings? Is that anybody? Does that mean the funds go to union groups? If so, would it not be discriminatory not to include a corporation or the like?

It also seems to me that this sort of program would lead to unnecessary appeals, delays of projects, and place an even greater burden on such agencies as already exist.

Mr. Mackenzie: Did your buddy George put you up to that speech?

Mr. Johnson: I would also ask myself if this would not lead to government funding lobbies and paying lawyers and consultants for special-interest groups.

Mr. Kerrio: All the Tories are doing that already.

Mr. M. N. Davison: You are just interested in investment.

Mr. Kerrio: All the Tories are doing that already.

Mr. Johnson: In my view, this would mean that appeal would follow appeal and there would be delay on top of delay, just as we have in the example the member for Brantford has mentioned. I suppose he would like to make this retroactive if possible.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I am sure he would.

Mr. Kerrio: No, that is the Minister of Agriculture and Food who does those things.

Mr. Johnson: With the opposition's support.

I am of the conviction that we should not as a matter of general policy enter the realm of funding various interest groups. If they have a need for funds, I'm certain that they can find the means of raising them. I certainly cannot accept the principle that we should be funding individuals. Therefore, I would urge all members of this House to consider carefully the results of supporting this resolution. I must vote against it.

Mr. Warner: That is sad.

Mr. G. I. Miller: It gives me a great deal of pleasure to have the opportunity of participating in this debate this afternoon. I support in principle the resolution that has been presented by our colleague from Beaches-Woodbine that the government consider bringing in legislation to establish a public participation fund to which individuals, nonprofit groups and associations may apply for assistance to ensure effective participation by the public in hearings instituted under the Environmental Assessment Act, the Environmental Protection Act, the Ontario Water Resources Act and the Pesticides Act, and that these parties assisted should be representative of the various interests which are directly or indirectly affected by the hearings.

It has come very close to home, particularly in my riding over the last three years; we've had to utilize the Environmental Assessment Act. I'd like to say that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McCague) has a difficult job to do, which was only established, as my colleague pointed out, back in 1971 or that area. It has had a considerable impact on the improvement and quality of the environment in our natural resources. These assessment boards that have been established have given the public the right to have a fair hearing and present their case.

I'd like to point out that there was a proposition proposing a Cambrian well for industrial waste which was to be located near the little village of Canborough in my riding of Haldimand-Norfolk. The people there rose up against it and were able to convince the ministry that the dangers and the hazards were too great. Another group known as the D and D Group, a waste disposal management company, was to have established a waste disposal or lagoon disposal in Nanticoke. It was in the middle of a farming community and could affect the water resources, the environment, the value of the land and the natural resources.

The people again had to band together, and the Ontario Federation of Agriculture took a strong stand as well. They spent $5,000 of hard-earned money to oppose the location of the site. The Nanticoke Ratepayers' Association was another group that banded together and spent approximately $5,000 in opposing the location of that lagoon in the immediate area. The Nanticoke pollution control committee has spent $9,000 in order to oppose the location of this waste site, the first and only one in Ontario.

The people proposing the site there were supported by the government. I have been critical and will be critical of them for supporting it. There should be a different way of approaching this problem rather than forcing the people, the average little person, to rise up against it and to put up their money. The two organizations, the OFA and the Nanticoke Ratepayers' Association, have a debt of something like $11,000. Some say that these lawyers could be making work for themselves, but I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the lawyers involved knew that the funding was not available and they were concerned for our environment. They were concerned for the welfare of the small person. I think they deserve a lot of credit for taking on that responsibility knowing that there could well be no funds available to them.

We can't be frivolous and we do have to deal with our waste, but there has to be a better way. Another example I would like to point out is the Glanbrook dump site which is now set for a hearing in September. The people are trying to come up with some funding through the area municipality of Glanbrook and the local association and they are really fighting the region of Hamilton-Wentworth who are supporting the project. The area municipality is opposing it and while they are contributing about 2.4 per cent of the funding to the municipality, they are really giving money for something they are trying to oppose.

I think there has to be a better way to deal with this and consequently I would like to support the resolution which has been put before us. I know it is a money-spending bill and it will be up to the government to bring in legislation to make this effective. I would hope that they would be able to come up with some proposal that would use the public more fairly and provide a fair way of dealing with them.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, could you tell me how much time we have, reserving two minutes for the member for Beaches-Woodbine?

An hon. member: Two seconds.

Mr. Kerrio: There should be two seconds, Mel.

Mr. Lane: It's all through, it's over.

Mr. Speaker: You have about five minutes.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this resolution. It has some very serious applications in our area in Niagara in two respects.

The last speaker mentioned that the ratepayers in the Niagara Peninsula, actually in the area east of Welland, fought the location of a sludge disposal site which was to be placed very close to a number of the residences around there.

There was a fairly lengthy hearing with the environmental board and then subsequent to that there was an Ontario Municipal Board hearing. Although the environmental hearing approved of the site it was turned down by the Ontario Municipal Board.

And, Mr. Speaker, the ratepayers involved in that had a great deal of cost and although they were finally able to win it, it was in spite of the inequality of the fight and the fact that they had by far the best side of the case.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please. Will all members please keep their private conversations down? It is extremely difficult to hear.

Mr. Swart: If there had only been equality on both sides, I suggest they would have lost the case simply because they did not have the funds to have the experts and to have the lawyers there to fight the case at the same level as the region of Niagara and others that were involved in it.

Mr. Stong: No disparaging remarks about lawyers now.

Mr. Swart: Within the latter part of this year, Mr. Speaker, there will be, we expect, at least an eight-week hearing taking place on the urban boundaries of the Niagara region. This of course concerns the preservation of the fruit land and the grape land in Niagara.

It is estimated that the total costs of an eight-week hearing, when the regional municipality of Niagara and at least five municipalities will be involved, will be in excess of $500,000. Those on the side of preservation of the land, wanting to reduce these excessive boundaries, are hoping to raise something like $25,000 to fight for their side of the hearing. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that if a vote was taken in that area, you would find at least 90 per cent of the people were in favour of preserving that prime agricultural land.

Yet when that hearing comes around in October, if it does take place, it will be a David and Goliath battle. If it is won by the preservationists, by those who are concerned about preserving our prime agricultural land, particularly the grape and fruit land which is so unique in that area, they will win it only because they have an overwhelming case on their side, not because of the experts they will be able to gather or be able to pay. It will be a case of them spending $25,000 and $500,000 being spent on the other side.

If we are going to have any kind of fairness in these hearings—and I am concerned about the cost of hearings too; I was in municipal government for 21 years—but if we are going to have these hearings, then I suggest there should be equality in them. The only way we will get equality in these hearings is if those who are concerned with the public interest have some resources similar to those developers and others who are fighting to get their way.

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have received the support of the member for Huron-Bruce and the member for Haldimand-Norfolk. I think they too recognize the principle of the need for balance of interest appearing before public hearings. I hope the government members will not deny this principle by blocking the vote on this resolution because in it we are simply asking that this House extend what the government is already doing, but put it into legislative form. We are simply asking them to apply the principle that they have adopted in the Porter and the Hartt commissions to all hearings. In the application of those public participation programs before the Porter and Hartt commissions, we have shown that most of the objections put forward by the members opposite can be met or are really imagined difficulties.

I did not say that grants would be given to anybody who applied. I said that we must develop criteria and eligibility requirements. The member for Huron-Bruce also emphasized this. The Porter commission and the Hartt commission published guidelines showing their criteria. The US agencies have done the same and in effect they rule out what might be called frivolous applications by the guideline method. In fact there can be frivolous applications right now by well-heeled companies which can take most of their costs off their income tax, but this is the only kind of frivolous applications that we now have. I am not suggesting we want frivolous applications; I am suggesting we can rule them out by suitable guidelines.

The member for Carleton-Grenville suggested the fund was open-ended, but I have suggested that the fund would simply award the amounts that were put into it from the various sources that I mentioned. This would include either government grants into the fund, an income tax checkoff from lawyers' associations or professional associations, bequests and things of that sort. Only what is in the fund would be distributed, but it would be distributed in the fairest possible way, not to put everybody on an absolute equal footing—I am afraid that is an idealistic dream—but at least to redress the balance of representation in public hearings and to ensure that all interest views are heard as much as possible.

Therefore I would appeal to all honourable members to support the principle of this bill because it is something we are already doing. It's simply a matter of legislating it and making a more uniform system for all hearings.

ONTARIO FRENCH LANGUAGE SERVICES ACT

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Roy had moved second reading of Bill 89.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for standing administration of justice committee.

PUBLIC PARTICIPATION FUND FOR ENVIRONMENTAL LEGISLATION

Sufficient members having objected by rising, a vote was not taken on resolution 17.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, may I take this opportunity to indicate the order of business?

I draw the members' attention to the sheets on their desk in so far as the order of business starting at 8 o'clock this evening is concerned. Keeping in mind that it's difficult to predict how much time this may take, there is a fairly full evening ahead of us.

Tomorrow the House will be in committee of supply, continuing the estimates of the of the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

For the week of June 5, may I indicate our work order as follows:

On Monday, if the estimates of the Ministry of Northern Affairs are not completed tomorrow, that is on June 2, it's my understanding they will be concluded on Monday afternoon next.

Following that, and not being able to predict if we will get to the adjourned debate on the motion for adoption of the May 4 report of the standing members' services committee, if we haven't arrived at that particular point tonight we will take that into consideration on Monday afternoon. We then have the consideration of the fourth report of the select committee on the Ombudsman, once the adjourned debate on the motion for the members' services committee report has been completed.

On Tuesday we have legislation in this order: Bills 86 and 95 to be considered in committee. Then we will proceed with any legislation not completed this evening. Time permitting, we will continue with the debates on the two committee reports, depending on where we are with respect to those reports—both the members' services committee and/or the report of the select committee on the Ombudsman.

On Wednesday, the general government committee, the resources development committee and the justice committee may sit in the morning.

On Thursday afternoon we have private members' public business, being ballot item 25 standing in the name of the member for London South (Mr. Walker), and second, ballot item 26 standing in the name of the member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Kerrio). In the evening, the House will take into consideration second reading of Bill 96.

On Friday morning next the House will continue the debate with respect to the two committee reports, depending on where we are, in so far as those debates are concerned, as far as time allocations are involved.

Mr. Speaker: It being close to 6 o'clock, I do now leave the chair. We will resume after supper, at 8.

The House recessed at 5:55 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1978

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

ONTARIO FRENCH LANGUAGE SERVICES ACT

Mr. Cassidy: I rise on a point of privilege. I think the privileges of this House have been abrogated by the actions of the Premier (Mr. Davis), who was not present at the debate this afternoon, when we had a historic occasion with the adoption of Bill 89, introduced by the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy), which affected French-language rights in Ontario.

While the words of the debate were being uttered and while members from all sides were indicating support—and as you recall, there was a unanimous decision, Mr. Speaker—the Premier was, in fact, preparing a press release, which he even translated into French, which took away from the Legislature what the Legislature had done just a few minutes before.

I think he has left the ministers who spoke in favour of the bill in a completely impossible situation. I think he has left the House leader in a completely impossible situation because, while the House leader was stating that the bill should go to the standing administration of justice committee, the Premier was issuing a press release saying that the government had no intention of proceeding with the bill.

The Premier has chosen to stand in the way of the unanimous view of the Legislature by deciding unilaterally that he will listen not to the Legislature but to the people of Ontario by some other way. I am extraordinarily disappointed at the fact that the good feeling and the sense of the Legislature this afternoon should have been ignored in this particular way. I am afraid that the Premier has acted with arrogant disrespect.

In protest at the deliberating flouting of the unanimous will of the Legislature, I wish to move the adjournment of this House.

Mr. Ashe: It was not unanimous.

Mr. Speaker: I am not convinced that the honourable member has a prima facie case of privilege. However, I think it is only appropriate that we continue with the business of this House until the Premier has an opportunity, if he so desires, to respond to the alleged point of privilege raised by the member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I concluded my remarks on the point of privilege by moving the adjournment of this House in protest at the action of the Premier. I do now so move again the adjournment of this House.

Mr. Speaker: A motion to adjourn is in order at any time without debate. I have no alternative but to put the motion.

[9:30]

The House divided on Mr. Cassidy's motion that it adjourn, which was negated on the following vote:

Ayes 26; nays 54.

Mr. Martel: That is how sincere they were about their bill.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege: I believe a member of this assembly has made a statement which has affected the privilege of this member of the assembly and, I would take it, of any other member of the assembly, by pre-empting a judgement of this assembly.

Mr. Rotenberg: Resign.

Mr. Warner: I refer specifically to the words, "The government will proceed no further with this private bill."

Mr. Rotenberg: Oh, sit down.

Mr. Warner: This afternoon this Legislature did, in fact, decide to proceed. The member for Ottawa East asked if this bill would go to a committee and the House leader of the government said it would go to the justice committee.

Some hon. members: No, he didn't.

An hon. member: Read Hansard.

Mr. Warner: I take that to be a direction of the assembly that the bill would in fact proceed to a committee of this assembly.

A member of the assembly, the Premier, has said the government will not proceed. I would ask the Speaker if he would look into this matter as to whether or not the Premier has pre-empted a direction of this assembly and report back to us at his earliest convenience.

I am disturbed by what I take to be an insult to this assembly and to myself as a member of the assembly.

Mr. Breithaupt: I have had the opportunity of reading the press statement which has been issued by the Premier.

If I recall the events of this afternoon, the member for Ottawa East suggested the bill in question be sent to the justice committee and the government House leader acquiesced, so that in fact that bill, as I presume the Votes and Proceedings will show, has been sent to the justice committee.

It will now depend upon the activities of the justice committee as to how this bill proceeds through the committee stage. My presumption at this point is that if that bill is reported back to the House with amendments, complete as it was, or might be or otherwise, then, of course, the bill will return to the order paper.

It is then the obligation of the government to decide whether or not that item will be called further because obviously, under the rules, as all members are aware, it is the prerogative of the minister of the Crown to call the order of business.

Whether or not the bill proceeds to third reading is entirely another matter. However, I suggest to you at this time, Mr. Speaker, if the committee in its wisdom chooses to deal further with that bill, it may indeed do so.

The government has made its position clear and we, the official opposition, in calling for this bill and the principles on which it is based, have made our position clear. As a result, the Speaker may rule as to whether the privilege of the member has been compromised. I suggest to you, sir, that if the committee chooses to deal or not to deal with that bill, it is entirely a function for the committee.

It is up to the Premier, no doubt, to announce government policy, and if the bill were or were not to be called for third reading, that would be something which this House would deal with in due course.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the House leader can elucidate as to whether his statement of this afternoon that the bill is going to committee is the correct one or whether the comments of the Premier are the ones which we now have to heed. Which statement is correct and what is the government's intention as far as this bill goes? Perhaps the House within the chamber could be informed?

Mr. Pope: What is this, question period?

Mr. Breaugh: Point of order, Mr. Speaker: With all due respect to all members who have spoken to the point of privilege, I think even in the wildest consideration of a matter of privilege, there is no question that anything is out of order.

Mr. Breithaupt: How can there be a point of order?

Mr. Breaugh: This afternoon a bill was debated in this House. The bill was moved to the justice committee and that motion was carried by this House. Notwithstanding any sentiments on the part of the Premier or the government House leader or anyone else, this House has clearly spoken and that bill is now before the justice committee without question.

Hon. B. Stephenson: That is what Jim Breithaupt just said.

Mr. Rotenberg: That's what he said. So what are you getting up and yakking about?

Mr. Speaker: I will consider the comments of the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere and the member for Kitchener and I will report back to the House in due course.

Mr. Van Horne: It's a waste of time. The Premier has treated us all with contempt.

Mr. Martel: It's like Bill 70. The House voted on that too.

Mr. Speaker: The only question before the House right now is second reading of Bill 83. I recognize the member for Waterloo North (Mr. Epp).

Mr. Breaugh: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege—

Mr. Breithaupt: The matter is dealt with.

Mr. Speaker: I have already said that I will take it under consideration. I gave everybody who wished to at that time an opportunity to be heard. I will take it under advisement. The only question before the House now is the second reading of Bill 83 and I recognize the member for Waterloo North.

Mr. Martel: On a point of clarification, might I ask the Speaker, in fact, what his intentions are in terms of what specifically he's looking at because the rules indicate that this bill automatically goes to the justice committee. If the Speaker is going to look at my colleague from—

Mr. Breithaupt: Obviously, there's nothing to look at.

An hon. member: You wasted an hour and a half.

Mr. Martel: That's right. If it's a breach of privilege that my colleague from Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner) raised, then that's fine. But I don't think the House should be asking Mr. Speaker to rule whether or not the bill goes to the justice committee because that was ordered this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Welch: That's where it is.

Mr. Breithaupt: It's gone.

An hon. member: It's there.

Mr. Martel: I would just ask the Speaker for his clarification on what part he's looking at.

Mr. Speaker: I am looking at whether the events today, and what is alleged to have been said, breaches any privilege of any member of this House and I am not prepared to make a decision at this point in time.

MUNICIPALITY OF METROPOLITAN TORONTO AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Ashe, on behalf of Hon. Mr. McKeough, moved second reading of Bill 83, An Act to amend the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, there was some noise earlier when the member for Durham West (Mr. Ashe) was speaking. I understand that he doesn't have a ministerial statement this evening on the matter on Bill 83. Could we hear it if he has one, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: By all means.

Mr. Ashe: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just very briefly, I do have a statement relating to Bill 83.

Number one, of course, the bill as proposed is carrying on very similarly to the Regional Municipalities Amendment Act. Again, I have to reiterate as I did the other night that in fact this bill is not a response in any way to the Robarts report or the white paper on the Robarts report; that will come in due course. I feel that any altering of this legislation relating to any issues dealt with directly or indirectly by the Robarts report, should, in my opinion, be ruled out of order by the Speaker. The House should look at the legislation on the basis and in the spirit that it is in front of the House tonight.

I would very respectfully ask the members opposite to hopefully get through second reading on both Bill 83 and 84 as quickly as possible, and any future determination of this bill and the regional municipalities bill can be dealt with in the committee stage.

Mr. Epp: As you can appreciate I am not trying to hold up any business unduly. I would like to speak to an amendment that the member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart) is going to introduce a little later. I am just wondering whether you can advise me whether I am going to have a good opportunity to do that or whether I should speak to it now because I have it before me.

Mr. Speaker: The purpose of second reading of any piece of legislation is to debate the principle of the bill before you. If you wish to discuss amendments, the only opportunity you will have is during the committee of the whole House.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. As far as we on this side of the House are concerned, we will be supporting Bill 83 in principle. As you know, it deals with an Act to amend the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act and this bill is essentially the same as Bill 81 which dealt with the municipalities. It has a number of minor changes in it. It has helped to clarify some of the issues in it and we feel that these are necessary in order to bring the legislation up to date with respect to the Municipal Elections Act which was passed last fall. So I will try to conserve the time of the House right now by terminating my remarks and making my remarks, with respect to some of the other changes, when it's at committee of the whole, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Welland-Thorold.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, as the parliamentary assistant has indicated, this bill is very similar to Bill 81 which amends amendments to the other regional governments in the province of Ontario. However, there are two exceptions in the bill and one other item that I want to deal with.

[9:45]

This bill does provide, unlike the other bills, for the boroughs or other local authorities to maintain the surface of the roads over the overpasses, over the Metro roads. Of course, I have no objection to that. I'm sure that's a matter of clarification from a bit of controversy that had taken place over this matter.

Section 10, however, deals with the principle of payments to the police commission. It does so in a way that is at considerable variance from the way it was dealt with in the other regional government bills, and in a manner which I cannot support.

Very briefly, this bill provides that all members of the police commission, with the exception of the appointee of the federal judge, shall be paid for serving on the police commission. The change in Bill 81, which deals with 10 regional municipalities, provides that the members appointed by the regional council "may be paid" by the regional council. This bill says they "shall be paid."

I think when we debated the other bill on second reading on Tuesday evening, I pointed out that the option should be left to regional council to determine whether the members of regional council who sit on the police commissions should receive extra remuneration for sitting there.

With many of the regional municipalities in this province, when a member is appointed to the police commission he's appointed there in lieu of some position on some other committee, usually an onerous position on some other committee. The fact that people serve on the police commission does not mean in any way that they have any more responsibilities or have to put in any more hours or do any more work than the other members of the regional council. Yet this bill which we have before us will provide that even if Metro is arranged in that same manner, those who sit on the police commission must receive the extra remuneration.

I could make these quotes from the various acts. Bill 80, commendably, made a number of changes with regard to remuneration for all members of council who may serve on boards. The method which is now used under that is that local council, regional council, has full authority to provide remuneration for members of council on the committees or on outside boards in any way they see fit. That, I support.

Although this bill, Bill 83, provides also for that section of the Municipal Act to apply to the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act, nevertheless it still leaves in the other section which makes it mandatory that those regional councillors serving on the police commission receive additional remuneration. Obviously, they would get the same amount as those other people who serve on it, and serve on it as a special job or a job in addition to their normal job.

When we come to that point I will be asking that this be referred to the committee of the whole House and will move an amendment at the appropriate time.

The final item I want to mention is one the principle of which received considerable discussion in this House on Tuesday night. That was Bill 81. Section 1 of this bill deals with subsection 5 of section 5 of the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act, which states how the council shall be organized and how the chairman of the metropolitan council shall be selected.

I have to say immediately that since Tuesday night this has come into the picture front and centre in all respects, in my view, because of the tremendous enthusiasm shown by my colleagues, particularly the members for Oshawa (Mr. Breaugh) and Bellwoods (Mr. McClellan), and the members of the Liberal Party, particularly the members for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) and Wentworth North (Mr. Cunningham), for the election of the chairman from among those members of council who are elected by the people of the area.

This issue is now very central to this bill. I would point out that there is considerable and apparently unanimous support among the Liberal Party for this principle. I would quote from Hansard on Tuesday night from the member for Ottawa East when he said, "I must say that I will be in full support of these views"—he was referring to the election of the chairman of the council from among the elected members of that council—"that the regional chairman, in fact, be elected at one level or the other and that the most important politician in all of these regional areas should be responsible to a group of people who elect him and not only to the members of the regional council."

Further, the member for Wentworth North, though not in respect to the incumbent chairman, speaking about the Hamilton-Wentworth regional council, made the comment: "That individual has yet to be reaffirmed or ratified by the public, and I suppose there is sometimes at least potentially a lack of accountability that may flow from that circumstance. Personally, I find this somewhat distressing." On and on, there was support from the Liberal Party for the idea that the chairman of a regional council must be elected from a constituency before he can run for that very important office.

This House knows that we share that view with the Liberals. I don't think there is too much difference in our views on that. I would point out that as long ago as 1966, when I presented a brief to the study commission in the Niagara region, I took the same view that that person should be elected. I took the view that the Liberal Party has held for many years that he should be elected from the whole constituency, the whole region. I quote from my brief which was presented to the study committee on the Niagara region. I said: "It naturally follows that I should also recommend that the head of the regional council be elected at large. On this there must be no compromise."

In 1976, I presented a brief once again to the regional council when there was a study being done in the Niagara region by Mr. Archer. I pointed out there that it is exceedingly important in the interests of democracy and for many reasons that the regional chairman be elected. I stated in my brief:

"There are supportable philosophical reasons to show why large governments whose members have direct accountability to only a small section of a region create decision-making processes which tend to promote excessive spending and local parochialism. When regional funds are used for local projects by councillors accountable only to the local voters, the log-rolling and back-scratching overtly or covertly distorts decision and financial control. When, as is the case with our regional governments, the chairman is appointed and not accountable to the public in any way the process is further distorted."

I just want to put clearly on record, that we within this party share the views and have always shared the views that this very important person should be elected.

After Tuesday night's debate I examined the bill further. I had consultations with a wide variety of people and found that this bill puts the issue of whether the chairman shall be selected from within the elected member council or without properly before us in every sense. In other words, that section of the act clearly puts the issue before this House of how we select the chairman of the metropolitan council of Toronto.

The parliamentary assistant has stated that we should wait to deal with this issue until we get a Metropolitan Toronto act. We don't know whether we're going to get a Metropolitan Toronto act at all. Those of us who are concerned about whether the chairmen of regional councils are elected or are appointed, people who are not elected by any of the public, have the opportunity now to make a decision. We now have an obligation, those of us who are concerned about that, to make a decision because this is properly before us in this House. I suggest that we can't pass it over as the parliamentary assistant, the member for Durham West, would like us to do. It's before us and we express an opinion on it here, one way or another.

It's fair to say that it may be inadvertently before us. The government may not have meant to put that before us. There are other ways, from my investigation, that they could have brought in amendments which wouldn't have put it before us at this time. But the fact still remains that it is before us here to be dealt with by this Legislature. Because it is, I have to live up to my convictions and the convictions of my party and move an amendment which will provide, when the opportunity arises in the clause-by-clause debate, that the regional chairman of Metropolitan Toronto this year and hereafter will be selected from among the elected members of the Metro council.

I recognize that there are within the bill certain incongruities—I think perhaps that's the right word—that will exist if we pass this amendment to provide for the election. But this is the section that provides the substance of whether the metropolitan chairman is going to be from the elected people. The other sections can be changed by the government if they so wish. If they don't wish and the incongruity remains, it's still workable. It's not the way I'd like to see it, but it is still workable.

The amendments are not very serious ones that would have to be made. In fact, I have them already made out here. I'd be glad to hand them to the parliamentary assistant so that he can—in fact, he already has them—so that he can move them afterwards if he sees fit. In any event, we intend in this party to see that there will be no chairman of Metropolitan Toronto in the future that does not have support at least of a segment of this tremendous city.

An hon. member: That is democracy at work.

An hon. member: Elect Paul Godfrey.

[10:00]

Mr. Swart: I'm not going to go into the principles of it now, or I should say the details of the reasons why I think that he should be elected rather than appointed. I just want to say that those reasons are sound. They are recognized, I hope, by the party on the right. Certainly, all of their utterances and their speeches have been in that direction. I will bring those points out when we come to the amendment.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I say we will support second reading of this bill with two amendments to be put by us.

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to join the debate on Bill 83 and to express, as a member representing a Metropolitan Toronto riding, my thanks on behalf of my other colleagues from Metropolitan Toronto to the member for Welland-Thornold for having the foresight to realize there was an opportunity in this bill to accomplish what the vast majority of members from Metropolitan Toronto want to see happen.

There is no doubt whatsoever that the majority of people, an absolute majority of people in Metropolitan Toronto, are dissatisfied with the present method of appointment of the metropolitan chairman and that an absolute majority of citizens of all boroughs in Metropolitan Toronto desire very much that the regional chairman be elected; that the regional chairman be a member of the metropolitan council and continue to run for election for as long as that person holds the position of metropolitan chairman.

The reason for this is very simple. The chairman of Metropolitan Toronto is the de facto head of one of the largest governments in Canada. The government of Metropolitan Toronto is larger, in terms of budget, staff, service and real power over people's lives than the governments of the majority of Canadian provinces. No single person should have the power of heading up that kind of a government without seeking re-election, without being accountable to the people.

I know the member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Rhodes) agrees with me on this. I can feel it right here.

Mr. Martel: A former mayor.

Mr. Warner: A former Liberal.

Mr. McClellan: As a former mayor, the member for Sault Ste. Marie would understand the principle of accountability at the head of government for the people. All of us believe in that. All of us believe in that.

Mr. Warner: A former minister.

Mr. McClellan: Why have we denied that right to the people of Metropolitan Toronto? It is beyond comprehension. The fact that the chairman of Metropolitan Toronto has not been accountable to the electorate has had real and palpable consequences for the kind of government that has developed at the metropolitan level.

Mr. Stong: You are not suggesting that Paul Godfrey hasn't done a good job, are you? You wouldn't suggest that.

Mr. McClellan: Paul Godfrey. I would suggest that on virtually every opportunity, my friend.

Mr. Warner: He's a turkey with two right wings.

Mr. McClellan: The fact is that the government of Metropolitan Toronto, the bureaucracy of Metropolitan Toronto is a remarkably insensitive and impervious bureaucracy. It is not the kind of bureaucracy that responds to the demands of the citizens because it doesn't have to, because it isn't accountable.

There is a remarkable difference between the responsiveness of municipal government within Metropolitan Toronto at the area level and at the borough level and at the metropolitan level. The borough governments have learned over the last 10 years to listen to citizens who come to them for redress of grievances or to argue on a particular issue or to represent their interests. Borough government within Metropolitan Toronto has grown to be remarkably responsive to the legitimate requests of citizens to make their views and their interests known and to get action from their municipal governments.

At the metropolitan level the situation is exactly the opposite. It is virtually impossible to get through the bureaucracy at the Metro level. I have participated for example, in my own riding on a project, the Frankel-Lambert housing project. I participated together with a group of citizens from the area, with representatives from the city planning boards, with representatives from the city of Toronto housing department, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the Ontario Ministry of Housing, and the Metropolitan Toronto department of social services.

The only group which seemed not to understand at all the dynamics of a participatory planning process that incorporated citizens, politicians and all levels of government, and didn't seem to have the slightest interest in participating in that kind of a planning process was the representatives of the metropolitan corporation.

That is typical. They don't have to be accountable. They're not accountable. They are accountable solely, as public servants, to the administrative head of the metropolitan government, who is an appointed official who never has had to face the people, ever. The situation is growing worse and worse and worse as the metropolitan government gets bigger and bigger and bigger.

Sooner or later we have to draw a halt. The government of Metropolitan Toronto, is, as I said, one of the largest governments in this country. It controls services that affect the men and women of this city more directly than any other level of government. They are running, after all, the social services department and the roads department so they have to be rendered accountable. The only way that can happen is by the marvelous invention of democracy—we must introduce democracy into the government of Metropolitan Toronto. It's not such a terrifying prospect.

Mr. Grande: It's a fundamental principle of society.

Mr. McClellan: The roof isn't going to fall down if the head of the metropolitan government is democratically elected.

Mr. Rotenberg: It is.

Mr. Martel: No. What's your idea of democracy?

Mr. Grande: Here comes the expert. I want to hear you.

Mr. Warner: The member from the insurance bureau.

Mr. McClellan: The member from the insurance industry says that the roof will fall down. Hopefully it will fall on him if it does fall, but of course it won't because there's nothing wrong with democracy. There's nothing wrong with electing the head of a government. There's nothing wrong with requiring that the head of a government face the people and be accountable for his actions at a regular interval. Why he should have to be standing here arguing that case is beyond me.

Mr. Grande: Responsible government. That's what it's all about.

Mr. McClellan: It's incomprehensible, it's unfathomable that he should be standing here in 1978 asking that the head of his government not be elected.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: You don't have to. You don't even have to speak. Sit down.

Mr. Martel: Sure we have to.

Mr. McClellan: We have to.

Mr. McClellan: I may say to the member for Parry Sound that the parliamentary assistant has threatened to withdraw the bill if the member for Welland-Thorold's amendment is passed.

Mr. Martel: Parry Sound—Merle Dickerson.

Mr. Warner: Who said that?

Mr. McClellan: The parliamentary assistant did.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Don't misinterpret what I said. I said you don't have to speak at all if you don't want to.

Mr. Martel: I thought you were looking for Merle Dickerson as the regional chairman for Parry Sound.

Mr. McClellan: I don't have any doubt at all that my constituents are behind me when I'm speaking here; and that the constituents of all my colleagues from Metropolitan Toronto are behind them in supporting the amendment of the member for Welland-Thorold. I say to you, without any doubt at all, that there isn't a constituency in this city that would not, in the majority, approve of the principle of an elected chairman for the metropolitan government. There is no doubt about that at all.

Mr. Rotenberg: That is just your opinion.

Mr. McClellan: And I hope at least my colleagues in the Liberal Party will support the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Please don't refer to the amendment. There is no amendment yet before the House.

Mr. McClellan: I hope my colleagues in the Liberal Party will agree with our view that the bill is deficient as it has been introduced and needs to be improved, and that the amendment which we will be offering serves to improve it simply by requiring that the chairman will continue to be a member of the council for as long as he serves, and that he will continue to face the electorate regularly with all other elected officials throughout the term of his office.

We'll look forward to a stimulating debate on the clause-by-clause when the bill gets to committee. But I say to the government, I hope they will not be so foolish, so arrogant, so silly as to try to defy the will of this House and of the members from Metropolitan Toronto—and of the people of Metropolitan Toronto—by refusing to accede to the will of the House when this bill passes in its final form.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Rotenberg: Resign.

Mr. Warner:—I hope you will appreciate that while I am most concerned about this particular bill and wish to speak on it, I find it quite difficult this evening because of the events which took place prior to this particular order of business. I found it quite disturbing. While I've been here as a member only for a short time, I would have to label it nothing short of contempt by the Premier of this province.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps if you confined your remarks to Bill 83 you will find it much easier.

Mr. Warner: I will. It's quite ironic that we're dealing with Bill 83 tonight because it deals in part, as my colleague from Bellwoods has discussed, with the responsibilities of the head of a government, in this case the head of the Metropolitan Toronto government. It says that the person who is in charge of the Metropolitan Toronto government should be elected and not an appointed person, elected to carry out his or her responsibilities in a fashion which is ultimately responsible back to the people. That's extremely important. Obviously tonight some of that responsibility was forgotten.

I think it's extremely important to keep in mind that municipal governments are creatures of the province, they're not creatures of the federal government. It's part of our obligation here to ensure that those municipal governments as they're created will function in a democratic fashion. That's extremely important. Therefore, I don't understand how it is that the government can say that we don't want a democratic fashion, that we don't want the head of the Metropolitan Toronto government to be responsible to the people in an elected way.

[10:15]

I don't understand, for example, Mr. Speaker, why the government would threaten to withdraw the bill if we managed to make sure that the chairman of Metro Toronto would be elected. Again, I would take that to be quite parallel to earlier events today—contempt for the people of Ontario and, in this instance, the people of Toronto. The people of Toronto want to have an election of their chairman.

Mr. Rotenberg: How do you know?

Mr. Warner: That is what they want.

Mr. Rotenberg: How do you know?

Mr. Ashe: He is an expert on everything.

Mr. Warner: I have never said I am an expert. I appreciate the fact that the government says I am.

An hon. member: They wouldn't elect you.

Mr. Grande: Oh, you don't think so?

Mr. McClellan: That is why they threw you out.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, you have heard the comments of the member for Welland-Thorold and the comments from the member for Bellwoods both of whom spoke quite eloquently and strongly in favour of a basic democratic principle.

I would hope that the members of the Liberal Party heeded the words because, unlike what normally takes place in this assembly, they should understand we are measured, not by our words, but by our deeds.

Earlier this evening they felt that it was sufficient to be measured by their words only and not by their deeds, and so did not have the courage to stand up for principles. I would hope, at least in this instance, they could find the principle worth supporting—that people who represent the public should be elected, and I ask for their support. I ask that at least once they stand up on a matter of principle and support the position of electing people to government, not appointing them.

Mr. Stong: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this bill and I agree basically with what the members for Welland-Thorold and Bellwoods have said about the bill and the lack thereof of the right in the people to elect the chairman of one of the most powerful political bodies that we know of.

But I would also like to remind the members and the party opposite that our critic, the member for Waterloo North, addressed himself to this problem and to the very issue the other day in this House. I would refer to Hansard, Mr. Speaker, because I know that our critic would not want to quote himself. He brought this matter to the attention of the House in this bill and in the other package of bills earlier, the very same issue—the election of the chairman of regional government.

He pointed out that it was our party—and we had held this view for many years—which had spoken in the House on this issue on previous occasions.

Mr. Warner: This is the test.

Mr. Swart: Now is the moment of truth.

Mr. Stong: And I would say, Mr. Speaker, that when the party to my right—left, sorry. I don't want to make that mistake.

Mr. Martel: Sorry.

Mr. Stong: They will never be to my right. You want to believe that.

Mr. Martel: You are right. Even Genghis Khan couldn't be.

Mr. Stong: We hold all of the principles that they have enunciated—accountability to the people and true representation by the people—and we have spoken on those.

Mr. Warner: We are measured by these principles.

Mr. Stong: But, Mr. Speaker, there is one fact of political life that is overlooked at all times by the party on my left—the third party—and that is that the Conservative Party is in control of the legislation that comes before this House and when it comes before this House, they are the only ones in control.

Mr. Warner: Here we go. Gutless wonder.

Mr. Stong: And in so far as they are in control, they can exercise upon us a form of blackmail. That blackmail can take the part of all of what is before us tonight.

Mr. Warner: And you give in.

Mr. Stong: There is a package of bills before us—not just Bill 83, but several bills. One of the bills affects my riding very seriously and the government has full control and authority and we recognize this.

Mr. Warner: The strength of a plate of spaghetti.

Mr. Stong: It is only because of that recognition of the fact they can withdraw these bills that we have to face the fact they are in control. It may be a negative control. It may be a control by denial, a denial of our parliamentary privilege, if you will. It may even be government by veto but, nevertheless, the Conservative Party exercises that veto and that control over us.

Mr. Warner: You have no self respect.

Mr. Stong: It's not a question of self respect.

Mr. Warner: It sure is.

Mr. Stong: It's not a question of trying to defeat the government.

Mr. McClellan: We are not trying to defeat the government. We're trying to get it to face up to it. It's a principle you won't stand up for.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Those members who are interjecting have had an opportunity to speak to this bill.

Mr. Stong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Exercise a little courtesy.

Mr. Kerrio: They didn't say anything.

Mr. Stong: I would say that what we are trying to accomplish here is the situation of trying to get some small thing done rather than nothing done. It's a choice between trying to accomplish something or trying to accomplish nothing. If we follow the route suggested by the third party, absolutely nothing will be accomplished in this House. It is more important that this bill get through with what it offers than by accepting an amendment and having the government withdraw the bill and the package of bills, particularly Bill 81 that affects my riding. I don't think there's any question about where we stand on this very important principle.

Mr. Warner: There is. You have turned tail. You have turned right about.

Mr. Stong: There is no question about where we stand on the issue of the election of the chairmen of regions, but we would rather accomplish something than follow the third party and accomplish nothing.

Mr. Warner: Just gutless.

Mr. Martel: I hadn't intended to speak to this bill until I listened to that mish-mash from my friends to my right who are—

Mr. Stong: You tell the people in my riding that it's mish-mash.

Mr. Martel: —in fact to the right of Genghis Khan.

Mr. Stong: What you offer is mish-mash.

Mr. Martel: If the member's party is prepared to accept that the government can intimidate this Legislature, it would have to do it on all bills. It has already waffled on Bill 70. It is now prepared to waffle on this bill.

Mr. Stong: I am not waffling on anything.

Mr. Martel: You sure are. You are waffling on Bill 70 and you are allowing the Minister of Labour to have her day as she plays games.

Mr. Speaker: Order. We are on Bill 83.

Mr. Martel: We are now talking on Bill 83 with respect to the appointment by the councils of someone who is not accountable to anyone. You hide behind some ridiculous—I don't want to use the word. Let me find a new word, Mr. Speaker, for what I feel.

Interjections.

Mr. Martel: I too come from an area that has a regional council. I recall to the Legislature that we had the benefits of a regional chairman appointed by this government who ultimately resigned after he tried to fire the administrator who was someone the government of Ontario appointed and not he himself. You talk about effrontery when the regional chairman will take it upon himself to fire the administrator appointed by the government of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: There is nothing about Sudbury in Bill 83.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, with the greatest of respect, I am simply putting forward what can and does occur when regional chairmen are appointed. In the case of Sudbury, I am dealing with the appointment of a regional chairman, which is covered in this whole series of bills.

Mr. Laughren: It is called an analogy.

Mr. Martel: It's an analogy. I just draw the analogy to the Speaker's attention.

Hon. Mr. Drea: That is the longest word you've ever used.

Mr. Martel: I am not sure. I used recidivism once. It's a word you have learned about recently.

Hon. Mr. Drea: You are a man of experience in that field.

Mr. Martel: I learn quickly. I am not a slow learner like some of you.

Interjections.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, when I show you the analogy I want to tell you what happens when these appointed individuals are not answerable to anyone and the extremes to which they can go to force their wishes on a council. They are not even answerable to the council ultimately. In the regional council they can play sides. If there are 20 councillors, if they are from the party faithful they can usually pick up support from the party faithful if there are enough of the party faithful on council. They don't run on party labels but they are there.

Because the government of Ontario might have appointed this individual—that council will not take it upon itself to unload the scoundrel if he's no good—because they defend Bill Davis. So they allow him to stay around.

Hon. Mr. Welch: He's not a bad guy.

Mr. Martel: Oh, a lovely fellow. He proved himself tonight.

That's why I say to my friend that one can't allow oneself to be intimidated by threats of withdrawal of bills. Either the principle is sound and we have people in those very key positions, covering hundreds of thousands of people in Toronto—millions—

Mr. Stong: There are lots of things we need right here.

Mr. Martel: Oh, we all need things. But unless you start—

Mr. McClellan: Get up off your hands and knees.

Mr. Martel: If you don't start at the top to establish the principles, the rest doesn't matter. It just doesn't come about.

Mr. Stong: When you're not in control, you have little to lose. You make with the talk.

Mr. Martel: No. Talk has nothing to do with it. I'm just trying to get you fellows up off your knees for a change.

An hon. member: Speak to the bill, Elie.

Mr. Martel: My friend spoke about this party over here wanting to bring the government down. That has nothing to do with it. We want to establish the principle that those—like all of us in this Legislature—

Mr. Stong: Do you want any legislation at all?

Mr. Martel: —who represent people do so by the ballot.

Mr. Rotenberg: Why won't you support direct election to Metro council?

Mr. Martel: And has the appointment of our friend, what's-his-name, as the chairman got anything to do with the democratic process? He reminds me of Dick Dow, who was the mayor of Copper Cliff for 14 years. He never had a vote on his behalf once.

Mr. Kerrio: There's never been an election—

Mr. Martel: Never has been an election in the town of Copper Cliff in all the years that my friend from Sudbury came from there. Confidence? He was ordained. They just laid the hand on and nobody ran against him. That's what happens when you have that type of democratic process.

That's what you've got in Toronto. That guy can play around with ball teams instead of, maybe, housing for people; instead of going to San Francisco. He's not accountable. He can do those things without anyone really—

Mr. Stong: A little compromise.

Mr. Martel: Compromise? Which way?

Mr. Swart: Sellout's the word. Sellout.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. Martel: In other words, what my friend from the Liberal Party is saying is that despite all their prattle the other night—he mentioned his friend from Kitchener—despite his prattle—

Mr. Epp: On a point of order.

Mr. Laughren: Nothing is out of order.

Mr. Epp: On a point of privilege. I think the member for—where's he from anyway?

Mr. McClellan: Where are you from?

Mr. Martel: Sudbury East.

Mr. Epp: On point of privilege. Since the member from Sudbury wants to waste a lot of time tonight, maybe we should try to correct the record, anyway. The fact is that I'm not from Kitchener. I'm from Waterloo.

Mr. Martel: Oh, Mr. Speaker, may I offer my friend from Kitchener my humble apology?

Interjections.

Mr. Martel: But I want to go back to the principle—you've got my apology.

Mr. Kerrio: You haven't been there, Elie. What do you mean, get back to it?

An hon. member: Words without action are prattle.

Mr. Martel: I just heard the last Liberal speaker say that his colleague was the first one to speak about this principle—

Mr. Eakins: When do you start, Elie?

Mr. Martel: —and then he went on for 10 more minutes and gave all kinds of reasons why they weren't prepared to support it. That's having it both ways. But that's typical Liberalism.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Flexibility.

Mr. Martel: Flexibility. That's my friend, the government House leader, putting it in proper perspective—flexibility.

On motion by Mr. Martel, the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Just before moving the adjournment of the House, I wonder if I might make some comments with respect to the business next week? In doing the order of business for next week, particularly with reference to what we might be considering in committee of the whole on Tuesday—

Mr. Martel: We got lots now, Bob.

Hon. Mr. Welch: —I neglected to mention Bills 66 and 91. The House leaders, perhaps, may be allowed the opportunity to arrange the order in which legislation may be called, but I wonder if I may serve notice that included along with those already mentioned earlier today we would include Bills 66 and 91 as well.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the House adjourned at 10:30 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, JUNE 2, 1978

The House met at 10 a.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY

MUSKOKA AND PARRY SOUND TELEPHONE COMPANY

Hon. Mr. Snow: This morning at the appropriate time I will be introducing an act to provide the Ontario Telephone Development Corporation with the statutory means to acquire the assets of the Muskoka and Parry Sound Telephone Company Limited. This action is necessary because the company can neither provide reliable service to its 1,400 subscribers nor supply telephones to new subscribers.

Technical deterioration of the entire system and the company's lack of financial resources to make major and necessary repairs have led to prolonged disruption of services and to an ever-growing number of complaints from subscribers. As recently as last February, my ministry had to provide the company with $50,000 to carry out emergency repairs so that service could be maintained to a limited number of subscribers. Despite our help, these subscribers are paying monthly rates comparable to rates in similar areas for a totally inadequate service.

We feel the two years allowed to this company either to put its affairs in order or negotiate a sale has been ample time to effect improvements. Unfortunately, there have been none. In fact, since July 1977 this company has rejected an offer of purchase from Bell Canada, rejected a proposal for financing and management restructuring by individuals representing other Ontario independent telephone companies and rejected an offer by my ministry to purchase its assets.

Therefore, I feel we have no recourse but to take this step to ensure that the residents of this 800 square mile area in Parry Sound district are provided with the kind of responsible telephone service to which they are entitled. The corporation will operate and maintain the telephone system only until such time as the assets can be sold by public tender to a company or companies which have proven competence in the operation and management of a telephone system.

At this point, I would like to stress that this is an exceptional case. On the whole, the independent telephone companies in this province provide excellent telephone service to the public they serve. In fact, some of them are pioneering improvements to the rural telephone system.

In view of the fact that there is some urgency in this matter, I would appreciate the assistance of the whole House in passing this bill as quickly as it can be scheduled.

ORAL QUESTIONS

HEAVY WATER PRODUCTION

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Minister of Energy: Can the minister give the answer to questions which I asked of the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) in the minister's absence yesterday and tell us specifically the degree of the anticipated surplus of heavy water which Ontario is now facing if they do continue with Bruce D, or if they don't continue with Bruce D? What is the amount of the surplus; can the minister tell us what options he is looking at at this moment; and can he, particularly, tell us what the original anticipated demand was based on, what assumptions that demand was based on, and how those assumptions have gone wrong?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: When I returned from western Canada last night, where I had been meeting with the Minister of Energy and other officials of the government of Alberta, as well as with leaders of the oil and gas industry, I read the transcript of Hansard and the questions raised yesterday.

Had I been here last week, I would have indicated to this House my intention to table a statement, a very important statement—

Mr. Wildman: You've already done that.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —on the whole question of heavy water production in Canada. We have been working on that question for some weeks now; we are now prepared to table a statement. It is our intention to table it next week. I do not think it should be tabled on Monday, because on Monday we are still hoping to table the joint statement of the federal and provincial governments on irradiated fuels. But I do want to assure the Leader of the Opposition that this whole question of heavy water is a very serious one.

Mr. Wildman: Give us a two-hour statement on Thursday.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It is a major one. It is one I have been looking at very closely for the last two weeks. We fully intended to tell the members opposite, as well as every member of this House—

Mr. Wildman: Do you mean to say you're going to table a statement on—

Hon. Mr. Baetz:—everything we know about the subject and also to ask for their support in some proposals we will be making. But I do not wish, sir, at this point to say anything further until that report is tabled next week.

Mr. Warner: We will have a two-hour statement on Thursday.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It will be either on Tuesday or on Thursday.

Mr. Kerrio: You haven't said anything yet.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, given the fact that we are dealing with enterprises costing billions of dollars with many, many jobs involved and we are talking about the cancellation of one of these plants at this point, would the minister not agree that it has been and is his responsibility not merely to promise some statement some time next week, but to answer some very specific questions such as I have put to him regarding the amount of the surplus, what the original assumptions were based on, and when it first came to the minister's attention that there might in fact be a surplus, that the original assumptions might in fact not be correct?

The minister speaks of having done something in the last couple of weeks. When did it first come to his attention that these original assumptions might be incorrect?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I think all of these questions, at least most of them, will be answered when we present the statement.

Mr. Deans: Answer them now.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I just want to underline one thing. It didn't require a question from across the floor for us to realize this was a very serious and important issue—

Mr. S. Smith: I hope not.

Mr. Warner: Where's your irradiated fuel?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We are on top of it, and we will fully share all the information we have. I hope that we will get the support from members opposite for the proposals we are about to make next week.

Mr. Peterson: Mostly you only respond when we ask questions.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Can the minister explain how it is that Ontario Hydro's program for heavy water does not include any agreement with the federal government that we should be able to seek export markets for heavy water produced in this province; and why, as well, Quebec has been able to conclude an agreement with the federal government that involves the federal government buying any surplus heavy water whereas no such agreement exists with Ontario?

Mr. Kerrio: Asleep at the switch.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Once again that question will be answered when we present our report next week.

Mr. Nixon: What does that mean?

Mr. Warner: This is going to be quite a report.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I would again like to say that it doesn't require a member from across the House to ask the question. We've been asking that question ourselves and we will be talking about this in the report next week.

Mr. Warner: Ask yourself questions?

Mr. Kerrio: Stick to answers.

Mr. Nixon: What is the minister talking about?

Mr. Speaker: It's quite obvious the Minister of Energy has said all he's going to say at this time. I don't think any further prodding would add to it. I'm going to recognize the Leader of the Opposition with his second question.

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question which is supplementary and which I think the minister could answer without the statement. It's a very direct question; if he could answer yes or no to it.

Mr. Speaker: I've listened very carefully to the response to the initial question and to the two supplementaries. I don't think you're going to get any more information at this time.

Mr. J. Reed: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: There's nothing out of order in question period with regard to whether or not a minister chooses or doesn't choose to answer a question. That is not a point of order. That's strictly up to the discretion of the minister.

Mr. J. Reed: With respect, I was only going to ask the minister if, in his statement, he would make a specific inclusion.

Mr. Speaker: All right. Try it.

Mr. J. Reed: I wonder if the minister, when he is making his statement concerning the whole heavy-water situation, will specifically include in that statement the rated capacities of the heavy-water projects and the actual performance to date?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Obviously, the statement will include some statistical data.

Mr. Bolan: What are you trying to hide?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: But I'm not prepared to state in any detail at this point what will be included. Wait until next week and the member will find out.

Mr. S. Smith: I actually have a supplementary which I believe the minister could answer, but I won't get into an argument with you, Mr. Speaker.

URBAN TRANSPORTATION DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Mr. S. Smith: To the Minister of Transportation and Communications: The minister, in replying to a question—a reply he tabled yesterday—claims he is unable to provide to this House information regarding the monitoring which his ministry has been doing of the UTDC program, a monitoring program which, among other things, has cost $164,000 partly for the monitoring and partly for other things. He claims that all that information must be kept strictly confidential, even though my question originally asked for the non-proprietary information.

Would the minister please explain to this House why he feels he is not able to provide the results of this monitoring as it deals with whether or not the project is meeting cost targets, whether the major specifications and time frames have been met? In other words, can he not tell us the non-proprietary aspects of what this monitoring program has shown with regard to UTDC, without giving away any trade secrets?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I would have to discuss with my technical staff whether there is any way to divide the monitoring aspects that are being carried out.

Under the agreement between the ministry and UTDC, UTDC is carrying out the development of the ICTS program. UTDC have many subcontracts with, for instance, Canadair and others. When they are developing a new technology, all those contracts require that the development of this technology should not be made public or should not be passed to others who should not have this information. After all, we're developing a new concept, new research and development and, presumably, items that will eventually be covered by patent.

[10:15]

The monitoring of information that is being carried out includes the monitoring of all this technical information. I'm not sure that I can divide the monitoring. Things vary from month to month. One month a certain aspect may be running a week or two weeks behind schedule. The next month it may have caught up. It varies, as I understand it. The monitoring group within the ministry that is working with UTDC reports regularly to my deputy minister.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, since no one is asking for information regarding secret designs or drawings which may eventually be patented and so on; since all we are asking for are the regular reports as to whether the whole project is on cost target and on schedule and whether they've had to switch from their originally anticipated basic design thrusts into something totally different and so on; and since this is very basic information that the public ought to have because the public is funding it and also funding the monitoring, will the minister please explain why it is not possible for him to share with us those non-proprietary aspects of the information which has resulted from the monitoring which his ministry has been doing?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I'll take those specific questions of the Leader of the Opposition under consideration.

Mr. S. Smith: Further supplementary: Lest in his eventual answer to me the minister makes use of section 12.03 in the development and review agreement between his ministry and the UTDC which suggests that "the minister shall not disclose any information related to data and industrial property, the designs, drawings and related documents or any other information," lest he decides to take shelter behind that, I would like him to explain why he would sign a document which prevents any kind of information, even non-proprietary information, from being given out?

Second, will he tell us whether the contingency fund and the inflation allowance, which are supposed to last the UTDC for another couple of years at least, have all been used up and if not, what remains in that fund?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I obviously signed the agreements on the advice of the government and the legal counsel of the ministry who worked at some length with UTDC in the development of this somewhat complicated agreement.

I will inquire as to the status of the program, and whether there are any aspects that are behind schedule. I will inquire as to the status of the contingency fund. As I understand now from the most recent report I had, everything was working out quite well as far as budget and schedule are concerned, although there was some delay in the overall schedule because of the delay in establishing the location of the test facility at Kingston. This may have the overall program somewhat behind what was originally announced some time ago.

I was in Montreal last week. I visited Canadair's facilities and viewed some of the development work being carried out in the Canadair shops. I must say I was quite impressed with the progress being made.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Ottawa Centre with his first question.

Mr. Cassidy: I was going to ask a supplementary on the last one, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister undertake to table the non-proprietary information in his estimates since the estimates are coming forward within a couple of weeks, probably before the end of the session? Then the Legislature itself can be informed and can make decisions about how useful that material is.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I was going to suggest that a moment ago. I haven't discussed with the House leader recently exactly where the estimate schedule is. The last I heard was that we will probably be before the committee in a week or two. The committee will no doubt be examining this in detail. Officials from UTDC will be available to the committee to answer any questions that they can, but I have to impress upon the members of the House that this is a very highly technical development in competition with other industries and with other countries; the asset of the province of Ontario in developing this must be protected.

FRENCH-LANGUAGE SERVICES

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question to the Premier, arising out of what happened here in this chamber yesterday afternoon and in this building early in the evening. You may recall, Mr. Speaker, the sense we all had of participating in a historic occasion in the debate on Bill 89, and the very constructive kind of results that we thought ensued. I do want to express regret—

Mr. Speaker: You'll have to do it by way of a question.

Mr. Cassidy: Okay. I do want to express regret about the decision of the Premier that was announced in the press release shortly thereafter. In view of the fact that the Premier's press release on Bill 89 was obviously prepared well before the bill was voted upon at 5:50 yesterday, can the Premier tell the House who took the decision not to allow the bill to go beyond second reading, when that decision was taken and how, subsequently, the government could allow two of its senior ministers to speak and endorse the bill when they would have known that the government did not intend to proceed with the bill any further?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I will take a little longer to answer this question because—

Mr. Swart: Because there's a lot to answer for.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —I understand that the member for Scarborough whatever—

Mr. Warner: Scarborough-Ellesmere.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —Scarborough-Ellesmere was concerned about matters of privilege. The former House leader for the Liberal Party, I think really quite accurately defined the question of the procedures of this House.

I would like to say to the leader of the New Democratic Party that as a matter of policy I have not involved myself in private members' bills debates.

Mr. Kerrio: You're too busy writing out statements.

Hon. Mr. Davis: At the same time, I think it is incumbent upon me, after listening to those debates, to state what is the policy of the government so that there is no misunderstanding. It was with that intent that the statement was issued after listening to the debate, which I did yesterday afternoon.

There is nothing in my statement that interferes with the procedures of this House. The member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) has asked that this bill be referred to the justice committee, and there is nothing in my statement that precludes that happening. What I am anxious for the members of this House to understand and, perhaps just as important, the public of Ontario, is what the policy of the government is. That is my responsibility. I think it is fair to state that if I had made no statement, I would have been asked—in fact, the phones were ringing in the office about 5:30 asking, "What is the position?"

This is not an unusual procedure. When the member for Essex South (Mr. Mancini) introduced his bill on the age of consumption of alcohol, I did not participate in that debate. But at the conclusion of that debate I did seize the opportunity to enunciate what the policy of the government was. Surely that is my responsibility.

It is fine for the leader of the New Democratic Party to say that I have usurped the privileges of the House. That is categorically untrue. I could have delayed this statement perhaps until the justice committee had dealt with it. I can hear the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere rising up on his Magna Carta and suggesting then that I had usurped the privileges of the members of the House.

I think that I have an obligation and a responsibility to enunciate what is the policy of the government. I think it is important that the members of this House know what that policy is. I don't want to see expectations or other than expectations developed in this process if ultimately what I said yesterday is going to be the position of the government, which it is.

Any reasonable person, in assessing this, can disagree with the policy. I don't quarrel with that. I would say to the leader of the New Democratic Party, we know what his party's policy is. They would declare this province to be legally and officially bilingual. I understand that.

Mr. Cassidy: I would make French an official language.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I understand that the bill introduced by the member for Ottawa East contained in it something that, as I listened to at the debate, all members of this House supported. That was the concept of providing services in the French language for the Franco-Ontarian citizens of this province. I don't quarrel with that.

Mr. Roy: In a statutory framework.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Certainly the difference is the question of the statutory framework. I don't argue this. I am anxious that the members, and just as importantly the public, understand this.

If the Liberal Party of Ontario wants to disagree, if they want to pursue the question of the statutory framework, that is right and proper, and there is nothing to preclude the justice committee. But I think I have to make one or two other observations: I am totally in support of the concept of the private members' hour.

Mrs. Campbell: Ha.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member for St. George can give her cynical laugh, and smile in her rather cynical way, but I have supported the concept. We have not raised what I think are on occasion some fairly fundamental issues that arise out of the private members' bills that do involve some pretty extensive expenditure of funds. I think it is fair to state that some private bills have probably gone beyond that which was intended in terms of the functioning of private members' bills.

I would also doubt if the leader of the New Democratic Party thought this through carefully. He anticipated that on a matter of this sensitivity and importance, if a decision were made that this was the right route to go. It is obvious this matter would be introduced by way of a government bill.

This takes nothing away from the interest—I believe a sincere interest—on the part of the member for Ottawa East. It takes nothing away from this being a proper mechanism to discuss this issue in the House, to bring this to the attention of the public of this province. But we do not operate under a congressional system of government. Government under our system must assume the ultimate responsibility.

On a matter that is this sensitive, a matter that is of interest to the vast majority of people in this province, I think it would have been hypocritical of me to turn it around on some who were saying the other. If I had stayed quiet for another two or three weeks, or a month and let the committee go through its process, it would have been wrong to then say, "The policy of the government is such and such."

I extend my appreciation to the Leader of the Opposition because he went far further than I thought he would in supporting the present policy of the government of this province. I must confess I was both pleased and somewhat surprised to hear it.

Mr. Worton: That's what fooled you.

Mr. Roy: That's why we were so disappointed.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member for Ottawa East I know has a personal interest in this. I believe it is a sincere interest.

Mr. Peterson: We have all got a personal interest—every one of us.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That's fine. All right, we all have a personal interest.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Just ignore the interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The difference of opinion is the vehicle we use, or the approach we take to attain those objectives that members of this House supported yesterday. Surely that is where the difference of point of view exists. There is nothing to preclude, in the rules of this House, the justice committee taking that bill.

But I think it is only fair for the members to know and the public to know that we believe the policy we have under way, to which we are totally committed, is working and working relatively well. It has worked without any significant divisiveness. It has been, I think, in general terms, acceptable, and this is the route that the government feels we should proceed with.

So with great respect to his motion for adjournment last night, the questions raised as to the privileges of members of this House, I have never intentionally abused, nor shall I abuse, the privileges of the members of this House. I say, with respect, in this instance, in procedural terms or in any other terms, these privileges have not been abused.

The debate yesterday was on a private member's bill. I heard newscasts yesterday morning saying "government bill for the entrenchment or enshrinement of French-language rights to be debated." There is not the same perception or understanding by even some people in the media, and certainly not in terms of the general public, as to the differential between a private member's bill, and a government bill. I think it is fair to state most members in this House understand if it is a matter of real substance it should be discussed. But as to the initiative, or lack of initiative, whichever way you wish to phrase it, that ultimate responsibility must fall upon the government.

That is how our system works. There is nothing in what I said yesterday, there is nothing in what I am saying this morning, that in any way, in my view, prejudices the privileges of the members of the House.

The leader of the New Democratic Party can say I am wrong in my statement. He can say his position is right. He can say to the public of this province that this province should become officially or legally bilingual. That's his right. I don't happen to agree with it. That is my right. As leader of the government I think I have an obligation to state it so that there isn't any misunderstanding.

Perhaps the position of the Liberal Party of Ontario is to enshrine or entrench these rights in a statutory form. I don't quarrel with that, but that is not the present policy of this government. I think that is what the discussion is about. That is what I hope my statement makes very clear. It does not in any way—and I hope my statement made this clear—detract from the motivation of the sincerity of what we are doing for the Franco-Ontarian population. I'll take a back seat to no one in this House in terms of my commitment to the provision of these French-language services to Franco-Ontarians.

Mr. di Santo: That's not what the Franco-Ontarians want.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say that I take some pride in what has been accomplished. Some can debate whether it has gone fast enough or far enough. That's a matter of judgement. It's not an easy issue for me to deal with because not only are the rights of the Franco-Ontarians of great concern to me, but there is also the concern of the general public of this province, and their acceptance to a certain extent. I think that is the responsibility of government too. I can't ignore that sensitivity either.

I would say to the leader of the New Democratic Party that if the committee in its wisdom wishes to pursue discussion of the bill of the member for Ottawa East—

Mr. di Santo: It's a waste of time.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —there is nothing in the rules of this House to preclude it. I have not in any way prejudiced the rights of the members. I cannot have that process go ahead with people assuming that that bill is automatically going to be passed with or without amendment, when I know that is not the policy of the government. I say with respect to have done anything else would have been hypocritical. I think it is important for the members of this House and the members of the public to understand the position of the government. That's why the statement was issued late yesterday afternoon.

I would only say in conclusion that in answer to the question I hope I have touched upon those matters of privilege that were raised by two or three members. I just overheard the member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt) who has had a fair amount of experience. I think he summed it up very well. The rights of the members have not been prejudiced. Under the rules, it can go to committee. What I did in my statement was make it clear what the policy or position of the government of the province of Ontario was on this issue. To have done anything else would have been hypocritical and would have perhaps abused the privileges of the members of this House. That is why I determined to make that statement.

(Applause)

Mr. Speaker: Order. Because of the importance the House is placing on this issue, and because I have given the Premier more latitude than ordinarily, I'm going to add six minutes to the question period.

Mr. S. Smith: He should have issued a statement.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: I want to say that I think if the Minister of Education and the minister responsible for Franco-Ontarian affairs looked ashen, it is because what the Premier has said was in complete contradiction of a number of points they made in the Legislature yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Nonsense.

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. Cassidy: I also want to express concern that by saying the government will not proceed with this bill, that is in fact a direct interference with the procedures of the House.

Instead of using the parliamentary devices which are available under the new private members' rules in order to vote against a bill, or state the government's intentions in not proceeding with the bill, or have 20 members of the government party stand in order to prevent the bill being voted upon—all of which are devices which are open to the government—is it the government's policy in future to toy with the Legislature and impose the kind of hip-pocket veto which the Premier imposed last night by coming out with his statement after the Legislature had debated the bill rather than before or during the debate?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I can almost conjure up without much difficulty the rhetoric that would have been used by the leader of the New Democratic Party if I had made such a statement prior to the discussions yesterday afternoon.

Mr. di Santo: The Premier was bluffing.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would only repeat what I said. On these issues which I think are sensitive—and I was anxious to have the discussions on this bill yesterday—it would have been, in my view, improper for me to say at the outset of the debate that this is the policy, that there is no point in having any discussion, having these views aired in this Legislature. The leader of the New Democratic Party would then be using language that might then be unparliamentary in terms of his reaction.

I would only say to the leader of the New Democratic Party, he can call it what he wants. What I issued last night was a statement made in conscience, one with a full knowledge of the concern and sensitivity of the issue, the concern that this government has, the policy it has with respect to our Franco-Ontarians; and it was issued with that completely in front of us.

Mr. Swart: After Handleman got to you.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We can debate this here, Mr. Speaker, the leader of the New Democratic Party and myself. He can be as sarcastic as he wishes. He can suspect my motivation but, Mr. Speaker, I will look at what has been done for the past number of years. I will assess very carefully what we have done in terms of programs for the Franco-Ontarians, and I will not take a back seat to the leader of the New Democratic Party on that issue one bit.

Mr. Roy: A supplementary to the Premier: This is not a question, Mr. Speaker; I say this very bluntly. There is such a gap between what the Premier sometimes says standing, viva voce, as we say, and his brutal statements.

In view of his position which, apparently, has changed—because in February he did not exclude the statutory framework—why would the Premier allow two of his members of cabinet to at least leave us with the impression that they were in support of this bill?

Secondly, in view of the good faith that he is trying to put forward here this morning, why would he put out a statement which reflected some things that were never intended in this bill? For instance, on page two: "Neither shall we be taking any steps to declare French an official language in Ontario." That is something that the bill did not talk about, did not intend. Why would he put out a statement which said that this government is going to avoid the kind of bitterness and intemperate debate that has all too often accompanied the bilingual programs of our federal counterparts? That is something which we again wanted to avoid and something that the debate yesterday clearly avoided.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I thought the member for Ottawa East would really be more perceptive than has been indicated here this morning.

As I understand—because there is another party in this House in opposition besides his own—the official position of the New Democratic Party in the province of Ontario is, in fact, to have two official languages in the province of Ontario.

Mr. di Santo: That had nothing to do with the bill.

Mr. Roy: It was not their bill. It was our bill.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am restating and did restate in this statement that if the New Democrats want to be at all consistent, if that bill goes to committee and they don't move an amendment to make French an official language in the province of Ontario, then they have to be described as being totally hypocritical. I didn't want any one in this province to feel that we were in the process or would support any such amendment if this bill goes to committee.

An hon. member: Bill, that's their problem.

Mr. Martel: You were playing a waiting game.

Hon. Mr. Davis: In my statement I was not dealing with the precise terms of the bill. I was dealing with the policy of this government, I was dealing with what is the proposed policy of the New Democrats, and to have ignored that in any statement, I think would have been improper. In fact I am surprised the member for Ottawa East isn't delighted that I included that statement in, so it makes it very clear why it is there.

What was the second point the member raised? I think the answer to the first is very obvious.

Mr. Lewis: There were two cabinet ministers involved.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Once again, this relates to the debate that has taken place on "official bilingualism." Once again the New Democrats, in order to be consistent, would have to, in any discussion of this bill in committee, move amendments that would move in the direction of their stated policy. Under their democratic party system although the previous leader took—

Mr. Mackenzie: We sure don't need your advice to run this party.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have to tell those members this: Their previous leader had the intestinal fortitude to depart from party policy on occasion. That's why he had the measure of success—thank heavens, not too successful—that he had. Their present leader is hide-bound and totally—

Mr. Swart: You only got minority government the second time.

Hon. Mr. Davis: All right, but look where you people moved. You moved further to the left than you were before.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order. I don't know whether the Premier has an answer to the specific question that the member for Ottawa East posed. That was with regard to the participation of two ministers in the debate yesterday. If the Premier has a brief answer to that, I will hear it. If not, I am going to allow two more supplementaries, one from each of the two opposition parties and then we will move on to another subject.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to what my two colleagues said. I think if honourable members will reread what they said, they will find nothing inconsistent with the observations that I made in my statement or here in the House this morning.

Mr. Lewis: What about your cabinet colleagues?

Hon. Mr. Davis: That's what I mean.

Mr. Cassidy: Is the Premier aware that the most constructive thing that could have come from the debate yesterday would have been a commitment by the government that, given the unanimous view of the Legislature about legislative enshrinement of French-language rights, the government would bring forward a bill and have it enacted by the end of the year? Is he aware that the most destructive consequence arising out of the debate on Bill 89 was the way in which the Premier handled this issue and that it will ring for a long time in a very damaging way in terms of the future of the country and be seen as being very destructive in Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: Is that a question?

Mr. Cassidy: In the second place—

Mr. Speaker: Is that a question?

Mr. Cassidy: It's half a question. The second half of the question, Mr. Speaker, is: Is the Premier aware that by his actions yesterday, he has totally emasculated the private members' hour process here and therefore abrogated the rights of the members of this Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will answer both questions and I will answer the second part of the question first. I answer it without any reservation whatsoever. I will repeat what I said: As head of government on an issue of this sensitivity, if I had not made my statement I think it would have been unwise and I think it would have been unfair to the members of this House. My stating the position of the government related to a private member's bill does not emasculate, as he used the term, the private members' hour in this Legislature. I think he knew the answer to that question before he asked it.

With respect to the first part of the question, it's very difficult to assess the impact of whatever decision is made in terms of the direction of the rights our Franco-Ontarians may have with respect to the rest of the country. But no one has worked more carefully than I to see that this sensitivity is understood and that this province and this government does not take steps to make the situation more difficult.

[10:45]

I would only say to the leader of the New Democratic Party, whose private member once again has introduced a bill which I know some of my colleagues—because they happen to live in the same geographic area—would be moved to support with respect to retaliation—there is no other word for it—for some of the policies of the government of the province of Quebec, he can't have it both ways. He can't urge me to show this contradiction and at the same time urge his own members to introduce legislation that is totally retaliatory in nature and, which I say with respect, might achieve the same degree of misunderstanding in our sister province of Quebec as the member suggests my statement of last evening might do. I say there is a slight contradiction in his own approach to this rather important issue.

Mr. Bounsall: It is a totally different issue.

WOMEN APPRENTICES

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Minister of Colleges and Universities. Is the minister aware that at the Status of Women Joint Councils conference which is being held this week, the Ontario Status of Women Council has expressed concern about the new employer-centred training program and has recommended specifically that a training program be set up with specific emphasis on recruiting women to prepare them for entry into the non-traditional trade areas from which they are almost totally excluded in apprenticeship programs today; and that it has recommended that governments work with employers and unions to set targets for the entry of women into apprenticeship schemes?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I am not aware of that specific issue. I do say, however, that in the last year and a half to two years there have been some very significant breakthroughs in the role of women in our society in programs that have not heretofore seen the entry of women as apprentices. We could give you all kinds of illustrations of that fact. The new brochure we had printed not too long ago puts a high profile on that very fact.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Given the fact that last year there were about 10 women in apprenticeship programs in carpentry, electricians' work, ironwork, motor vehicle maintenance, auto body and electrical and fuel, as compared to about 15,000 men in those particular programs, would the minister not agree that the progress, if any, has been infinitesimal? Can he indicate the means by which he will ensure that the new employer-centred program will not perpetuate the existing pattern of discrimination against women in apprenticeship programs?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We've discussed this item in this House before. On that occasion and again today, I take considerable exception to the thought that there is discrimination, especially as it relates to our ministry. To the very contrary, we have made a conscious effort to give equal opportunity. The member asks what I will do to ensure that. That's precisely what we're going to do—to ensure that there is that equal opportunity that now exists. If the women of our society choose to do otherwise, it is their right to do so.

I am not about to say that there will be 50-50 representation in each apprenticeship program; that would not ensure very much equality to anyone. We will give them the opportunity; if they choose to exercise it, that will be just fine by us.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Can the minister say just what specific steps will be taken, given the fact that whether or not the opportunity has existed in the past, it has clearly been virtually meaningless since almost no women have gained entry to those particular apprenticeship programs?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I will have to repeat myself. We are advertising. We are making that program known in a very extensive way for the women of Ontario to have those opportunities. They will have to take the next step. They must come forward and offer themselves as candidates in the apprenticeship programs. We can't take that step for them, and I am certainly not going to propose that we legislate that kind of activity.

PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSIONS

Mr. Epp: I have a question of the Minister of Energy with respect to public utilities commissions. Now that the minister has informed us that there are 19 mayors serving in seven regions on public utilities commissions who have not been elected for many years, some dating back to the early 1970s, would he share his views with us whether this is democratically right and what his intentions are with respect to correcting this situation?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, I think the basic principle governing the question of whether the local public utilities commission members should be elected or appointed is a basic question that we feel should be left to local governments. We know there is a strong tradition for elected commission members. We also know in some communities there is an equally strong tradition for locally appointed members. In some places one works best, in other places the other system works best. Frankly, our policy continues to be to have local option, if one may use that term, exercised on this matter.

As the honourable member opposite has indicated, there are some rather curious statistics and what appears to us at least to be a rather curious arrangement. But we assume, especially in regions such as the sophisticated one of Kitchener-Waterloo, where sound judgement always prevails among the fine people of that region—

Mr. Breithaupt: They always vote Liberal.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —all relatives of mine—

Mr. Conway: You almost ended up there, Reuben. Remember that?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —that the system, as it prevails, is working and it's working well.

Mr. Gaunt: You would have been a Liberal in Kitchener, you know.

Mr. Epp: I want to thank the minister for his compliments with respect to the Waterloo area. Since I served on a restructuring committee of the public utilities commission and on a public utilities commission where we had ex-mayors who were defeated at the polls and no longer had the support of the public, and with the embarrassed public standing back a little and viewing this situation and wondering what the position of the government was going to be on this, does the minister really believe that these people should continue to serve on public utilities commissions despite the fact that they were defeated some six, seven or eight years ago and no longer have the confidence of the public? Does he stand here in support of those?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Have you checked the Senate lately?

Mr. Epp: Or is he going to give this House the benefit of introducing legislation to correct these anomalies, in view of the fact that we had two bills dealing with public utilities restructuring passed last July and only one is before us this year?

Mr. J. Reed: Old Tories never die. They sit on PUCs.

Hon. B. Stephenson: At least they don't lose their faculties as old Liberals do.

Mr. Conway: You've been on both sides, Bette.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I'm rather surprised that the honourable member would address these questions—and they may be very good and real questions—to the Minister of Energy for this province. I think he ought to be addressing these questions to the local government, because they have the option. If the system looks like a bit of pork-barrelling, then, for heaven's sake, change the system. But it's up to the good burghers of Waterloo to do so.

Mr. J. Reed: That is what you are supposed to do.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, may I try to correct the record here? I think the minister—

Mr. Speaker: If you have a question, yes.

Mr. Epp: In view of the fact that we have a restructured public utility in the region of Waterloo, will the minister please correct the record with respect to that and give us the benefit of his views with respect to the questions I asked earlier?

Mr. Mancini: Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I can't answer the question in a clearer way.

Mr. Breithaupt: That's the problem.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You have the law, and you make up your mind in that region whether you want to elect or appoint these people.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Labour: Has the minister yet received the final copies of the last five chapters of the report on the financial restructuring of the Workmen's Compensation Board which she indicated on Monday she expected to receive today?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. They arrived at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Bounsall: Supplementary: Now that she has it; will she table that report so we may all see it and have the same opportunity as the minister has had to peruse the recommendations? Secondly, in the consideration she will be making for the presentation of the bill we expect to receive in June, will she ensure that the pensions of the totally permanently disabled, the minimums thereof, be adjusted by at least the cost of living, if not the same percentage increase in salaries and wages, and that the widows' and widowers' pensions, for some years exactly equal to those minimum fully disabled pensions, be restored to that level?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, it is my intention, as I mentioned in this House, to table this document as soon as we have enough copies available. We are in the process of printing them for the members of the House right at the present time. I would think that probably by the end of next week we shall have sufficient copies to distribute to all members.

I don't think I can outline the exact amounts of increases in benefits specifically today, but certainly my concern is that, indeed, those areas in which benefits need to be increased rather dramatically should receive our attention immediately, and that with the co-operation of all parties in this House those amendments could be put through the House in very short order.

Mr. Haggerty: It's been three years.

Mr. Mancini: Supplementary: Could the minister give assurance to this House that she will no longer carry out a policy of making the injured workers wait three years for their increase in pensions? Could she also assure the House that she will have a policy of annual increments for the injured workers as far as their pensions are concerned?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Various methods of ensuring the increment of benefits for pensioners of the Workmen's Compensation Board have been proposed by the joint consultative committee, by The Wyatt Company and by others, and all of these methods are being examined. Whether we will have the final presentation regarding that method ready before the end of June, I can't say at this point. I do think we should move ahead with the improved benefits at this time, at any rate.

Mr. di Santo: Supplementary: Can the minister indicate to this House if, in the bill which she is going to present to the House, there is any particular section which is going to deal with those pension increases?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

HIGHWAY 6

Mr. G. I. Miller: I have a question for the Minister of Transportation and Communications. Given the fact that the 6,500-acre industrial park and Stelco steelmaking complex at Nanticoke will be in production by the year 1980, and given the fact that the Texaco oil refinery will be in production this year, and in view of the fact that the traffic through Caledonia causes enormous problems at present, could the minister inform me of the current development stage of the Highway 6 corridor?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I'm sure the honourable member is aware that in our green book of our construction program for the last fiscal year we did show the Caledonia bypass as a part of our program for that year. Unfortunately, it was not built or started during last year's program because we did not receive the approval and the board orders for the two railway grade separations involved in the bypass.

We have again shown the bypass in our program for the current year. As of this date, we have still not got the final approval for those grade separations, although I did have a letter about 10 days ago from the Honourable Otto Lang advising that there would be approval coming through in the reasonably near future for about 18 grade separations throughout the province, among which the two on the Caledonia bypass were included.

He forewarned me at that time not to award any contracts for any of these jobs, because if we did so before getting his final approval that would disqualify them for any grants. I'm still not in a position to proceed with the advertising of the contracts for the Caledonia bypass.

I will tell the honourable member that Wednesday tenders closed for a resurfacing contract on Highway 6 from the north boundary of the town of Caledonia, or the built-up section of Caledonia, to the Hamilton-Wentworth boundary. This is for resurfacing and intersection improvements on that section of the highway. The tenders were received Wednesday and I expect the contract will be awarded probably early next week.

[11:00]

That is all we have planned on the Highway 6 corridor at this time.

CENTRAL PARK HOUSING PROJECT

Mr. Philip: I have a question for the Premier concerning the decision by the Ontario Municipal Board and the cabinet to approve a 450-unit housing development known as Central Park to be built less than a mile south of the airport. Has the Premier read the allegations of Alderman O'Brien of Etobicoke, as reported in the Toronto Star, that the OMB and the cabinet made decisions which were reached on the basis of inaccurate information concerning noise levels? If so, has he done any investigation of these allegations?

Can the Premier give the House any reason why the cabinet has gone against the wishes of the Etobicoke council and the residents in the area and is in fact allowing housing rather than industry in this area, which the mayor has described as being "so close to the flight path that living there will be the equivalent of having a propeller next to one's ear"?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Where's your propeller in your ear?

Hon. B. Stephenson: They'll elect a new member.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I had an observation that the Minister of Transportation and Communications wanted me to pass on but I won't.

I will look into that for the honourable member. I am only going by memory, but my recollection is that the cabinet, on the appeal, supported the decision of the OMB. I will check that out and get any information that I can for the member.

Mr. Philip: If the Premier's information is correct, I would hope that in the light of the council's objection and the objection of the residents he might review that decision.

I wonder if the Premier agrees with Mayor Flynn's statement, also reported in the press, that were the Etobicoke council to ignore or delay implementing the OMB and cabinet decision, as suggested by some council members, the council would be open to a contempt charge. The borough's solicitor, John Reble has also said, and I quote, "The borough would risk incurring the wrath of the OMB that could be reflected in future decisions." Does the minister feel revenge should be a factor influencing OMB decisions, as seems to be suggested by Mr. Reble?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Oh, that's a lawyer's opinion.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Not only should it not be, I am satisfied that it is not.

OHIP CLAIMS PROCEDURE

Mr. Conway: My question is to the Minister of Health. In the matter of the case of Dr. Takahashi, I am wondering if the minister could indicate to the House, and through the House to the patients involved, how it is exactly they will be reimbursed through the Ontario Health Insurance Plan and when they will be reimbursed? As he knows, a good number of those patients have been out of pocket, in some cases for a considerable period of time, and in other cases for considerable amounts of money.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As the honourable member knows, under the usual methods of processing claims an opted-out physician would send us a claim card, and based on that we would send a cheque to the patient. In this case, and this is really what the whole matter revolves around, the physician, for whatever reasons, has not done that with his patients—I think we had only one claim card from Dr. Takahashi.

With regard to the people affected in this case, we are trying to reconstruct their claims based either on receipts or cancelled cheques that they might have, or where none of this exists, on sworn affidavits of what was paid. We hope to begin sending out cheques within the next two weeks to these patients.

As you know as well, the doctor in question was before the college yesterday and his licence has been suspended.

Mrs. Campbell: In view of the hardships which have been occasioned by this practice, has the minister any statement to make to this House as to what procedures he would institute to ensure that it cannot happen again?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In answer to the member for St. George, I believe that when the matter first arose I indicated that I would move to amend the act—this will probably be in the fall—to require the filing with the plan within a given period of time. I believe in this present case that we are looking at cards for six months.

I would emphasize that this is one doctor out of close to 15,000. It is the first time it has happened in the nine years we have in that business, so to speak, and considering we processed 53 million claims last year that should not be taken as a criticism of the whole profession, but we must ensure that there is something in there so that if anybody else has the idea that they would like to try to pull this they won't be able to.

ENERGY CONSERVATION

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the member for Halton-Burlington (Mr. J. Reed)—and I didn't have an opportunity to give this information to the Minister of Energy, because I knew he was pursuing the other questions raised with the Treasurer yesterday—asked me a day or two ago, in a rather slow period, since a certain Mr. Wright—who will become manager of the northeastern region—was with energy conservation and he was moving, whether Hydro would not be interested in energy conservation.

The same press report that contained Mr. Wright's move stated in the last paragraph—I'll just read it to the honourable member so that he will have a comfortable weekend: "The high priority that has been given to energy conservation by the corporation will continue. The reassignment of responsibility for this important work will be announced later."

Mr. J. Reed: As a supplementary, during this slow period, is the position of director of energy conservation going to be kept open? It seems to me the press release says the responsibility will be reassigned. My concern is that the importance that has been attached to this office in the past may not be in the future because of a reassignment or a lumping of this responsibility in with somebody else.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I can't answer that. I am sure the Ministry of Energy will get that specific information. I think the relevant part of the press release was: "The high priority that has been given to energy conservation by the corporation will continue." I think that was really the basis of the question of the honourable member, as to whether this would continue as a priority. The statement says clearly it does.

Mr. J. Reed: The question is, one wonders whether it will continue with the same priority as has been given in the past, and there is no indication in that press release that the same level of activity or the same priority will be continued.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I can't argue the content of the press release from Hydro. All I can say is that it says "the high priority"—I think high is probably as good a descriptive word as one can use—"will continue." I am sure the minister will provide more specific information at the beginning of the week, but I think the member can be assured that the corporation is not moving away from its conservation approach.

Mr. S. Smith: I know the minister's views on conservation.

Mr. J. Reed: I will not rest easy this weekend.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You will have your information next week.

WOMEN'S HEALTH SERVICES

Ms. Bryden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question of the Minister of Health. Yesterday the Ontario Status of Women Council issued a very disturbing report on the health care that women in this province are receiving, and the way they are being short-changed in the delivery of health care and are being exposed to very serious health hazards, both in the workplace and in the kind of treatment they are receiving.

I would like to ask the minister what steps he is taking to see that affirmative action programs are developed in the whole health delivery field to ensure that more women are in positions where their views and concerns will be considered in decision making on delivery of programs?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I haven't seen the final version of that report—it hasn't got to me today—although I would point out that I did direct that the ministry provide in excess of $4,000 to assist the council on the status of women and the publication of that report.

There are two primary issues that concern me the most, and which are being acted on. The first is the question of the use of drugs. That is a matter that is under regular review by the Addiction Research Foundation, and it is a matter which I know concerns all professional educators in medicine and in all the colleges, not just the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

The second has to do with the question of unnecessary surgery. The honourable member may know that we have established a task force with the medical profession to look at the question of unnecessary surgery, not just as it relates to surgery on women, but on everyone.

Ms. Bryden: Supplementary: Can the minister tell us what action he is taking in the form of affirmative action to get more women involved in decision making in the health delivery field? That was really my question.

I don't think he has answered it. Also, regarding the question of women in the workplace, what is he doing about the dangerous chemicals to which women are exposed and which may affect their future children?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As the honourable member knows, environmental and occupational health matters, while they are of continuing interest to me and to the Ministry of Health, are matters for which the responsibility rests with two of my colleagues.

As far as the question of affirmative action is concerned, within the ministry itself we do have a very strong and active affirmative action program under Ms. Betty Pie. She, working with our management development group under Mr. Rand, based on the latest affirmative action report on our ministry, is really starting to make progress.

I'm sure the member is aware that within the profession itself the numbers of undergraduate female students in medicine is, to the best of my knowledge, as high or higher than it has ever been. About a third or better of the undergraduate enrolment in medicine is female. That's very encouraging, plus the growing emphasis in medical education in this province on family practice, on the concerns of prevention and of family practice.

HYDRO BUILDING

Mr. Kerrio: I have a question of the Minister of Energy. I raised this question some time ago with the then Minister of Energy and it relates to the Hydro building at 620 University Avenue. Does the minister have any plans for that building?

Mr. Roy: Oh, yes, for the last four or five years.

Mr. Kerrio: Or does he expect that we're going to have another three years of that great white elephant lying empty there?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, as far as government plans for that are concerned, that would be a question for my colleague, the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Henderson).

Mr. Kerrio: Is the minister aware of the fact the said minister is out attempting to rent and lease office space?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I would be exaggerating and not telling the truth if I tried to say here that I knew everything my colleague, the Minister of Government Services, was up to.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT REVIEWS

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Premier. As a result of a report which came yesterday, it would appear that the cabinet will be determining on Wednesday next the fate of the Stewart commission report as it relates to Hamilton-Wentworth and regional government. Given that the final date for submissions is June 5, which is Monday, and even the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) with all his ability would, I think, have difficulty in digesting all of the information which may well flow as a result of the submissions, is it proper to proceed with this degree of haste, if the report is correct?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm not sure that the report is accurate. There may be some updating of the discussion on the Stewart commission report. I think the honourable member recognizes the Treasurer of this province does have that capacity to digest a lot of this information in a hurry.

Mr. Deans: Not quite that much.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't know the volume of the amount of material that has been submitted.

Mr. Deans: I do.

Hon. Mr. Davis: However, I think the Treasurer is also—

Mr. S. Smith: He chews things up well, but whether he digests them is another question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say to the leader of the Liberal Party that he knows more about digestive tracts than I do. I'm not expert in these matters. I can't offer any comment.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say to the honourable member the government wants to be, as it always is, reasonable. If there is a larger volume of information than can be dealt with in those two days, I don't recall that we are committed to next Wednesday. I think it's quite obvious that it could receive some discussion.

[11:15]

Mr. Cunningham: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: While I appreciate that the Treasurer is a great little digester—

Mr. Makarchuk: More like a shredder, actually.

Mr. Cunningham:—I wonder if there is a possibility that the Premier might give greater consideration to the people and to the citizens in the respective areas so that they may be given the time to respond to this particular commission, so that he might be afforded their sincere desires for whatever structural reform may be required in the Hamilton-Wentworth region?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would once again ask the honourable member if he has submitted his solution to the problem by way of a brief to the Treasurer? I'm sure that will receive very careful consideration.

The only point I would make to the honourable member is that we are sensitive to the concerns of the people in Hamilton-Wentworth. We're sensitive to what has been suggested over the years—the suggestions by members of his own party, that there be an objective impartial review. That review has taken place. It has come up with a solution that is not totally acceptable—and understandably so—to the people of Wentworth; perhaps it has some measure of acceptability to the people of Hamilton. I question whether there is a solution that will be totally acceptable, to everybody.

That, of course, is one of the difficulties and responsibilities of government, but I can assure the member that we are aware and sensitive to the concerns of people in Wentworth, as we are aware and sensitive to the concerns of the people of the city of Hamilton.

PRESS GALLERY DOCUMENTS

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege: Yesterday during the question period, I referred to the fact that a member of the press gallery had a copy of a confidential cabinet document and said that it infringed on the privileges of the members of this House and was an affront to the members of this House. Upon subsequent investigation of the events, I would like to withdraw any implication that may have been cast by them on the member of the press gallery.

I find that I must, as minister, take responsibility for this document having been in the press gallery and, indeed, there were more than one in the press gallery through a mistake on the part of a messenger—

Mr. Roy: We accept your apology.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —from our ministry who was to deliver the documents to a cabinet committee meeting in room 363.

Mr. McClellan: Freedom of information.

Mr. J. Reed: Is he working today?

Mr. Roy: We understand. There has been bungling before.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I'm sorry, I shouldn't say "he"—"she" was to deliver the documents to Room 363 but they ended up in the press gallery. So, as I said to the members of the press, they had an opportunity, in a very first-hand way, to see the very full research and type of submission that is made on all-important business in this province.

Mr. Epp: Are you going to set up a commission to study that now?

Hon. Mr. Wells: No.

An hon. member: Is there anything else you said yesterday which you want to withdraw?

PETITION

APPEAL OF SENTENCES

Mr. G. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, may I present a petition on behalf of the mayor of the town of Bradford and two individuals, Allan Lee and Paul Harrison?

"In condemnation of the unfair judgement sentenced upon Allan Lee and Paul Harrison, the undersigned petitioners do hereby protest the severity, in the face of such a minute and insignificant Hallowe'en prank. In the opinion of the signators to the petition, the extremity of such a sentence is an unjustifiable mockery of our judicial system. Your prompt attention and followup to remedy which is, obviously, a blatant miscarriage of justice should be and would be most appreciated."

I present that petition to this Legislature on behalf of the two individuals and the mayer of the town of Bradford.

An hon. member: Are you going to introduce a private member's bill on that? You should.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

MUSKOKA AND PARRY SOUND TELEPHONE COMPANY LIMITED ACQUISITION ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved first reading of Bill 108, An Act to acquire the assets of the Muskoka and Parry Sound Telephone Company Limited.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. McClellan: Nationalization.

Mr. Germa: Socialism. Red-eyed Socialism.

LABOUR RELATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Haggerty moved first reading of Bill 109, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to provide a mechanism whereby the Lieutenant Governor in Council can order a 60-day suspension of a strike or lockout and order a return to work where the strike or lockout constitutes an immediate and serious danger to life, health or safety or seriously disrupts the economy of the province or an area of the province. The bill provides that the Minister of Labour must appoint a conciliation officer when an order suspending a strike or lockout has been made and may subsequently appoint a conciliation board where the efforts of the conciliation officer to effect a collective agreement is unsuccessful. If the conciliation efforts are unsuccessful, the strike or lockout may be resumed without a further strike vote.

Perhaps the amendment would provide an alternative measure to settle labour negotiations in the provincial educational system allowing students to complete their school year. It also would remove the confrontation of labour disputes in a municipality, such as in the case of the Fleck industry, thus reducing anw further impasse in labour bargaining.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to table the answers to questions 48 and 63 to 81 standing on the notice paper. (See appendix, page 3107.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY
ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF

On vote 902, northern communities assistance program; item 2, isolated communities:

Mr. Martel: I want to go back to where the minister and I left off last time when we were discussing the unorganized communities. I want to make sure that I didn't leave with the minister an impression that I was suggesting some type of municipal structure as we see in an organized municipality. I certainly wasn't indicating that we should introduce some type of committee to represent the communities which, in fact, would give that community the status of a municipality.

What I am trying to get the minister to do, if he has the power, is to recognize some group within the community—it could be elected as we elect local roads boards—which represents the community. In fact, as local roads boards do, it could have the right for disbursing funds and come together occasionally to discuss what the priorities are in roads or other priorities or needs within the community itself.

My concern is that I think at the present time there are some communities where two or three groups are vying for money and there are occasions when, inadvertently, because the government can't look at all of the minute details, although I am sure it tries, the priority item might not be the one that was best documented, let's put it that way. Maybe the case wasn't made as well by whoever was representing the community. So we have two or three groups within a community vying for the same number of dollars and that might not be in the best interests of the community.

What I am saying is I would like somehow to see one group where the community knew that this was the group elected in some way—you might call it a community council and not a municipal council, you might call it a local roads board, you might call it anything you want, but in fact, it represents the community and it meets to advance to government what the biggest priorities are in that community. It might well be a fire truck, as the ministry is now doing, although I have written them as of a month and a half ago and I can't get an answer whether they are going to supply us with a fire truck for one of my communities. I will have to talk to the deputy minister—

Mr. Bolan: What about a pail?

Mr. Martel: A pail? Well, we would need lots of them, but we could put some wheels on them.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Your colleague hasn't done badly.

Mr. Martel: That's right, I haven't got as much drag as my colleagues have, unfortunately.

What I want is some kind of organizational structure which doesn't make it a municipality that meets and decides this is our priority. I talked about the firefighting equipment because I have a community in which one wants a community centre and someone else thinks in terms of a fire truck and I think that should be sorted out. Then, rather than asking for five things when they know they are only going to get one, they can put the emphasis on the priority item.

That way we can get away from too many groups vying for very few dollars and maybe not the best ones being approved. That way they could decide what would be the number one item each year, or two years. They would determine the first two, three or five priorities, it really doesn't matter.

Otherwise that can be so helter-skelter—we all know what interest groups are like; all of us around here are subjected to pressures from interest groups, and they all present a good case—that I think if we go through one body, the unorganized community will in fact be better served.

I have asked the minister and he might want to give that power to the local roads board, the one group, I think, that each of these communities now has that can handle funding. In other words, they get the funding from MTC for their local roads board. MTC matches their funding two for one but they are the ones who handle the money. Maybe you would want to use them as the group who would come to you.

I think it would simplify it too for the ministry in dealing with a representative group of the community. You would know who those groups were, your staff across the north would, and you wouldn't have such a massive number of small groups looking for funding. It would be easier for your ministry to make decisions and I encourage the minister to give that consideration, because I think it would be extremely beneficial both to the communities and to the government.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, may I respond briefly? I certainly appreciate the honourable member's view and I have to say to him that we are not that far apart, really.

I think he has made it quite explicit that we must have some form of structure and I think it has to be done through a legislative process. I think this Legislature has to do something either through a separate bill or piggybacking on some other bill; in what way, I am not sure. But I do share his views as to the different interest groups. Some may be interested, as he correctly points out, in a recreational facility, others interested in a fire department, others interested in garbage collection; a number of different interests and different interest groups.

Let us be honest, there is a certain amount of politics played in small communities. People in small communities are related to each other, there are likes and dislikes, little factions, little groups, as he well knows. Some of the problems that can surface in a small community I guess are condensed from those of a big community, really. I share his view and I have to repeat what I said the last time we were discussing this issue, that we are approaching this issue in that vein, in that tone.

We have asked you candidly to come forward with some suggestions. I think as the honourable member points out that the unorganized communities fear that municipal structure. This was shown very clearly in Bill 120. They don't want that formalization, we both agree, excepting the local roads boards.

The local roads boards in many instances are the four or five real strong people within a small community. They have a secretary who sends out their annual assessments and does the collecting, so basically the very simple structure is in place. Certainly we will look at that during the course of the next few months. I'm most anxious to come forward with some form of legislation early in the fall to get on with the job of putting those people into place.

I think that while we can assist them with capital dollars for fire trucks, for fire equipment, there has to be some responsibility at the community level to maintain that equipment, to house it, to look after it and have a personal interest or some involvement financially to make you feel it's yours rather than a handout from us.

With all due respect and credit to UCANO, they have taken the same attitude. They say, "Don't give us anything for nothing. We have to pull our communities together and pay our fair share." With that attitude, I think we're all on the same track. If we can just pull it together, we can get on with the legislation in the fall. I appreciate your views.

Mr. Germa: Could I ask the minister to bring us up to date on the figures? I understand there were some cuts in vote 902. I don't think you gave us the details of what the estimate is now as a result of Mr. McKeough's cut of $9 million in your overall budget, but I understand that the northern communities assistance program will be affected. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes. The cutback was $9 million in all. We are reducing our expenditures in the community priorities by $5 million; in the regional priorities by $3 million; and in the highway capital construction program by $1 million.

As I said to the press in Thunder Bay recently, we looked at these cuts very carefully. I think I mentioned earlier that our program has been in place for some considerable time now. We felt it was perhaps better to delay the calling of some tenders or to reduce the size of a project rather than taking it out of the program. Everything essentially is in place. It has mostly resulted in a slight slowdown. Nevertheless, our cash flow will basically be $9 million less this year than what these estimates show.

Mr. Germa: All these are high labour-intensive construction projects at a time of severe unemployment all over northern Ontario. Even in the cities we now have high unemployment. We used to keep our unemployment rates in Thunder Bay, Sudbury and North Bay down to a reasonable figure. Certainly in the rural areas unemployment has always been bad. But now the problem is general. For the minister to agree to a cut of this magnitude, taking into consideration the severe problem of northern Ontario, I just can't accept that the minister went so quietly along with the Treasurer's thrust to carve $9 million out of our entire budget. Then you in turn take $5 million out of this particular vote.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I share the honourable member's views and recognize his leader's immediate recognition of what the cut would do in northern Ontario. It's fair to say that he was one of the first to recognize that this shift in budget would have an effect on employment right across this province. There's no doubt this will have a decided effect. We've estimated the loss of something like 400 or 500 jobs during the course of the balance of this year because of these cutbacks.

I might say some of the community priorities programs were not complete in the planning process. Engineering studies hadn't been completed and design work wasn't completed. All this was to be done at a later time this year.

In the Treasurer's search for funds this program became very visible, because we had only been into our fiscal year for 29 days. However, the Ministry of Transportation and Communications lost $5 million from their capital construction program in southern Ontario, whereas we only had $1 million taken out in northern Ontario. The Ministry of Colleges and Universities lost $4 million in its capital construction and the Ministry of Government Services lost $2 million. I have to say to him that we didn't go down quietly, but we are part of the government and we had to respond to the pressure from the other side. I think I mentioned this before. It was one of those things we had to live with.

Mr. Warner: There are other ways to raise revenue.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I guess I have to say from a personal point of view, as one who is very concerned about development in northern Ontario, that when we start working on our budget for this coming year—and we start in August for the 1979-80 year—maybe we can catch up that $9 million setback and begin to build from the base that's in these estimates, which is $140 million.

That remains to be seen, but I just want to let the member know that will be my approach. We can start with the $140 million base and build on top of that; maybe we won't have the same percentage increase we've had for the last couple of years, but it will be most encouraging. That remains to be seen, but I share the member's concern.

Mr. Germa: Maybe the minister would like to revise the statement he made to the chamber of commerce in Kirkland Lake on January 21, when he said: "At the same time, the existence of a separate Ministry of Northern Affairs is giving northern Ontario a higher profile, a lot more clout." Who got the clout as far as this is concerned? I think the Treasurer just said: "Away you go, Leo. Ride on your little fire truck. We're knocking out $9 million." The minister goes around telling the people in northern Ontario that he has a lot of clout, but it doesn't seem to come through that way when an area of the province in such a desperate situation as we are in is treated in a cavalier fashion. I didn't hear, I didn't see and I'm not aware of any resistance that the minister put up. There was no clout whatsoever.

To some degree the ministry, particularly through the isolated communities vote, is having some benefits to someone anyway. This one is just too good to pass up. It has to go on the record. It's from the Thunder Bay Times of May 11, 1978. The headline is "Plenty of Mileage." I quote:

"That Leo Bernier never misses a chance to promote Leo Bernier. The other day, at the trade show in Thunder Bay, buttons were being handed out in support of area tourism. 'See the North' or some such message was inscribed and, below, the minister's name—on a button yet. But the minister outdid himself soon after. Picture the scene. He personally delivers a fire truck to the community of Hawk Junction, a vehicle purchased with the help of the Ontario taxpayers' Isolated Communities Assistance Fund. The minister rides triumphantly into Hawk Junction on the yellow truck, lights blazing, siren wailing. To boot, he accepts a key to the community, a gold fireman's hat and the honour of being honorary fire chief. The minister got a lot of mileage out of that fire truck."

That's not what the Minister of Northern Affairs is all about: to promote the minister. And he wonders why we are sometimes cynical about his whole operation when we see gimmickry like this going on. The minister never fails to exploit any legitimate expenditure and make—

Mr. Nixon: When the time comes, it won't help him.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Want to bet?

Mr. Warner: He needs to put out your fire.

Mr. Germa: There's no doubt the fire truck was needed, but the minister himself gets more benefit from the fire truck than the citizens will ever get. This kind of tomfoolery, which is going on with every cent that is spent up there, means there's probably more money spent on the tomfoolery than there is on the hardware that is going out.

What about these fire packs? When he gives fire packs to an isolated community, does the minister come roaring into town with a big pack and hoses on his back? Is that how he presents all these fire packs?

Mr. Warner: He rollerskates through the town.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: If I may elaborate on the first point, about the clout of the Ministry of Northern Affairs. Certainly I said that in Kirkland Lake—or New Liskeard, I think it was; and I meant every word of it. When one thinks of the increase in the budget of the Ministry of Northern Affairs in two years—we started with $99 million originally and in a two year period were up to $140 million—I'm sure the members will agree with me that a 40 per cent increase in two years is significant clout.

Mr. Haggerty: They needed the help.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We've had a minor setback because of the opposition's position, and I made that very clear in my opening comments.

Mr. Warner: What nonsense.

Mr. Bolan: Because of the fiscal irresponsibility of the Treasurer, that is why.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: So, with all due respect, gentlemen, you have to share some of the things with me. I make that very clear, that it certainly wasn't this minister's suggestion that we go that particular route.

Mr. Bolan: Did you make that speech from the fire trucks?

Mr. Warner: You don't think there was any other form of revenue available?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I have been working on that budget since last August and it is in place. I brought before this Legislature a $140 million budget—

Mr. Nixon: That is the kind of influence you have got with your colleagues. When there are cuts to be made, you are the first to go.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —until you fellows got into the act. We know what happened after that.

Mr. Warner: The Treasurer had other sources.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: But, gentlemen, in connection with the publicity, I want to say that the kicking off of a new program has a great deal of significance for northern Ontario.

Mr. Bolan: Political.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The members are always concerned about the lack of new programs, the lack of assistance, and I think it is only right that on an occasion such as the delivery of the first fire truck the government should, under a new program, be there. I wasn't there alone—and I think the member failed to point that out; the honourable member for Algoma was with me. He enjoyed the exercise as much as I did—

Mr. Haggerty: Did he ring the bell?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —enjoyed the enthusiasm displayed within the community of Wawa, particularly in the community of Hawk Junction.

Mr. Nixon: Did they make him an honorary fire chief?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, they did.

Mr. Haggerty: I hope so.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I think you may be lacking some of the feel and some of the sincerity and the appreciation of those small communities to have the recognition. In fact, one of the members from that community said to me that he had been living there for 43 years and he said that never had they received this kind of attention. That is part of Northern Affairs' new responsibility—to focus attention on some of those inequities in those smaller communities in northern Ontario.

Mr. Nixon: You are responsible for the inequities.

Mr. Warner: You were driving fire trucks around; that's your new job.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Furthermore, we delivered another fire truck to the great community of Gogama last week; and who was front, line and centre with the lights flashing and the sirens wailing, coming into that community? None other than the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren). He was pleased to be there.

Mr. Haggerty: You took a back seat, did you, Leo?

Mr. Warner: Did he drive the truck?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: He was there, as was the federal member, because they realized that this is a significant program, one that has public acceptance, one that is worthy of that type of recognition. I don't make any apologies, none at all, for what we are doing with regard to isolated communities funds. In fact, I would like to do more and if we can provide to those small communities in northern Ontario those little amenities that some of those in southern Ontario take for granted, then we are going in the right direction. I am sure you will agree with me on that.

Mr. Germa: Is the minister trying to say that as a result of his ministry, there are more dollars or a bigger percentage of the consolidated revenue fund now being spent in the north than prior to its inception?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes.

Mr. Germa: You say that you started out with a $99 million budget. You know that most of these budgets that you are spending are just transferred from other ministries. Take your roads construction program: all that is a transfer out of T and C; and we can say the same thing for the rest of the lines in your budget. We had a regional priorities budget under the Treasurer before, so I don't see where there are any extra dollars. You have never attempted to put on the line and tell us, in northern Ontario, that as a result of putting you at a high salary, we are reaping a net benefit, that because of you, we are getting a greater proportion and a fairer share of the consolidated revenue fund. Now, can you back up that statement, maybe with some figures?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I think I have said it very clearly. I am no mathematician but simple figures will point out to you that we start with a $99 million base and in two years time, we are up to a $140 million. That is a substantial increase. Show me another ministry that has had that kind of recognition from the Treasurer. Show me. There isn't one. Their increases were five, six and seven per cent, and for us in a two-year period to get 40 per cent—you know, that speaks for itself.

Really, what else can I say? The facts are there and they are in these estimates, so it is a very significant increase. I just hope—and certainly my efforts will be in that direction—to continue this kind of recognition. I appreciate the support that the members are giving me, really, because I think that it does focus the needs of northern Ontario in a special place, in a very special way.

Here we are now debating a ministry that has its sole interest and concern in northern Ontario. Never before have we had that.

[11:45]

Mr. Nixon: Oh, now, we had a Minister of Northern Affairs.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, you did not.

Mr. Nixon: They have come and gone like the seasons.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: With all due respect, I don't like the interjection, but I have to answer it. The old Ministry of Mines and Northern Affairs wasn't solely concerned with the regional area north of Parry Sound to the Manitoba border.

Mr. Nixon: Allan Lawrence wouldn't like to hear you say that. There was a fanfare at his appointment.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I happened to be the minister following the Honourable Allan Lawrence. The northern affairs branch at that time was an information service.

Mr. Nixon: Allan Lawrence thought he was Minister of Northern Affairs.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We have a specific ministry now focusing attention on the problems of northern Ontario, and it is going very well.

Mr. Haggerty: I want to congratulate the minister for moving in the direction of providing fire equipment in organized communities. If I can recall my days as Natural Resources critic, this was always one area I discussed over a number of years. I say to the minister that once you have a volunteer fire department that is well trained and well organized—and there is no doubt about that, as I see from the reports that it will be handled under the fire marshal of the province of Ontario—you are going to have an organized community in a very short period of time.

That is where the organization starts. It starts from a volunteer fire department. It is the first line of any emergency in a community and people will look to the fire department to respond. It provides first-aid training to a community. I am sure this is an area that has been neglected for a number of years in certain communities in northern Ontario. It is also the first line in rescue work. I suggest the minister shouldn't stop here because he is going to have the involvement of the community. There is no doubt that they are going to be thumping on his door asking for more community services.

I noticed in your report that you are spending $3,550 on community wells. I don't know if this is going to include a transmission system of water lines through a small community or whether it is just for a well itself and that people will have to carry the water by pail to their homes. Is that the way it is going to be?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Just community wells. It is not a pressure system.

Mr. Haggerty: Why couldn't you go a little bit further? Once they have a fire department, one of the next things they are going to be looking forward to is where to get the water. I am sure you bought the proper fire equipment trucks that carry a certain amount of water. If I can recall in questioning you over the past three or four years, you thought by bringing in a pumper of this nature that carried its own water that the next thing they would need would be a fire hall, a suitable building where the water would not freeze on the truck. Hopefully, once you bought the fire equipment for the municipalities, you would have suitable accommodation for that vehicle. If not, you are going to be running into difficulties through the winter months.

I see no expenditure here whatsoever for that. I was just hoping you would be looking at this. Was the fire equipment that you purchased bought under the metric system?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Perhaps I could maybe respond briefly on the community wells. What we have done here is respond to the community's request. In some instances, there have been a number of wells established within a community. In other areas, there have been one or two specific wells where the community would go. One has to realize in some of these smaller communities that to put in a regular pressure system and a regular water system would be extremely difficult and expensive. Some of the homes are just not of the type of construction where they can have them on a year-round basis. Some are just there for six or seven months. It would be out of the range of this budget to have massive engineered plans, and go through all the hearings and the things we go through. Nevertheless, we respond to the community's request. The initiative comes from them, which makes it much easier for us.

In connection with the fire halls, up to this time we have been providing fire trucks to those communities which have an established volunteer fire department and have the capability or already have in place a fire hall. I can name some off the top of my head. Minaki has a fire hall that was built for it by the old Ministry of Natural Resources, which had an excess building and passed it over to the community.

My own community of Hudson built a fire hall several years ago through some winter works programs, where the community supplied the material and the federal program supplied the labour. In Wabigoon, a small community near Dryden, we supplied funds to assist in building a fire hall. We gave the town of Hurkett some financial assistance and the community responded, as it did in Dorion and Jellicoe. All these places have come together. It provides that community pride when they can do it themselves.

There is definitely a hall to put a fire truck in where it can be properly maintained, kept heated, and, of course, made serviceable on a year-round basis.

Mr. Haggerty: You are organizing fire departments throughout the communities in northern Ontario and adding equipment. Does this include any radio equipment so that they can have communications with the OPP and so that they can have a network of radio communications with other communities and other services that are available in the area in case of emergencies?

Mr. Chairman: That should be under the next vote.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, if I might answer that, fire trucks are equipped with radio equipment so that they can be in contact with other groups. The fire packages are not as sophisticated in that they are much smaller in nature and they don't require that kind of sophisticated equipment. It's quite elaborate. In fact, the fire marshal's office gave us excellent co-operation in designing these special trucks that have the pumping equipment on the exterior of the vehicle. They're not sophisticated like you'd find in Metropolitan Toronto, where the equipment is highly sophisticated and built into the truck itself.

These trucks, which have an 800-gallon capacity, have a pumping unit mounted on the front so all the controls are accessible, easy to repair and easy to maintain. There's a minimum amount of training necessary to get people involved because they're not working with high-pressure hydrants, they're not dealing with 10-storey buildings, and the fire marshal took that into consideration when he designed both the truck and the fire packages which are being distributed across the north now.

Mr. Haggerty: Has the minister considered providing a training school in northwestern or northeastern Ontario? I believe many of the firemen now travel from southern Ontario to the fire college at Gravenhurst. Has he considered perhaps having training facilities in one of the colleges in northwestern or northeastern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes. Last year we began our program by providing some extra funds directly to the fire marshal's office so that they could contract knowledgeable retired firemen who went around the north to make assessments as to what each community required and to establish certain priorities within certain communities. Since then, the fire marshal's office has embarked on a training program.

In fact, we've had two training courses already, one in Timmins and one in Thunder Bay, where we bring the volunteer firemen down to a major centre and the fire marshal's office is there with all the equipment and all the slides and they go through a two-day training program. In addition to that, of course, when the equipment is delivered, the fire marshal goes in, and he has requested something like 60 hours of training be given to those volunteer firemen who will operate the trucks in these various communities. There is an intensive training program.

You will note that we have provided the fire marshal's office with four-wheel-drive vehicles which will be used to take personnel from the fire marshal's office in and around the small communities in northern Ontario. That came out of the isolated communities fund.

Mr. Bolan: Mr. Minister, while we're on the subject of badges, which was raised by the member for Sudbury, I have a rather interesting little badge here which bears your name. Perhaps you might give some explanation of the significance of it. It's en français, and it says: "On s'amuse dans le nord, Ministère des affaires du nord. Leo Bernier, ministre Tom Campbell, sous-ministre." Translated, incidentally, it means: "We amuse ourselves in the north." What is it that amuses the minister about the north? Is it the high rate of unemployment? Is it the fact that industry is lacking? What are the other things they do, to amuse themselves, the minister and the deputy minister, in their travels through northern Ontario? I would find it very amusing, frankly, to hear the minister's answers.

While he is musing over the answers to give, I would like to ask something in a more serious vein. Is the minister aware of the tornado damage which was done in the Rainy River area, around Emo? This is information that was provided to me by the member for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid). Apparently some tornado damage was done there to the tune of about $1 million.

Obviously the minister is not aware of this matter. I have been requested by the member for Rainy River to raise this and to ask the minister about it and to ask him if there will be any assistance forthcoming to the people who incurred damage from the tornado. If there is damage, and presumably there is, I suppose I would ask the minister to consider assistance just like the assistance the minister provided to the town of Cobalt last year following the holocaust that took place there. Perhaps the minister or someone from his ministry has some information about that.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We don't have any information at our fingertips, Mr. Chairman, but we'll look into it. This is an area, of course, of concern to us. We have been very much involved in the disasters across the north, as the member knows—in Kashechewan, in Cobalt and in Thunder Bay—and where there is personal hardship, we will look at it very carefully. I'll be glad to look into it and report back to the member for Rainy River.

If I might go back a couple of steps, Mr. Chairman, I would point out to the honourable members that the community of Whitefish Falls is getting its fire truck today. They have asked us to delay the delivery of that fire truck until this evening, because they're having a community dance, a large community dance.

Mr. Warner: And they want you to drive the fire truck!

Mr. Nixon: Get those Beavers mobilized and we'll all go up.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: To show the enthusiasm that exists in these small communities, they said: "Hold up the truck until this evening. We're having our community dance and we're raising funds to build our new fire hall. We want everything to be co-ordinated so that when the truck arrives, the community will be in an excellent mood and the pride that will be spread across the community will be just tremendous." It's that kind of small-town attitude, I suppose one might say, that exists in the north.

Mr. Warner: Are you going to drive this truck? That's what we want to know.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The appreciation is there, and the passing of these estimates will make sure that this kind of program is continued and extended. All honourable members are part and parcel of the tremendous things that the Isolated Communities Assistance Fund is doing in northern Ontario.

Mr. Warner: Maybe you can make up some more buttons.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Chairman, it's a measure of the desperation in northern Ontario when the delivery of one fire truck is the event of the year. That's about how it's measured. One can't understand the minister being so happy about this: "We now have a fire truck. We're in first gear again; we're back on the rails." It's not like that, I say to the minister. Sure, everybody might get jumping around their new fire truck tonight, but that's really not how you measure a community. Let's not try to sell that across the community.

To get back to these fire trucks, the minister didn't say what the capacity was of these pumpers. Let's assume that it's a standard 600 gallons per minute.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It's 800 gallons per minute.

Mr. Germa: Eight hundred gallons per minute? It's going to take some well to supply that vehicle. I'd hate like heck to see us spend a big buck—I don't know how much the ministry is paying for each truck—to go into a community and find out that in three minutes we've pumped the well dry. I've experienced that and I've seen towns burned down.

[12:00]

Sure, we have a nice big yellow truck pumping 800 gallons per minute, but if the well goes dry in three minutes, and that's how most of them function, where are the guarantees in these six communities where you have put trucks? Has the water supply been guaranteed to deliver 800 gallons per minute? As far as I know none of these communities that you have listed has a municipal water supply system and I don't know where you are going to get 800 gallons per minute out of any well. I have never seen that well.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, I should point out that the truck is designed for that type of firefighting in the small communities. The fire marshal has very carefully assessed these communities. Many of these communities, as the honourable member I am sure is aware, are located on a lake or on a river so that there is an excellent supply. Where there isn't that supply of water on a continuing basis, with the co-operation of the fire marshal, at his suggestion we will be installing underground tanks at strategic spots within the community that will allow the fire equipment to get a resupply of water in case of a disaster.

I can assure you those matters are being looked at and are very much in consideration when a fire truck is put into communities. It's useless, as you correctly point out, to put in a fire truck with only 800 gallons of water; there has to be some continuing supply. It's obvious the funds are just not available for the setting up of a normal water system, complete with tank and reservoir, in these small communities.

Mr. Haggerty: You won't put out a lot of fire with 800 gallons.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: They haven't asked for it. They realize the problem. They are very practical people, and they say, "Give us the basics," and with their co-operation and assistance we are going this particular route and I am confident it's going to work.

Items 2 and 3 agreed to.

Vote 902 agreed to.

On vote 903, regional priorities and development program; item 1, regional priorities:

Mr. Germa: Mr. Chairman, I think the minister has announced a new $2.5 million program to stimulate mining exploration in the north. I would like to know how the minister is going to get this money on stream. Is he forming a crown corporation to go out and do prospecting? Is he going to be subsidizing private prospectors? Maybe he could run through this program of mineral exploration in the northern part of the province.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, these will be funds that will be transferred to the Ministry of Natural Resources. We, as our mandate indicates, will search out the priorities where we think emphasis should be placed and one of them was geological surveys right across northern Ontario. The Ministry of Natural Resources will carry out those surveys. They will consist of aeromagnetic surveys in the Red Lake and the Marshall Lake areas, geoscience surveys in northeastern Ontario, engineering terrain analysis and mapping in the New Liskeard area and peat deposit surveys in the Thunder Bay area. In addition, we will do additional surveys for additional lignite deposits in the James Bay lowlands.

The purpose, of course, is to stimulate exploration by the private sector and encourage expansion of the mining industry with additional information. We are not going into a crown corporation. The Ministry of Natural Resources has indicated to us if additional information could be gathered, additional data could be pulled together and given to those who may be interested in working in that particular area, then that would be very beneficial to the mining industry.

In addition, we will be doing a mineral aggregate inventory, mapping on the basis of aerophoto interpretation and ground sampling of materials that are identified, with detailed mapping of aggregation in target areas—the Lake Timiskaming, Cobalt and Englehart areas. The effort behind the mineral aggregate inventory is to identify the size and location of aggregate resources in northern Ontario and to determine characteristics of terrain as the basis for planning land development such as new town sites and transportation corridors. This is a new initiative, one that's being funded by the Ministry of Northern Affairs and being undertaken by the Ministry of Natural Resources.

Mr. Germa: The way I understand it, then, this money will be funnelled from your ministry into Natural Resources and into the private sector, if I follow what you said.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We are gathering the information, as we have been doing over the past number of years—doing the mapping, the surveys—and making that information available to those who would be interested in continuing further explorations. That is the whole idea behind it.

Mr. Germa: As far as aggregate is concerned: do we know anything about aggregate in northern Ontario now? Do we have the figures?

Southern Ontario in a few short years is going to be in trouble and they are going to start hauling northern Ontario down to southern Ontario. I think you see that. Do you not? I can see that in the next 20, 25 years, we are going to be ripped right out as far as aggregate is concerned. I understand that the biggest aggregate deposit left in Ontario is underneath the Sudbury airport, is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I am told that is correct. I think the member has touched on a very interesting point. That is something the Ministry of Natural Resources recognized too—that they had to get a better handle on the aggregate inventories of northern Ontario.

When they came to us with that proposal, certainly we felt the same way in our ministry, that we should be doing a much broader inventory and getting information that will allow us to plan properly for the future.

Some of the problems in southern Ontario exist because the long-range inventories have only now been brought together. It is only in the last few years that they have been conducting aggregate inventory studies in southern Ontario. We hope to be ahead of that and this is why we are putting money with the Ministry of Natural Resources in doing those surveys.

From the reports I have had, if my memory serves me correctly, you are quite right in saying one of the largest aggregate deposits in northern Ontario is in the Sudbury area adjacent to the airport or underneath the airport. Had we had that information, I suppose, 10 or 15 years ago the airport may well have been built somewhere else. We could have developed those resources in the best interests of the community and found a new location for an airport.

But those are the kinds of things we hope to correct in the future and that can only be done by including the information we have and getting a better handle on the inventories.

Mr. Germa: I fear for the life of my airport, Mr. Minister, now you confirm that this is the biggest known deposit left. Given the strength and the power of the aggregate people in the southern part of the province, is there anybody right now dickering or negotiating to try to dig Sudbury's airport out and make it a great big hole?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, not to my knowledge. I have never heard anything along those lines.

Mr. Germa: I hope you would keep your eyes and ears open as you travel through the various board rooms and golf clubs around southern Ontario to see that Conn Smythe or somebody doesn't find out about that deposit and come an attack us. I am very fearful about that.

Mr. Warner: That is your job, Leo.

Item 1 agreed to.

On item 2, northern roads:

Mr. Germa: There is a $1 million cut here. I wonder if the minister has detailed which project he is pulling back on as far as road construction is concerned?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We haven't got a specific handle on that information as yet. A lot of the preliminary work has to be done with regard to planning, engineering and design-work.

As I indicated earlier, it is now our decision to keep our program intact, but there will be a delay in the calling of certain programs and certain construction programs.

What I can indicate to the honourable member is the Bending Lake road that will go from Atikokan north of Ignace—I think it was originally intended we would call that early in August—is now being called in November. So it is that kind of thing we are doing to comply with the Treasurer's request to have a cash flow of a million dollars less in this fiscal year in this vote.

Item 2 agreed to.

On item 3, resource access roads:

Mr. Wildman: I wonder if the minister could indicate to us what policy, if any, the government and his ministry, in the role of co-ordinating those policies for northern Ontario, have with regard to the closure of resource access roads?

There seems to be some confusion, since once a road is built it's supposed to stay open, I understand, if provincial taxpayers' funds have been spent on it. That doesn't mean necessarily that the government is going to maintain that road—it might not be maintained; the gravel and grading and so on—but that it will not be closed. However, in some instances roads are sometimes closed by digging a big trench across them or arranging a flash flood or whatever. I would like to know what the policy is.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: If I can recall, in my experiences in the Ministry of Natural Resources, there is no real established government policy per se on that particular point. The decision is usually left up to the district manager who has responsibility for his specific area.

In many instances, the access road to which the member has referred was built for a specific purpose—maybe for a forest regeneration program or to extract a certain species of timber, or to open up a specific area for a specific reason—and that reason or that need has ceased to exist.

Therefore, in the interest of maintaining a certain amount of control and a certain amount of wilderness aspect, so to speak, in some of our northern areas, the Ministry of Natural Resources has taken upon itself that this road should be closed. Once a road is opened there is nothing that says that the road will continue to be open just because we've spent public funds on it. It's usually built for a specific purpose and in their wisdom and in their judgement, if it should be closed it is. In my own area many of the tourist outfitters use some isolated lakes as a resource for fly-in camping. They get very upset when roads are punched into all these lakes and it destroys the wilderness atmosphere or wilderness aspect of it. They take no objection to Canadians flying in like they do, and Ontario residents.

The paper companies have been doing this in a number of instances; where they come close to a lake on a Friday afternoon the fellow will take the bulldozer and run down to the shore of the lake and he's got a beautiful fishing hole for the rest of the summer. It does create problems when you're trying to promote multiple use of our resources.

To my knowledge specifically, there is no policy with regard to closures. It's usually up to the district manager.

Mr. Wildman: Is there any policy of consultation with the local tourist outfitters and local inhabitants on the disposition of a resource access road—not just after it's been finished, let's say after a paper company is finished using it, but even prior to it being built, as to the location, that would protect the interests of the tourist outfitters as well as the interests of the local inhabitants?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I'll just relate to you what has happened in the northwest, because I'm very much involved, where the consultation is an ongoing one with the pulp and paper industry and with the tourist outfitters and with the hunters' and anglers' association. They are involved in some of those decisions as to whether they want to open or close certain lakes. The discussion is a very healthy one.

Mr. Wildman: If I could ask a question on a specific road, could the minister tell me what contact the ministry has had with Dubreuil Brothers Lumber Company regarding the road from Highway 17 into Dubreuilville and what might be done to improve that road? I know the gate is lifted now and people can drive in and out without having to phone two days ahead and get permission, but the gate is still there. I don't know whether that means it might be lowered again in the fire season. What is happening with the gate? What is happening with the road and are there any plans to have that road improved?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I don't have any specific information at my fingertips, but we'd be glad to get it and send it to you in answer to your questions.

Mr. Germa: Those resource access roads which were privately built have been a source of aggravation for many years to many people. They just don't understand why a road is not available to them at some point in time, depending on the whim of the operator who owns the road. I think a proposal was made some time ago that despite the fact that a lumber company or a pulp company incurred the expense of building the road, there should be some way you work out access.

I've been trapped myself at midnight on a lonely road heading from Sudbury to Chapleau when I tried to take a short-cut through Brown Forest Products. The gate is normally open and access was allowed. But I arrived in the middle of winter; it was 40 below zero and 11 p.m., and there I was with the gate down. You're 50 miles from civilization—what does one do?

Have you ever tried to put together a plan whereby these private access roads would be available to travellers in the north?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes. Again I can call on my experience in the Ministry of Natural Resources where we entered into an agreement with the paper companies who had exhausted all their resources. There were no public funds in those particular roads. We entered into an agreement of shared responsibility for maintenance of those particular roads and then they were opened up to the public in general.

The paper companies, of course, are very concerned where there is an ongoing operation, particularly during the high fire season and during the hunting season, because of the danger of fires. They do put gates on those private roads where a major operation is going on.

The last year I was with Natural Resources we made some significant steps forward with regard to Spruce Falls in the Hearst area where we took over a number of roads, or at least assisted in the maintenance of them.

Those roads now have been opened up to the public.

I think the attitude among the paper companies has changed considerably in the last five or 10 years. I know in the northwest there isn't a company now that closes off its roads, except in the areas where they are actually working and have some cutters employed. All the other roads are open to the public. However because they have usually finished their extraction and maybe even their forest regeneration program, there really isn't any need for ongoing maintenance on those access roads.

If there is one complaint you hear in the north or the northwest, it is that there are too many of these access roads and that they are being inundated with those "pork-and-beaners" from across the border who are making use of our valuable crown land resources at basically no cost, leaving their garbage behind and not contributing to the general economy of the area.

We do have an effective program that's working very well, the last one we negotiated in Northern Affairs. The assistant deputy minister in Kenora, Bill Charlton, negotiated one with the Ontario-Minnesota Pulp and Paper Company to assist in the opening of that road between Kenora and the Grassy Narrows reserve. Our ministry is sharing now with the federal Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development the maintenance of that old abandoned Ontario-Minnesota Pulp and Paper Company road. It's open to the public now.

Mr. Wildman: Are you maintaining the road on the reserve?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Up to the reserve.

Mr. Wildman: Yes, but not on the reserve.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Not on the reserve, no.

Mr. Wildman: There is some dispute about that.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: There was, yes.

Mr. Wildman: There still is.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We have no responsibility on the reserve.

Mr. Germa: The point I'm trying to make is that there are private roads, which would add to your network of public roads, such as the one I mentioned that cuts across from the Timmins highway to Chapleau. If you didn't have that private road you'd have to make an extensive detour which adds another 120 miles. That one particular 40-mile strip of private road could be an integral part of the public system. I am not asking you to take over every private road or interfere with every private road but just those private roads which automatically fall into that category because of their geography and what they link up. They naturally fall into the road network around them because they connect to public highways on both sides.

That seems natural and normal for a strip such as that one. I am sure there are others across the northern part of the province which fit in beautifully with the rest of the highway program. Those are the ones I am asking about. Has the minister ever thought to look at a map and see those private roads which naturally fit into the rest of the transportation program and put them under public ownership?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, we share your views with enthusiasm, I might say. Just last week, the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) entered into an agreement with E. B. Eddy Forest Products on the road to which you refer. That's the Sultan road on Highway 144. Effective May 17, this road became a public road. It will cut off about 100 miles on an east-west trip. The goal and one of our priorities is to upgrade that particular road. Now that it is in public ownership, so to speak, the public is allowed to use it and we share the costs of maintenance and will be spending funds to upgrade it.

You are right on when you say we should be doing more of this. Certainly we will because it makes good sense for those of us who live in the north.

Mr. Germa: I am pleased to hear that. I didn't know you were negotiating transfer of that road. I shouldn't look a gift horse in the mouth, but what kind of financial transactions have to go on in order to bring the private road of a pulp company into the public domain? How do we go about that?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: As I understand it, we get into an agreement that is signed by the minister. It is called designation of an industrial road. It is a proper legal document under the Public Transportation and Highway Improvement Act, Revised Statutes of Ontario, 1970. We are taking over a total of 47 miles. I don't have anything on the actual costs. I will try to get the figures on that. Maybe we can get information on Newwaygo too, for the member for Algoma. I don't recall Newwaygo.

We have just had a report from the member for Nipissing in connection with the Rainy River storm which occurred on May 26, last Friday, in the Emo and Devlin area. It was mostly damage to farm buildings. One house was severely damaged. Most of the damage was covered by insurance I am told.

Our northern affairs officer, Fred Whitehead from Fort Frances, has already been in there. We have had one inquiry for assistance and we will be dealing with that.

Mr. Bolan: If I may follow up on that, I realize that you just have one inquiry. However, with your ministry officer up there, would you be able to put some kind of assessment on the actual damage which was caused? Furthermore, may I suggest to the ministry that it try to find out which people have suffered damages and tell them there is something which the Ministry of Northern Affairs can do with respect to their claims. In other words, go to them; don't wait for them to come to you.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We have already been there. As I pointed out to you, our northern affairs officer has already been there, but we will certainly follow up on the suggestion you have made.

The member for Algoma (Mr. Wildman) has left. We have information on the Newaygo road that goes from Oba to Mead and then on to Hearst. We are looking at the estimated cost, the industrial needs and other uses, and a report will be submitted to the next meeting of the Northern Ontario Resources Transportation Committee.

Mr. Germa: Could I ask the minister, Mr. Chairman, about snowmobile trails? A few years ago this was a subject matter of high intensity, and my estimation of the situation is that it has gradually settled down. Is that the impression you get? What sort of activity did we have last winter in snowmobile trail construction? How many new miles were put in? What sort of activity did you have going in that field?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, last year we contributed just about $35,000 to the Ministry of Natural Resources for snowmobile trails, but this amount of money was mainly for those snowmobile trails that existed in the remote Indian communities or northwestern Ontario. We as a ministry were not involved in the providing of funds to the snowmobile clubs across Ontario for the grooming of their trails. That is the total and full responsibility of the Ministry of Natural Resources. I regret I just don't have any information, but you might want to direct that question to my colleague, the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. F. S. Miller).

The only involvement we had was assisting those Indian communities in the northwest to the tune of $35,000 for snowmobile trails. But you are quite right; in my assessment the pressure for increased snowmobile trails is diminishing. I think the clubs are becoming a little smaller. There is no question that the snowmobile fad in northern Ontario is diminishing. There are several good clubs getting assistance from the Ministry of Natural Resources, but anything further than that I don't think I can help you with.

In answer to your question concerning the financial arrangements with regard to the Sultan road—Highway 144—the sharing of the maintenance costs is what allows the public to move in. We pay 75 per cent of the cost of the maintenance of that road which is designated as an industrial road, and the company that still uses the road pays 25 per cent. So it is just an agreement on the on-going maintenance cost from here on in. It will open it up. It is not a road that is designated as a provincial highway as yet, but our intentions are to go that route.

Mr. Germa: Is this a first for Ontario that we have a road which is open to the public but really not a provincial highway? It is somewhere halfway between?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: This is not the first. We have entered into this agreement on several occasions across northern Ontario. I know we did in the Hearst area and certainly in the Kenora area. Where a company has made a major expenditure on a road and their use has ceased, then they will pay 25 per cent. We open it up to the public and we pay 75 per cent of the ongoing maintenance costs. So it is one we enter into on a fairly regular basis where there is a need and where the public has shown an interest and there is a public necessity.

Mr. Germa: What if you come to a determination where a capital construction should go forward? Is the owner of the road still involved in that? Otherwise I see that this road is going to stay in a static position while this particular agreement is in effect. Can we in some manner do some capital construction or improvements on that?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I just have a correction on that. It wasn't 75 per cent, it was 25 per cent which the province pays; the company pays 75 per cent of the maintenance costs.

In many of these roads the additional capital construction is relatively small, and that is usually taken by the company themselves because they are the principal users. But once they have abandoned the road then we look at it from a provincial system point of view. If it is worthwhile and it is in the public necessity then we will certainly go that particular route. But it is 25 per cent paid for by the province and 75 per cent by the company.

[12:30]

Mr. Germa: Does the company do the maintenance, or is it done by the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That can be worked out. In some instances, if they have the equipment they do it and we pay our share. In other instances, we hire the private sector to do it and we share on a 75-25 per cent basis. Sometimes we ask the Ministry of Transportation and Communications to do it. There are a number of ways of doing that maintenance.

Mr. Bolan: I would like to follow up on the question of the resource access roads, particularly the private roads. On many occasions, you have spoken both in this House and outside of the House about the geographical position of northern Ontario in that it comprises approximately 90 per cent of the land mass of Ontario, yet it has only 10 per cent of the population.

That being the case, the question of roads in northern Ontario becomes very important, particularly so because of the very sparse population spread out over a vast mass of land. Yet the very interesting part of it is that throughout northern Ontario you have a myriad of private roads. I don't mean the old tote roads or old bush roads, but the private roads which are presently being maintained by lumber and mining companies. Would this ministry embark on a program of examining the network of private roads which exists in northern Ontario?

Eventually, the time will come when we will have to build more roads in northern Ontario. However, when you already have this network of private roads, it might be feasible for your ministry to negotiate some kind of an agreement with the lumber companies, or the people responsible for the construction of these roads, which would give the ministry access to these private roads when the need arises in five or 10 years time.

Some of these private roads are very well maintained right now. They are used every day. I'm sure you see many of them in northwestern Ontario. We don't have as many in northeastern Ontario because we don't have the lumber or pulp business which your area of the province has. However, there are some roads, particularly in the areas around Cochrane and Kapuskasing, where there is a large pulp industry. I am wondering if some arrangement could be agreed upon with the companies for the joint financial responsibility for the maintenance of these roads, with the eventual goal, I suppose, of taking them over.

The roads are already there. It's a question of establishing more links in northern Ontario, where people often have to make long roundabout trips to get from one place to another.

I was looking at a map last week of an area around Temagami. It was a topographical map and I was amazed at the number of roads there were, many of which could be used.

You may not wish to have to make financial arrangements with the owners who have spent money on these roads over the past 25 or 30 years. Nevertheless, there are still some major private roads in northern Ontario which I feel would be of benefit to the people of northern Ontario if some usage could be made of them in direct participation with your ministry.

I think it's a policy which is deserving of your ministry to look into and perhaps we could see something of that nature in the future.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The point is very well taken, Mr. Chairman. It's certainly a concern I share. I just want to repeat that we've had some considerable success in the past, and your suggestion that we carry on and maybe accelerate it is an excellent one and I'll take it under consideration.

Item 3 agreed to.

On item 4, agricultural development:

Mr. Germa: Could I ask the minister if he is monitoring what is happening in the Sudbury district as a result of the lessening of SO₂ fallout in our valley areas? We have an area there which is absolutely unique. It was, at one point in time, a producer of agricultural products, but over the past 30 or 40 years, with the fumigations coming from the operation of Falconbridge and Inco, most of those farms fell into misuse and disuse and hobby farming.

I believe there is potential there, considering that the pollution index for the past couple of years has been reasonably good compared with other communities in the province. I'm just wondering what's going on in the valley area. We have an area there, probably 10 miles wide and 30 miles long, of good soil which was put out of commission because of an artificial pollutant. Can you tell me what you're doing? Are you monitoring the situation? Is there any hope or any potential to rehabilitate that land?

I know there are some small operators still going, but at one point in time we used to win Canadian championships for potato production out of that same valley, so close to the mining community. I think the soils are still there. I know they are polluted to some degree, but you must have some expertise on that one.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, this is one area that was identified by the regional municipality of Sudbury when it came to us shortly after the Inco announcement and wanted to look at a study of import substitution and also to look at, as the honourable member has correctly pointed out, the decline in agricultural activities in the Sudbury basin.

They felt that there is a tremendous potential here, as the member has pointed out, so we have granted the regional municipality $300,000 for those studies that are going on now to see if we can reactivate the agricultural community in the Sudbury area. The results of those studies will not likely be known until later this year, but we'll make sure that you're kept fully abreast of them.

This particular vote deals directly with transfer payments to farmers in the north for materials, equipment or fertilizer and for the cost of land breaking and farm education programs in northern Ontario to the tune of about $500,000, and then loans to farmers for tile drainage in unorganized areas of about $100,000. That takes up this, but our involvement in the Sudbury area relates directly to the studies that are going on now and being undertaken by the regional municipality.

Mr. Germa: Could I ask the minister who, in particular, is doing these studies? Did he say that he was evaluating the potential of that farm land?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The regional municipality of Sudbury is responsible for the setting up of those particular studies. We will be working very closely with them, but I don't have any specifics as to who is actually doing the study for them at this point in time. They are off and running. The sums have been confirmed and approved and the work should be right in progress at the present time.

Mr. Bolan: Mr. Minister, under item 4 of vote 903, there is an agricultural development grant of some $500,000 and I have the breakdown of how these funds are to be allocated. Under its item number 2, assistance on land clearing and breaking, I notice there is a grant of $30 per acre or 10 acres per year, but there's a sort of a kicker on it that says clearing and breaking is only permitted to enlarge existing farms.

Don't you feel your ministry should consider a policy which would allow for the breaking and clearing of land not only on existing farms but also on other land which may be considered farm land?

Contrary to what many people believe, there is a wealth of farm land in northern Ontario. In northeastern Ontario alone there is as an example, the Verner-Sturgeon Falls area which has some dairy farms which are as good as any you will find in the province of Ontario. Then if you want to get good agricultural land, you can go up to the New Liskeard area. That area has a huge clay belt and there has been a large provincially-sponsored agricultural experimental farm there for some time which is really of benefit to the residents of that area.

Farming is nothing new to northern Ontario. And in view of the fact that we are losing more and more of our particularly rich farm land in the growing belts of southwestern Ontario, perhaps the ministry might want to look at developing a program which would assist the development and clearing of new land other than existing farm land.

I know for a fact, and I am sure the minister is aware of this, that there are many tracts of land yet to be developed which can be used for farming. I'm also sure the minister is aware of the fairly heavy costs of clearing land today, with the type of labour and mechanical equipment required. Would the minister say whether or not he is anticipating, or is prepared to consider, a program of that nature?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The honourable member is quite right, agriculture is certainly not new to northern Ontario. In fact there are some very rich fertile areas of northern Ontario that haven't even been touched yet and I refer of course, to the New Liskeard, Thunder Bay, and Dryden areas, and certainly Rainy River.

The moneys here for which we seek your approval are for transfer payments of about $500,000 and then, under the Tile Drainage Act, $100,000 to assist those farms in unorganized areas obtain loans for tile drainage.

On the question of clearing, we have had discussions with the Ministry of Agriculture and Food, which under the ARDA agreement, is most interesting in getting on with some programs. The latest discussions have been in connection with a major land clearance program in the Rainy River area where the member for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid) has been persistently bringing to our attention the need to get a program going.

We have started moving in that direction with a study of the area, which Northern Affairs is funding, to look at the potential and to work with the farm community itself during the course of this summer, as a first step to get a major land clearing program in place and moving ahead. The program we have talked about for Rainy River—I use that as an example because I am familiar with it—is in excess of $17 million, so it's a very substantial one.

But you are quite right in saying that we must spend more time and effort in this particular field and certainly with the co-operation we are getting from Agriculture and Food, we intend to do this.

Mr. Bolan: Thank you for your reply, Mr. Minister. I am pleased to hear that. That's an encouraging sign. You know people identify us in northern Ontario as a bunch of hard rock miners and lumbermen. Well, we have those people, of course, and they have contributed so much to the development of the north—

[12:45]

Mr. Nixon: And a few lawyers.

Mr. Bolan: We have a few lawyers as well—but we also have farmers, and again they have contributed quite a bit to the development of northern Ontario.

The other items you have on this page are assistance programs for the purchase of commercial fertilizer, for example, or for the purchase of weed sprayer, fencing and what have you. I have two questions on this.

What criteria must be met by the individual farmer for him to get the benefits under this program? Does it depend on the size of the farm? Does it have to do with the acreage? Does it have to do with the type of farm? Does it have to do with the type of food that is grown on the farm? What are the criteria which the individual applicant must meet?

Secondly, what kind of a program does the ministry have for the dissemination of information to the areas in northern Ontario that are concerned about agriculture? For example, does it have a pamphlet distribution program? Does it have these at its northern affairs offices in northern Ontario?

I wonder if the minister could comment on both of those points:

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, many of the funds under this particular vote are granted on a percentage basis. Some are at 20 per cent, and some are at 50 per cent, where they put up a portion and we put up a portion, and this type of thing: so their own resources have a certain limitation on the various things they can ask for. You know, 15 per cent of the cost of fertilizer purchases is available up to a maximum of $100 to $300 per farm; so it is based on the farm capability and it is all channelled through the agricultural representative, who is in the area and very knowledgeable of that particular operation. The actual criteria in the application are determined on a very local basis, so there is no particular problem. I have to say that there is a limitation on the size of the program as it relates to the availability of funds from the individual farmer.

In connection with the information, yes, we do have a very extensive information package in co-operation with the Ministry of Agriculture and Food where we disseminate information through our northern affairs branches right across northern Ontario. There are something like 29 branches now; so we can give them excellent coverage for those brochures.

Mr. Bolan: Just one other question on this and possibly another question after that: The minister says these types of assistance are done through the agricultural representative in the area; presumably that is under the Ministry of Agriculture and Food. How does this agricultural representative liaise with the Ministry of Northern Affairs on the determination of these various applications? Does the Ministry of Agriculture and Food have programs of its own, and how are they differentiated from this ministry's programs? More importantly, how does this ministry liaise with the agricultural representative to see to it that these various applications and what have you can be dealt with effectively?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The co-operation is extremely good between the northern affairs officers and the regional office. Many of these funds are transfer payments directly to the Ministry of Agriculture and Food; so we just move X dollars over to them. In some instances, because the Ministry of Agriculture and Food does not have a representative there, we take the lead because we are spread around the north and we have a presence there. The co-operation and liaison is two ways, you might say, but it is very effective; it is starting to gear up now.

We felt we should be involved in the agricultural community because of the future there is in agriculture. We were involved in the development of communities, roads and tourism, and certainly agriculture is an area we should have involvement in. With the co-operation of the Ministry of Agriculture and Food we can do this, and it's working very very well.

Mr. Bolan: This is not right on point; well, I suppose it is. There is a private member's bill before this House on the question of a food terminal for northern Ontario. In fact, this was introduced by the member for Cochrane South (Mr. Pope). I'm wondering if your ministry has anything to do with looking into the question of a food terminal in northern Ontario. I disagreed entirely with where this terminal should be placed.

I can't see the sense of bringing all kinds of lettuce and foodstuffs up to Timmins, which is probably one of the most remote parts of northeastern Ontario and then distributing it to the larger centres down from Timmins. If there is to be a food terminal, naturally the only logical place in northeastern Ontario would be North Bay, with probably a subsidiary branch in Sudbury.

In any event, this is again an area, I think in which the ministry can get involved. I say this because there's no question about it—you pay more for that kind of produce, for fresh produce in northern Ontario than in any other part of the province. We can understand that because we know the logistics involved. We know the fact that you have to transport it up there and that you're dealing with many producers and many types of produce. However, if there were a central clearing house for that particular type of operation, it certainly is something which would be not only to the benefit of the people of northern Ontario but certainly a credit to this ministry.

There are many people recently—I suppose I have been one of them too—who have criticized your ministry for being a sort of liaison between all of the other ministries that have something to do with northern Ontario. I think the concept of a Ministry of Northern Affairs is very sound. I really think it is. I think it can be more than what it is now. I realize it's only a year old. Nevertheless, I really feel that it can be a ministry which can develop policy for the development of northern Ontario and that it's just not a ministry through which cheques are sent from the other ministries to pay for roads or whatever the case may be.

As you know, much of the work which is done through your ministry in conjunction with other ministries was, in fact, done by many of these other ministries before—and that's without trying to take anything away from your own ministry. I think it's a good opportunity for this particular ministry to start developing additional policies other than merely an extension of the existing policies which some of the ministries have in northern Ontario. I would like to hear your views on that, if I may.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That's a very sensitive area. There's no question about it.

If I may, with the full support of the member for Nipissing, congratulate our colleague from Cochrane South for the enthusiasm and initiative he has shown in bringing to the attention of this Legislature the need for a food terminal in northeastern Ontario. I think he deserves the full credit of all members from northern Ontario. Certainly he's getting it from this particular ministry. We do think it has significant merit.

I might point out to the member for Nipissing that we are presently working out terms of reference for a study on agricultural marketing in northern Ontario and the question of a food terminal in northern Ontario is part and parcel of that overall study. We are involved from a northern point of view, I might say. This is the whole thrust of our ministry, as you correctly pointed out, so that we can advance the thoughts and the ideas and the needs of northern Ontario through these studies and lean on and liaise with those other ministries that have the line responsibilities. We're doing that and it's well in the works now.

Mr. Bolan: I have some questions on this. May I ask who's carrying out the study; how long do you expect the study to take place; how many people are involved in it; and just what is being studied? I wonder if you would be able to expand on the study. Does it cover all of northern Ontario or a certain region? Is it being done in conjunction with the Ministry of Agriculture and Food and what have you?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I don't have those specific details at my fingertips, but I'll get them. We'll correspond with you on all of those little points you have brought out.

Item 4 agreed to.

On item 5, rail and ferry services:

Mr. Germa: We have a $10 million estimate here for a subsidy to the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission. I believe that's the total responsibility in the item. Could I ask the minister about his relationship with the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission? He says in the briefing to us: "The Ontario Northland Transportation Commission provides rail and ferry passenger services in northern Ontario. The Ministry of Northern Affairs reimburses ONTC for the net operating losses incurred in the provision of these services." Is that your only relationship with ONTC, just to reimburse ONTC for net operating losses that are incurred? Do you have any more connection with the operation than that?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: As you know, they report directly to the Ministry of Northern Affairs. There is a board and chairman. We meet with them on a regular basis. I was in North Bay just last Wednesday meeting with the ONTC board. The policy directions come from this ministry. The everyday operating services are operated by the commission itself. Policy decisions are generated within the Ministry of Northern Affairs. The relationship is a daily one, to say the least. We have the ferry and bus services, transportation, rail lines and norOntair. We're involved on a daily basis with policy decisions as they relate to that excellent transportation system.

Mr. Germa: I'm looking at the breakdown of some of the figures here. It would appear that on the Chi-Cheemaun we made $104,000 on the ferry service between Tobermory and Manitoulin Island. I wonder if you could give me a figure on the Polar Bear Express operation? It appears to me that is a somewhat similar operation. It is a tourist exercise. It seems to be very heavily patronized, as is the ferry. I wonder if we are making a few dollars on that operation?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I would like to report something a little brighter than I can. Last year we had an operating loss of $104,000. There was $296,000 in revenues and about $400,000 in expenditures. We hope to change that this year, I might say, with an aggressive improvement to the service itself, through improvements to the tourist attractions at Moosonee and Moose Factory and through an advertising program here in southern Ontario. You'll see that take effect. In fact, that was one of my purposes for going to North Bay on Wednesday last.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Bernier, the committee of supply reported progress.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Wells the House adjourned at 1 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

LAND TRANSFER TAX EXEMPTIONS

48. Mr. E. Ziembra (High Park-Swansea): Further to my inquiry of April 18, 1978, what are the names, addresses and realty transactions receiving the exemptions by way of application directly to the Ministry of Revenue itself with respect to the Ontario non-resident land transfer and/or speculation tax in Metropolitan Toronto and Mississauga? [Tabled May 2, 1978.]

Hon. L. Maeck (Minister of Revenue): Since April 9, 1974, when the Land Transfer

Tax Act, 1974 and the Land Speculation Tax Act, 1974, came into force, 64 non-resident persons have, as the result of direct application to the ministry received exemption from, or deferral of, tax under those statutes. The attached schedule A lists seven exemptions unconditionally granted by regulation. Schedule B lists 31 conditional exemptions granted under the general authority of Ontario Regulation 250/76. Schedule C lists 26 conditional deferrals granted by order in council. The municipal addresses of the taxpayers named in the attached schedules were not relevant to the ministry in dealing with the requested exemptions, and consequently cannot be provided.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, JUNE 5, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

DEATH OF CARL E. BRANNAN

Hon. Mr. Welch: I know that members of the Legislature will join with me in expressions of sympathy on the sudden death of Carl E. Brannan.

In 1961, Mr. Brannan joined the staff of the Treasury Board of Ontario as assistant secretary and in 1963 was promoted to full secretary. In May 1971, he was appointed to the position of secretary of the cabinet. In this capacity, he also served as chairman of the committee of advisers to the policy and priorities board of cabinet.

On November 26, 1973, Mr. Brannan was appointed as Deputy Solicitor General and in May 1974 he was named Deputy Provincial Secretary for Justice. He was a continuing member of the committee of advisers to the policy and priorities board and was a member of the advisory committees to the Premier (Mr. Davis) on senior public service appointments and compensation.

I am sure we would all want members of the family to note our most sincere regret at this particular time.

RADIOACTIVE WASTE

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Members will recall that on May 23 I announced my intention to advise the House on progress being made with respect to the ultimate disposal of radioactive waste. At that time, I expressed the hope that this would be done jointly with the federal Ministry for Energy, Mines and Resources since this is a matter which is the primary responsibility of the federal government and involves establishment of a national policy.

I am, therefore, pleased we are able to make this statement jointly with my federal counterpart today. My comments this afternoon are the result of discussions among my ministry, the federal Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, Ontario Hydro and Atomic Energy of Canada Limited over the past several years.

The Ontario and federal governments and their respective agencies feel it is important to establish this policy at this time because of the growing public recognition that vigorous efforts should be made immediately to develop a permanent, safe disposal system for radioactive waste materials. This is all the more essential in view of the increasing importance and use of nuclear generating stations in Canada and particularly in Ontario. Such a permanent disposal system is important, irrespective of what decisions are taken in the near or distant future about the growth and use of nuclear power in Ontario.

We have in operation or under construction in this province more than 13,000 megawatts of nuclear power. A safe, satisfactory, and rational solution to the long-term disposal of the waste from these stations must be developed within the next several years.

As highlighted by the Report to the Federal Government on the Management of Canada's Nuclear Wastes by Dr. Kenneth Hare last year, this is a process which must begin in the near future. This statement and the discussions which led to it reflect a current need, as perceived by both the government of Canada and the government of Ontario, for an accelerated research and development program into the disposal of radioactive material arising from Canadian nuclear reactors.

The main elements of the joint program on radioactive waste management being announced today by myself and my federal counterpart, the Honourable Alastair Gillespie, are as follows: The federal and Ontario governments will work together on the first phase of a long-term program to assure the safe and permanent disposal of radioactive waste from nuclear power reactors.

Under this program, the government of Canada will undertake research and development in the immobilization and disposal of radioactive wastes, while the government of Ontario will similarly be responsible for studies on interim storage and transportation.

The immobilization research and development will be performed in the laboratories of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. It will cover theoretical and experimental studies for treating the residues from the reactor fuel cycle so as to produce stable insoluble products for eventual disposal in underground repositories.

The purpose of the disposal research and development is to verify that permanent disposal in a deep underground repository in intrusive igneous rock is a safe, secure and desirable method of disposing of radioactive waste. This will involve geological field parties collecting surface samples and examining other surface features in various parts of the province to determine the full range of chemical and physical properties of rock formations expected to be suitable for a waste disposal facility.

The two governments have agreed that field work should commence in Ontario in 1978. To develop appropriate test equipment, procedures and information on a variety of rock types, experimental drilling will be conducted this year at the laboratories of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. Further drilling of this type at mutually agreed to sites to depths of about 1,000 metres will be carried out at six to 10 other locations during the years 1979 and 1980.

The research and development studies are directed towards an evaluation of a series of barriers to prevent the release of radioactivity to the environment. An analysis will be made of their effectiveness, based upon information derived from the immobilization research and development and the geological studies described above. This information will be used to classify the 1,500 or more potentially suitable geological formations which are known to exist in Ontario.

This joint undertaking is not to be construed as a Canadian position on the question of the reprocessing of irradiated fuel. Canada's position in respect of its fuel cycle development program will be reviewed following the completion of the international nuclear fuel cycle evaluation now under way.

The success of this program will depend on continuous close co-operation and consultation between the two governments and their agencies. Accordingly, there will be full consultation and prior agreement at each step of the process. This will be the responsibility of a co-ordination committee with an AECL chairman and representatives from Ontario Hydro, the Ontario Ministry of Energy and the federal Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. Close co-operation and consultation will be maintained with the communities involved at all stages of the program. While AECL will take the lead, the government of Ontario, including Ontario Hydro, will provide support as appropriate in the public information activities.

A further agreement on a program leading to the selection and acquisition of a site and the subsequent demonstration of geological waste disposal will be concluded between the two governments as quickly as possible.

The tentative schedule being used for planning purposes is: 1978-80, geological survey work, experimental drilling and accelerated research and development; 1981-83, site selection for demonstration repository; 1983, site acquisition; 1985-2000, disposal demonstration; 2000 and beyond, full-scale facilities operational.

The program announced by the two ministers is a further step towards a national plan to deal with nuclear wastes as recommended by Dr. Hare.

In this long-term program, public health and environmental protection will be paramount. The Atomic Energy Control Board will be responsible for licensing the proposed facility. In so doing, the board will work closely with the appropriate federal and Ontario departments, ministries and agencies.

That concludes the main elements of the joint statement. In summary, I would like very briefly to emphasize the following points:

1. Ontario is pleased that the federal government is making a rational, well-thought-out start to the permanent safe disposal of radioactive materials.

Mr. Foulds: You can't guarantee that.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: 2. Prime responsibility for the program lies with the federal government. It assumed jurisdiction under the Atomic Energy Control Act in 1946 and continues to have prime responsibility.

3. Ontario has a vital interest in the success of this program, because 27 per cent of Ontario's electricity in 1977 was being produced from nuclear plants. Ontario is supporting this federal initiative.

Mr. Foulds: Did you ever think of a different kind of program?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: 4. The government of Ontario has insisted that it be consulted at each step and that its prior approval be obtained for all activities leading to a site in Ontario. We want to avoid past unfortunate experiences such as occurred in Madoc and Ignace, when AECL did not advise properly or consult with the communities in advance of launching its programs.

5. The government of Ontario has made no commitment to wastes from other provinces being deposited in Ontario or to reprocessing.

6. It is a multi-year program. No irrevocable decisions have or will be made without full public discussion. The need for this program is based on the long-range needs of Ontario's present nuclear program, not on any expansion.

7. There will be no selection of a site for at least two years. Work in the meantime will simply be rock squeezing, involving geological survey work, experimental drilling and accelerated research and development.

COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, apparently there has been some confusion in so far as the meetings of the standing general government committee are concerned as a result of Friday's order paper. Perhaps, for purposes of clarification, we should indicate that it's my understanding that the standing general government committee will meet not in camera—and I underline, "not in camera"—on Wednesday, June 7, starting at 10 a.m. and going into the evening, again on June 12 for the evening, and on June 14, starting at 10 a.m. No meetings of this committee are being held in camera, as announced.

ORAL QUESTIONS

RADIOACTIVE WASTE

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, further to his statement. Could he tell the House what the capacity for the retention of used fuel is in our present facilities and, in that connection, whether the timetable that is more or less tacitly involved in this statement is rapid enough for the needs of our expanding atomic facility here in Ontario, since the first drilling will not take place for two years?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, the time framework is really from now until the year 2000, which is not all that long—the year 2000 seems like an eternity away; it's 22 years away—

Mr. Peterson: We will be here.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —but the time framework has been based on the knowledge that we have a good deal more time to store our waste fuel in the bays at the generating plants. We call it interim storage, but scientists tell us it could be stored there for an indefinite period of time. We obviously don't want to accept that fact, but certainly it can be stored where it is now for well beyond the year 2000.

[2:15]

We have, in other words, room to expand in the highly, highly unlikely event that the concept we are trying to verify to this program should prove unworkable. I want to stress that this is really more than a hypothesis that we are working on. Scientists are calling it "verifying a concept" that has been developed, that has been looked at and studied here in Canada and in other countries with similar situations.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: I am concerned that the drilling that is going to take place on an experimental basis at the laboratories of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited is going to be accompanied by indepth work in six to 10 locations. Can the minister indicate where those locations might be, since it appears on page five—and I quote from his statement—"The government of Ontario will provide support as appropriate in the public information activities"? Where is the drilling going to take place?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It is at this point impossible to say where the six or eight or 10 sites of intensive drilling will take place. As far as we have indicated in the statement here and in covering materials, there are at the present time about 1,600 possible locations that are known to contain the kind of igneous rock that might be suitable for this purpose. Over the next three years they will begin to reduce the potential number of sites to a point of six to 10 and at that time certainly a good deal of work with the communities as well as with the geological rock formation will take place. In other words, the decision as to where to drill in the final six to 10 communities will not only be a scientific and geological decision, it will also be a social and economic decision.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Do I understand from the minister's statement that as far as the federal and provincial governments are concerned, it is unlikely that we will know that there can be safe and permanent disposal of radioactive waste underground until around about the year 2000, that is about 22 years from now? If that is the case, can I ask the minister on what basis is Ontario Hydro going forward with further commitments to nuclear power stations without knowing whether or not safe, permanent disposal is a possibility?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: As I tried to indicate in response to an earlier question, this is the possibility of deep storage in a geological foundation. It is really more than a hypothesis, more than a hope or a wish or an assumption of the kind that scientists often take in any kind of experiment.

Mr. Warner: Is it guaranteed?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: This is what the scientists call "the concept verification." It is a concept that has been proven to be sound, in their minds at least.

Mr. Warner: It is not guaranteed.

Ms. Gigantes: Proven by whom?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We are taking deliberate steps, one by one, over this time period to absolutely verify the concept. I suppose that if we were in a panic situation, which certainly we are not, we might say that we wished to reduce the time frame to two or three years—

Mr. Warner: As good as a HUDAC guarantee?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —but we do have time if we proceed now in a systematic, methodical manner. We have plenty of time to find a permanent solution to the disposal of our irradiated fuel.

Mr. J. Reed: When the minister is talking about this work being very little more than a confirmation of what he understands to have been proven in other jurisdictions, is he aware of geological survey circular 779, US Department of the Interior, entitled Geological Disposal of High Level Radioactive Wastes Earth Science Perspectives, dated 1978, which I think is probably the most current piece of information of its kind? This still expresses very profound concern about the ability of these techniques, as they are known at the present time, to permanently remove these highly toxic wastes from the biosphere. Is he aware of this circular and if he is not, will he take the trouble to study it thoroughly, because it indicates that—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. J. Reed: —that a good deal more work is necessary?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I cannot claim to have read that particular document. What I have done is to listen to many of our outstanding scientists in this country with Atomic Energy of Canada Limited who are people whose judgement and knowledge we respect and must respect. After all, not all the wisdom is across the border. We happen to have some in this country as well.

Mr. Kerrio: We export it.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It is the responsibility of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and their scientists to tell us and prove to us in elected positions that their concept is sound.

Ms. Gigantes: It's sloppy.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: That is what this exercise is all about.

Ms. Gigantes: You are sloppy.

Mr. Deans: Supplementary: Since there is some serious question about the appropriateness of what is being proposed, I wonder if the minister would consider referring the documents that he filed with us today, together with all of the other pertinent information, to the select committee that is constituted now to study the needs of Ontario Hydro and matters related to nuclear power in order that we could devote some time during this calendar year to pursuing this at the level of the members of the Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I cannot fully accept the premise upon which that statement was based.

Mr. Deans: Ignore the premise.

Mr. Warner: Try answering the question.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: This is a highly doubtful kind of comment.

Mr. Deans: Ignore the premise.

Mr. Warner: The minister is highly doubtful, but let him answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The proposal, which was a proposal rather than a question, or phrased in the form of a question, as to whether this is something that might go to select committee directly along with documents is something I would like to take under advisement.

I am tabling in this session today supporting documents—Canadian documents mainly—that are relevant to this particular subject. On the matter of whether or not this should go directly to the select committee of this House, this is something I would like to take under advisement.

Mr. Kerrio: Supplementary: As the minister is aware of the government's position of making the polluter pay, in view of the fact that we have signed contracts to get the uranium taken out of the ground that are literally going to put millions of dollars into someone's pocket, and in view of the fact that in his statement he has suggested that the province of Ontario, the government of Canada and Ontario Hydro are going to participate in putting nuclear waste in a safe place, is the minister going to find out if the suppliers that are going to make millions of dollars in supplying this uranium to us are going to participate?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I don't quite buy the assumption or the premises that there are polluters here.

Mr. Kerrio: This is pollution of the worst kind.

Mr. Foulds: Has the minister ever heard of tailings?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: If the premise there is that it is the people in the uranium industry who are the polluters, to the extent that pollution is involved in nuclear energy and in the development of any form of energy I should remind all of us—and I think we are all aware of this—that the beneficiaries of nuclear energy are all of the people of Ontario. Twenty-seven per cent of the electric power that we saw here in the year 1977, which we all enjoyed, came from nuclear energy.

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Roman starts to be the principal beneficiary. He is going to languish in the sun.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I certainly think it has been recognized that part of the cost of the concept verification work that will be carried out through this joint agreement will be carried by all of the people of Ontario—a very small amount. But certainly Hydro also recognizes that the hydro consumer will also have to bear part of the costs.

Mr. Warner: Roman makes billions; the public pays.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: But there again, I can assure members it is a very small amount. If, for example, we were to say that the total cost of a kilowatt hour of hydro is 28 mills, the cost of doing the work and finding the repository for the permanent solution is 0.5 mills, which is about one fifty-sixth of all of the cost of nuclear energy production. So it is a very small amount.

Mr. Nixon: Put that in hundreds of millions of dollars, will you?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It is a very small amount.

Mr. Kerrio: You're going to buy the hole back, that's what you're going to do.

Mr. Sneaker: Final supplementary; the member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Foulds: I have a two-part question for the minister, arising out of his last answer. Do I understand correctly that the Ontario government, Ontario Hydro, the federal government and AECL are committed solely to disposal through burying of one kind or another, that they are looking at no other alternatives and that is the only thing they are examining? Secondly, is it not true that Ontario Hydro, in estimating that nuclear energy is the cheapest form of energy, have not included the costs of disposal, which we do not know, or the cost of decommissioning nuclear plants?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I've forgotten the first part of the member's question.

Mr. Foulds: Are they committed only to burial of various kinds? The minister has a short memory.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Thank you. This particular joint agreement deals with the verification of the concepts which involve disposal in a deep geological foundation, namely granite or pluton or whatever you want to call it. That is this particular concept. I don't know whether, in the course of the years, other methods of permanent disposal will be seriously studied. There are others available; for example, the West Germans are using salt mines to store it.

Mr. Foulds: That's burial. That's burial in the ground of various types.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It's burial. Well, it's essentially the same thing.

Ms. Gigantes: It hasn't worked in the States. Sloppy.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The question also referred to costs. Ontario Hydro recognizes that whatever costs are entailed in the eventual permanent, managed storage and disposal of irradiated fuel which they have produced, it is a fair and honest cost that should be charged to the hydro consumers.

Mr. Foulds: But they are not including it in their figures.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: That cost, as I indicated very early on here today, is one fifty-sixth of the total cost of the Hydro bill.

Mr. Warner: That's disgusting.

Interjections.

MEAT PACKING DISPUTE

Mr. Nixon: I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour having to do with the news reports of the negotiations between Allied Packers, Swift's and Canada Packers. Can she tell us what we might expect here, assuming that the news reports are correct and that the workers may very well not vote to accept the 12½ per cent offer and that if Swift's is struck, Canada Packers is going to close down its facility and lock out the workers?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the news report, to all intents and purposes, is correct. That's precisely what has been agreed.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: Is the minister going to be doing anything in preparation for, let's say, the expectation—we hope it won't happen but perhaps it will—that there will be a lengthy strike involving many thousands of workers and involving the meat packing industry? Is she going to wait until a strike occurs before she makes her services available, or is she concerned about that in any way?

Hon. B. Stephenson: To suggest that the ministry has not been involved in these negotiations up to this point is, of course, ludicrous. The division of industrial relations has been actively involved. In fact, the director of industrial relations for the Ministry of Labour has been involved in these negotiations and is continuing to be involved. We are making every effort in trying to resolve the problem rather than have such a strike and ensuing lockout occur.

Mr. Nixon: What does the minister think about the policy that Canada Packers has enunciated, that without having a strike there they are going to lock out 6,000 workers in sympathy with the company that provides their major competition?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I gather that this is a relatively new and unusual stance on the part of the member companies or the group of companies in the area of meat packing. They have never before, I gather, stood together when they were faced with potential labour-management problems. This was a decision which, I gather, was made by the management of those companies. It is not a decision in which government had any part.

Mr. Nixon: And the minister doesn't intend to have any.

Hon. B. Stephenson: The opinion of the Ministry of Labour has already been expressed to the companies.

Mr. Nixon: What was that? That is really what I was asking. What is the minister's opinion? I asked her to make a comment on that.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary, the member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Does the ministry plan any further intervention, in view of the fact that there does not appear to be a dispute between Canada Packers and its workers—it involves another company, to which they are not related in any way—and, therefore, there is collusion which is probably in violation of federal anti-competition law, let alone good-faith bargaining?

[2:30]

Mr. Kerrio: You call it solidarity.

Hon. B. Stephenson: There are, of course, negotiations going on amongst the management and labour of all the packing companies at this time. The statement that was made by Canada Packers was related to their potential action in terms of a fellow company, should a strike occur there. But there are negotiations going on with all of the meat packers right now.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: Would the minister tell the House what the opinion of the ministry was that was expressed to management?

Hon. B. Stephenson: It was simply expressed that this was a most unusual form of action, but we were informed that it had been carried out by others before—

Mr. Nixon: That would make them turn pale.

Hon. B. Stephenson:—though not in the meat packing industry.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: If the ministry is prepared to condone this action by Canada Packers, is the government also prepared to bring in legislation to permit secondary boycotts in the cases where labour unions are in a strike situation and other workers wish to provide them with support by also going on strike?

Hon. B. Stephenson: There was no such statement made that the Ministry of Labour or the government condoned this action.

Mr. McClellan: Double standard.

Ms. Gigantes: Wouldn't that be fair?

RADIOACTIVE WASTE

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Energy arising out of the statement he has made today. I want to begin by expressing concern at the fact that—

Mr. Speaker: Question?

Mr. Cassidy:—that the government has entered into this agreement prior to the reports of both—

Mr. Speaker: Question?

Mr. Cassidy:—the Porter commission and the select committee on Hydro.

Mr. Speaker: Is the minister aware of the recommendations of Dr. Robert Uffen, who was a vice-chairman of Hydro and the former chief science adviser to the cabinet, where he recommended that recommendation 27 of the Sir Brian Flowers report in Britain, which called for no commitment to a large program of nuclear fission power until it had been demonstrated beyond reasonable doubt that a method exists to ensure the safe containment of long-lived, highly radioactive wastes for the indefinite future? Is he aware that this recommendation of Sir Brian Flowers, in the opinion of the vice-chairman of Hydro, should also be applied in this country? If so, can the minister therefore comment on what is happening with Ontario Hydro's nuclear commitment, since it appears from his statement today that in fact there will be an expansion of that commitment prior to knowing whether the proposed method of waste disposal is safe?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, if I could respond to the latter part of that question first, I think we should make it clear here, as was also indicated in the statement, that this joint agreement and this attempt to develop this program is not based on possible future expansion and it is not predicated on future expansion of Ontario Hydro in its nuclear generating capacity. We have irradiated fuel there right now that we have to deal with, even if we stopped building any new plants tomorrow.

So it's not predicated on the idea that we are going to go on and on expanding our nuclear power program.

In response to the other part of the question, about Dr. Flowers of Britain, I find it rather interesting that the member should quote him, because, as the member probably knows, Britain after a long exercise, through a special committee of its Parliament, has now decided to embark on a program of reprocessing nuclear energy which goes far beyond anything that we would have dared to do in this country. In fact, we here have been saying that we will do nothing in terms of implementing a program of reprocessing at least until the international moratorium has expired. Britain is far ahead of us—maybe somebody would say far more courageous, far more intelligent or far more something; certainly they are not nearly as cautious as we are in this country—on the whole question of reprocessing nuclear energy. So I find it rather interesting that the member should refer to a report coming from Britain.

Mr. Foulds: You are not answering the question.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I would also say that our joint agreement and our plan are based on other Canadian scientists and on Canadian scientists whose work we respect very highly.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: In pointing out that Robert Uffen is a distinguished Canadian scientist who spent a full year studying this matter and is obviously well qualified to comment on it, perhaps I could pursue this: Can the minister confirm that Ontario Hydro is now planning an energy centre in eastern Ontario with a 12,000-megawatt nuclear capacity, that the potential site for that facility has been narrowed down to only four locations, that it is planned that the actual construction will begin sometime around the early 1990s—

Mr. Sterling: They never said that it was going to be nuclear.

Mr. Cassidy: —and that this will more than double the existing and projected nuclear capacity of Ontario Hydro? Is it not correct that in projecting this energy centre in eastern Ontario based on nuclear power, Hydro's planning for that is facilitated by the assumption that we have the long-term storage problems resolved through the announcement the minister made today?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, I can reply categorically to that question that no decision has been made by either Hydro or this government on any future expansion of any generating plant, and in particular, any nuclear plant of the kind the honourable member is referring to. Those are the kinds of comments and observations that are drawn from the realm of mythology and not of fact.

Ms. Gigantes: Mythology? What is the minister talking about?

Mr. Warner: Turn around and tell the members back there. Address your remarks to the back row.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I would hope that my fellow representatives from Ottawa would help us to keep the general public informed about facts and not generate mythologies and myths.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: What is your point of privilege?

Mr. Cassidy: The minister implied that I was misleading the House, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: No, he did not.

Hon. B. Stephenson: You've got a guilty conscience, Michael Morris, that's all.

Mr. Speaker: He did not. He said that the question was predicated on improper facts.

Mr. Cassidy: No, mythology, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. Reed: A supplementary: I wonder if the minister could tell the House whether or not the concept of the repository will provide for retrieving of the spent fuel?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, I have been advised by the scientists that a repository is, in fact, a dead end. That's it. You cannot retrieve out of the repository. You could retrieve out of interim storage centres, of course, but once it's in the repository it's the end of the line and it's irretrievable.

Ms. Gigantes: The minister is wrong. He's all wrong.

Mr. Turner: She is the expert.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Okay, well you tell us.

Mr. Cassidy: Before the minister resorts to charges about mythology again, is he aware that it has been reported that Ontario Hydro has announced the fact that it is drilling and conducting a geophysical survey program in eastern Ontario in connection with the four potential generating station sites in that area and that the particular report about the program for eastern Ontario has, in fact, been reprinted in Short Circuit, which is compiled by Hydro's own communication services? Mythology indeed!

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I responded to the question, which was, had Hydro decided—or I think the honourable member made it a fact rather than a question.

Mr. Warner: The minister is in trouble now.

Mr. Foulds: They're drilling.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The fact is, and it's as categorical this time as it was the last time, neither this government nor Ontario Hydro has made a decision to build these big generating plants or narrow it down to two sites or whatever. They have not done it.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, of course not.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: There has been no decision made and we are a long way from reaching a decision.

Mr. Brethaupt: But they are looking.

Mr. MacDonald: They are drilling to prepare for it.

Mr. Cassidy: The government is spending millions of dollars to find a site.

Mr. Foulds: They are looking.

Mr. Stong: Supplementary: Now that the minister has conducted a study into the safe disposal of spent fuel has he also included in his study a program of safe transportation of this radioactive material through our communities from point of creation to point of disposal?

Mr. Foulds: No, they haven't. They haven't even done that.

Ms. Gigantes: They'll transport it from eastern Ontario, right from eastern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, as we indicated in the statement, the vast responsibility for research and development and the management of nuclear energy remains with the federal government. However, in this joint agreement, it is noted that the question of transportation is the responsibility of the Ontario government, or more precisely its agency, Ontario Hydro, which certainly will continue its research on transportation methods.

Mr. Foulds: Table the agreement.

APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAM

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Minister of Colleges and Universities. In 1973, a recommendation was made by the task force on industrial training that the Ministry of Colleges and Universities undertake an independent study of the costs of on-the-job apprentice training that are borne by employers and the benefits that accrue to employers from having apprentices. Can the minister tell the House whether any such study has been undertaken and, if so, what were the findings?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Yes, such a study has been undertaken. The findings are rather extensive. I will be glad to supply the member with a copy of that report. I think the critics have a copy, but if there's any doubt, we will make sure the member gets a copy of that report. It was completed only a matter of a month or six weeks ago.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: If the minister is referring to the study of the machinists' trade by Currie, Coopers and Lybrand which came down about four months ago, has the minister information which relates to other trades and the costs and benefits of apprenticeship training in those industries? If so, will he table that information tomorrow when he makes his announcement about apprenticeship training?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We are certainly prepared to table as much information as we have on the cost of apprenticeship training. It's fairly extensive.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: The minister now has left me in doubt. If he doesn't have very much information, can the minister explain how the government can launch a major initiative in the absence of comprehensive information over just what are the costs of apprenticeship training to employers and the benefits to employers as well as to the province at large?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I suggested that the information is rather extensive and not the contrary. We will supply that for him tomorrow.

RADIOACTIVE WASTE

Mr. J. Reed: I have a question for the Minister of Energy. Further to the area which he has skated around today and avoided, he promised an answer the day he first made a statement saying he would make a major statement today regarding radioactive waste. I had asked him to what extent Ontario Hydro was involved with AECL in reprocessing. I asked him how many bundles of spent fuel had been shipped to AECL for experimental work during the time the moratorium was on.

Mr. Speaker: What are you going to ask today?

Mr. J. Reed: I would like to ask him today if these rock-bound repositories are to be of the non-retrievable type, why is AECL contemplating reprocessing by the year 2000 and why did it tell me so?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I have the answers to the questions which the honourable member opposite raised. I will be quite pleased to read them to the House, at this point, if that is your wish, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. member: No, don't waste time.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Do you wish, Mr. Speaker, that I read the question? It was a multi-dimensional question.

Mr. Speaker: How long will it take?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It's a long question. It will take five minutes, I guess. Is the member prepared to listen to this?

Mr. J. Reed: Yes.

Mr. Martel: Don't torture us.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I can send it to the member by mail also.

Mr. Conway: You will get a holiday in Madoc for this.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The first question was: Is Ontario Hydro participating with Atomic Energy of Canada Limited in the experimental reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel at least to the extent of supplying spent fuel bundles to AECL?

The answer given to me by Ontario Hydro is that small quantities of irradiated fuel owned by Ontario Hydro are sent to the research and development laboratories of Atomic Energy of Canada on an ongoing basis for examination as part of a joint fuel development program. This is aimed at refining fuel performance and assessing fuel storage, transportation and disposal methods.

In addition, arrangements were made in 1975 to sell 72 irradiated Pickering fuel bundles to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. AECL subsequently shipped this material from Chalk River to Italy for experimental reprocessing by CNEN, Comitato Nazionale per L'Energia Nucleare.

Mr. Cassidy: You'd bomb in west Toronto with that accent.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: This is the only transfer by Hydro, the only irradiated fuel to AECL, that is ultimately involved in reprocessing studies.

In reply to the second question on how much material has been shipped and how much is planned to be shipped in the near future, the total shipment of irradiated fuel from Ontario Hydro-owned generating stations to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited is summarized as follows: Pickering generating station, 78 bundles plus 60 elements; Bruce generating station, six bundles plus nine elements.

[2:45]

With the exception of the 72 Pickering bundles sold to AECL, included in the above total, the fuel was sent for examination purposes only. Current plans consist of the shipment of 14 irradiated fuel bundles in 1978 and 11 in 1979. These will be employed in research investigation on fuel storage, transportation and fuel encasement prior to disposal.

On the third part of the member's question, as to just what degree of magnitude is reprocessing being carried out in the province now; to our knowledge no fuel reprocessing of any kind is being carried on in Ontario at this time, nor has there been in the recent past. The question should be addressed to the government of Canada and its nuclear research and development agency, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited.

Finally: What safeguards are undertaken with this unprecedented kind of transportation to ensure that there is going to be no spillage? Regular shipments of irradiated fuel have been made from the nuclear-powered demonstration reactor at Rolphton, Ontario, to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited at Chalk River, Ontario, for storage purposes for more than 15 years. Additional shipments have been less regularly made from the Douglas Point, Pickering and Bruce generating stations as part of the ongoing fuel development program.

All shipments are approved by the Atomic Energy Control Board and made in massive shipping containers. There has never been an adverse consequence to the public of Ontario from these shipments by Ontario Hydro. The containers are designed to withstand accident conditions with no significant release to their contents.

Mr. Cassidy: Has there ever been an accident?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The reference test conditions of the International Atomic Energy Agency include a nine-metre drop onto an unyielding surface, a one-metre drop penetration test on a 15-centimetre diameter steel post, and a 30-minute exposure in an enveloping petroleum fire at 800 degrees centigrade, all carried out in sequence. An additional immersion test in 15 metres of water is also required.

Recent mechanical tests in the United States have included drops from helicopters, rocket-driven through impact into concrete abutments, and collision with high-speed locomotives. In spite of all this, no containers have failed.

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary: Since we are on the subject of nuclear waste, I would like to know what the minister is doing about the other half of the problem, which many scientists consider far more significant even than the one to which he has addressed his mind today. That is the problem of tailings in the mines.

What is the government policy on that? What is the ministry doing? What studies is it undertaking at this time?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: This joint agreement deals only with the matter of spent fuels—

Mr. Peterson: That was my premise, with which the minister will agree.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The question of the mine tailings and so forth is a subject which is not the responsibility of this government or my ministry, but rather of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McCague), working with Atomic Energy and Environment Canada. I cannot answer that particular question.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, is it possible to redirect the question?

Mr. Speaker: I don't think it was supplementary to begin with.

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister, since he won't give us the information, if he has it, about where drillings are going to take place for fuel waste disposal, can he give us the information about where AECL has been doing its drilling over the last two years? Also, can he tell us how, in this plan that lies before us, he is going to see any pattern emerging with the development of fuel reprocessing and waste disposal? I am asking him to relate to the kind of experiments that have been going on at Chalk River—to tell us that Ontario Hydro doesn't know about this, he doesn't know about it, and we are not well down the path to reprocessing here in Ontario right now. Isn't this all going to happen in eastern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I will try to recall the many dimensions of that question.

First of all, on the reprocessing of fuel, which is in itself an extremely important question and one which I am sure will be discussed here for many years to come, this joint program does not deal with the question of reprocessing. It is not a sneaky way to introduce reprocessing, and I would like to assure the House of that.

The member has implied that I knew where the drilling was taking place—

Ms. Gigantes: Shouldn't you know?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —or is about to take place. I do not know where the drilling is taking place. That's the whole purpose of this exercise.

Ms. Gigantes: Shouldn't you know?

Mr. Kerrio: We've never accused him of knowing anything.

Ms. Gigantes: It's been going on for two years.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Before Atomic Energy of Canada or even Ontario Hydro, before any of our agencies go out and do the kind of thing that was done at Madoc, before that happens again, this government here and the government of Canada are going to have to approve this thing step by step. This is one reason why we felt the responsible, elected government at Ottawa, here, and even locally, are much more involved in the question of experimental drilling or anything else of the sort.

WOMEN'S HEALTH SERVICES

Mr. Breaugh: I'd like to pursue with the Minister of Health the matter that was raised by my colleague from Beaches-Woodbine (Ms. Bryden) concerning statistics used in the Ontario Status of Women Council publication, About Face.

Is the minister in agreement with the statistics quoted in here that one in five hysterectomies are unnecessary and that women are prescribed tranquilizing drugs at double the rate of men? Are those statistics reasonably accurate for Ontario this year?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I have yet to see the report. It hasn't reached me yet. It's been released, but it hasn't got through the system to me.

As the member knows and this has been discussed in our estimates several times, and as I mentioned to his colleague on Friday—we are looking at the question of trends in surgery as they pertain to all in the population, not just the female sex. I would have difficulty attacking or substantiating those figures at this point.

Mr. Breaugh: Supplementary: I wonder if the minister could take the time to table in this House what he considers to be the relevant statistics on those two matters in this province.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I think that until the study we have under way is completed, I'd have some difficulty in being able to say in a definitive manner what is an appropriate number of hysterectomies, appendectomies or tonsillectomies. It's very much a matter for individual judgement and argument, as the member knows.

We're hoping this particular study will help us get a better fix on what is appropriate so that we can then take the appropriate action.

PRAXIS INVESTIGATION

Mrs. Campbell: My question is to the Attorney General. I would ask him if at this time he is prepared to report to the House as to the tabling of the Praxis report.

He may recall that this was discussed before. My understanding was that he had undertaken to table what he termed the "relevant portions" of that report. Could we now know when or what we are going to have tabled?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: To the best of my knowledge, I've related the relevant portions in the various statements I've made with respect to this matter.

I'm not suggesting for a moment that the member for St. George has suggested that I would table the police report as such because, obviously, these police reports contain a lot of information that has to be treated as confidential, largely because they often contain hearsay statements, for example, allegations that have been made that have not been proven, or proven to be well-founded, at least, and it would be very unfair to individual citizens to have these reports tabled in their entirety.

It would be helpful to me if the honourable member would direct my attention to any specific aspect of the matter with which she is not satisfied, insofar as my responses in the Legislature are concerned, and I would attempt to assist her and other members of the House who are interested. I've attempted to the best of my ability, to relate what I consider to be the relevant matters to this House, as this whole matter has unfolded.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: Are we to take it then that at this point in time the minister feels that he has relayed to the House all of the relevant matters? For instance, I raised the question of the lack of participation in the questioning of John Hladun. The Attorney General didn't seem to know anything about this and yet this is the person who was interviewed by the CBC and was able, according to that story, to shed a great deal of light on this. None of this, apparently, was used by the commission or anybody else in trying to investigate this total matter.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, I recall the honourable member mentioned that name. I've asked my office to obtain particulars as to the identity of this gentleman. I don't know what has been done at this point in time. It may be that the honourable member can provide us with the correct spelling of the name, if my office does not already have it.

Mrs. Campbell: Ask Hansard.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't know whether Hansard has the correct spelling or if there's been any problem in locating him. In view of the honourable member's statement the other day I think this gentleman should be interviewed. I will undertake to see that that happens.

When I say I've related all relevant information, I want to make it clear, to the best of my ability I've given the House any relevant information in the context of the public interest. There is other information that obviously would be considered relevant in its broadest sense, but it would not be in the public interest to reveal some of the confidential information. Insofar as that particular individual is concerned, I will ensure that he is interviewed, because I don't treat the matter as a closed book. We will certainly pursue that aspect of it.

Mr. Lawlor: Supplementary question: Would the Attorney General reveal to this House who the original informant or purloiner of the documents in question was? If he's not prepared to do that, how on earth did the editor of the Toronto Sun come into possession of a number of documents in question?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I'm not prepared to reveal the extent to which I am aware, or believe I'm aware, of the identity of that individual. Secondly, I'm not aware at this point in time what information the editor of the Toronto Sun has. I'm sorry, that's something that has escaped my attention.

FOOD LAND PRESERVATION

Mr. Swart: A question to the Minister of Housing: I want to pursue with him the matter of the proposed October Ontario Municipal Board hearing on the Niagara region urban development boundaries and about which I gave him a little additional information three or four weeks ago. Will he tell us now that there is no truth to the stated conjecture by officials of his ministry and TEIGA that the government may not permit those hearings to be held; or if he does he may restrict it to dealing with minor variations of the boundaries which have been set and not let it deal with the whole principle of preservation of the fruit and grape lands?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I'm not sure what the honourable member means about no truth in the fact. There's been no statement by my ministry or by anybody from the Ontario Municipal Board or others to the best of my knowledge.

As for the hearing, I'm not sure whether the hearing will proceed in October or not. It depends on some of the surrounding circumstances relating to another hearing in the Barrie region as to whether this hearing will proceed or not. I cannot add anything further to that answer.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary: Subsequent to that, will he assure this House that the hearing will proceed at some time, whether it is in October or not, and that there will not be any direction from the government that it shall not be held or that there will be a restriction? Will there be a letter go from the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough), as there was in the Barrie case, in which he affected the hearings which took place?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I give the member and the House the assurance that the hearing will eventually be held. As to the second part of the question, I am not going to give the House the assurance that there will not be some direction from my ministry or from the government to the Ontario Municipal Board, since we have already established the boundaries as far as urban development is concerned in that particular regional plan.

[3:00]

An hon. member: You are not going to let the full hearing proceed.

TOURISM

Mr. Eakins: To the Minister of Industry and Tourism: Is the minister aware of the forecast for the national travel deficit for 1978 in that one source predicts that it will be reduced by $100 million, but most other sources are forecasting that it will further deteriorate to about $2 billion? Given that Ontario tourism figures generally range from one third to one half of the nation's total, is the minister aware of this and is he prepared to accept such a deficit this year?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I am aware of varying forecasts that have been made relating to the potential deficit in Canada. Certainly I don't accept and I don't think anyone wants to accept such a deficit as some are forecasting. From what we can gather within Ontario and from contacts with other provinces, we really aren't looking at it that pessimistically. We do think there is going to be an improvement in the tourism business this year. We do feel we will make a substantial reduction in the deficit.

Mr. Peterson: Is the Treasurer making the forecast?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: We are not going to get back to an even-Stephen basis because we are running close to $2 billion in deficit, but we feel that we will make some impact on reducing that.

Mr. Eakins: I would rather accept the optimistic forecast, but would the minister not feel that there is still time to initiate further stimulative measures such as a tax credit for holidaying at home in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I have read that very interesting observation in the report that was prepared by the honourable member and his colleagues. Quite frankly, when one starts getting into the tax credit situation, it isn't something I would want to comment on until I would find out whether or not it is going to be done on a national basis with all of the provinces being involved. I am sure, as the honourable member knows, there are some difficulties if we try to do it as the province of Ontario as opposed to other provinces not joining in. That is a matter that can be discussed, I would think, at the tourism ministers' conference that will be held this coming fall.

Mr. Wildman: Supplementary: Could the minister indicate if what he hopes will turn the situation around is mainly his advertising program, or is he and the ministry attempting to get more travel agencies and tourist outfitters involved in package programs to encourage more Canadian and American travel in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I think it is a combination of all these things. I certainly wouldn't think we are going to turn around the very large deficit we are experiencing in a short period of time simply with advertising.

In the ministry, we do have a number of people who are working in conjunction with travel agencies, with airlines and with individual tourist resort operators. Package deals are being put together, one of which is operating very successfully at the present time in northwestern Ontario involving North Central Airlines. North Central Airlines is also working right at this very time with resort operators in northeastern Ontario to establish a similar type of program. They have been very successful in bringing people in.

Mr. Wildman: What about Europe?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: The honourable member mentioned Europe. Yes, we are doing some work in Europe as well. There are package tours being put together over there again involving some of the airlines. I would mention not only Europe, but also North Central Airlines, for example, who are bringing people over from Japan to be in resorts in northwestern Ontario this year.

Mr. Peterson: When is the Minister of Housing coming back?

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: Is the minister concerned that the deficit might be adversely affected by the fish war with the United States which is now going to involve sports fishing?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I am glad the honourable member asked that because we would be concerned if there was going to be the ridiculous situation of having sports fishermen involved in this area.

Mr. Ashe: Another blunder by those Liberals in Ottawa.

Mr. Bradley: It is nice to have you back.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Perhaps I might be given the opportunity to explain to the House, because I am sure there would be some interest, that we had expected a statement in the House today by the federal Minister of Fisheries, Mr. LeBlanc.

Mr. Nixon: Our minister wasn't even here.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: However, he did not make such a statement. The understanding we have is that in answer to a question in the House, Mr. LeBlanc said that Canadian waters are to remain open to sports fishing.

Mr. Jamieson said in the House as well today that he feels the situation will be completely clarified within a few hours.

Mr. Nixon: In American waters only.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: So my understanding is that apparently regardless of what is happening as far as the American waters are concerned, the Canadian government does not intend to impose its ban on sports fishing.

OIL SPILL

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, since today is World Environment Day it seems appropriate to ask the Minister of the Environment what he is doing to discharge his responsibility to protect the environment of Ontario? I have questions specifically in two areas.

Mr. Bradley: Yes or no.

Ms. Bryden: First, when is he going to extend the application of the Environmental Assessment Act to the whole of the private sector and not just to designated industries as at present?

Second, what is he doing about a very specific environmental problem which has just been reported to me? I refer to a large fuel oil spill in Lake Superior, perhaps amounting to several thousands of gallons, which occurred last week at the Kimberly-Clark plant near Terrace Bay. Has the minister received a report from the company on this spill? Has he sent officials to check on the accuracy of the report? What have they found? What steps is he taking to clean up this spill? What effects does he think the spill may have on the aquatic and bird life in the area?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, no, yes, yes, and maybe.

Mr. Nixon: This will be good.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, those short questions are very easy to answer. On the first matter, I think the honourable member knows that the Environmental Assessment Act has not yet been extended to cover municipal projects—that is the second step. The third step will be the private projects.

Mr. Wildman: When?

Hon. Mr. McCague: I will be going to the municipal liaison committee in September with the proposal for municipal projects. I want to discuss it with them. I want to have some time for some input from them, and I am not prepared to make any statement at this time as to when and if the private projects will come under the act.

As far as the spill that the honourable member is referring to, I do not have a report on that yet.

SERVICES FOR THE PHYSICALLY HANDICAPPED

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health: In view of the minister's commitment in the early spring of 1977 to the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch) that he would do a complete review of the present situation regarding comments made by the Ontario Advisory Council on the Physically Handicapped regarding unnecessary delays in the disabled being released from hospitals and other programs of the Ministry of Community and Social Services, which provided assistive devices which, of course, come from the Ministry of Health, would the minister now make known to this House what his findings are and what actions he will take?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I missed the very first part of the question—whether it was a statement attributed to me or a letter, or whatever. The provincial secretary and I have recently discussed this matter following a visit to a rehabilitation hospital, and it is a matter which is under consideration. In the past year I have also had a report prepared by my staff, which is still in the works, on the question of prosthetics and orthotics, and that is still very much under consideration. Of course, in a time of restraint it is questionable whether we would be able to add any new benefits on a very large scale. But certainly we are considering it.

Mr. Blundy: In view of another newspaper story today about physically handicapped people near Pickering who cannot leave a very expensive and emotionally debilitating chronic care unit because of this need, would the minister have some comment on what immediate action he is going to take to get these people back into community life and out of the expensive institutions in which they are living?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The social workers in the particular hospitals, and from time to time some of my own staff in the ministry, do get involved in trying to assist in the placement of individuals back into the community wherever possible. It's not an easy problem to resolve. The ultimate resolution will be a very expensive one.

I'm not trying to use finances as a scapegoat by any manner or means. The fact of the matter is that it will be a very expensive one, but we are not going to shy away from it. We will try to arrive at a meaningful resolution and then, within the availability of funds and our ability to fund any new program, try to get at it.

Mr. McClellan: Supplementary: Does the minister not agree that it is completely inappropriate that the disabled have to obtain essential prosthetics either from charity or from general welfare assistance, and that the time has come to include the provision of prosthetics under prescription in the Ontario Health Insurance Plan?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: If the honourable member is saying that there should never ever again be a role for the private sector volunteer agency to assist, then I wouldn't agree with that at all.

Mr. McClellan: I never said that.

Mr. Warner: What nonsense.

Mr. McClellan: That's too stupid to comment on.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It is a matter which we are looking at, but again I remind the honourable member that we are in difficult financial times and anything we might do would have to be tempered by those fiscal realities.

Mr. Havrot: The fairy godmother brings the money down for them.

Mr. Nixon: Just a paltry $14 million.

INCO SAFETY COMPLAINT

Mr. Martel: A question to the Minister of Labour: Is the minister aware that on February 28, Cathy Duhaime of the United Steelworkers was sent home by a supervisor, Mr. Brickett, of Inco for refusing to work on what she considered an unsafe operation? Is the minister further aware that the supervisor failed to provide an opportunity to the employee to have her complaint investigated by first-line supervision in attendance with a union representative, as defined by the Employees' Health and Safety Act?

Is the minister further aware that her ministry made the following recommendation through Mr. Susil, who did the investigation: "Your complaint in respect of being denied to have your initial complaint investigated by the shift boss in the presence of an OSHE committee member is legitimate. Charges against D. Brickett are considered."? Why then did the ministry not lay charges as prescribed under the act when this official violated the act?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I do not have the specific details of this case with me at the moment. I shall be glad to develop them in detail for the honourable member and present them to the House.

Mr. Martel: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

Mr. Martel: I will continue tomorrow.

Mr. Nixon: I really wanted to know what his supplementary was.

FRENCH-LANGUAGE SERVICES

Mr. Speaker: On Thursday last, the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), and the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner), both raised what they considered to be a matter of privilege with respect to the Premier's press release concerning Bill 89, An Act respecting French Language Services in Ontario. As both members raised the same matter, I will deal with both their allegations together.

Members of the House may well have a grievance in that what they consider to be an announcement of important government policy was made outside of this House. As regrettable as that may be, it does not breach the recognized privileges of this House.

Mr. Nixon: That's that.

Mr. Pope: Now go back and learn the rules.

An hon. member: A little slap.

Mr. MacDonald: Calculated deception.

Hon. B. Stephenson: No, it doesn't mean that.

PETITION

ENERGY REPORT

Mr. Cassidy: In view of the obvious need in the light of the minister's statement today to have a legislative committee consider the matters of nuclear waste disposal, and in view of the minister's refusal to give the House an assurance that that consideration would go forward in the select committee on Hydro affairs, I wish to file with the House a petition, pursuant to provisional order 7 of the Legislative Assembly—

Mr. Breithaupt: You finally found out how to use that.

Mr. Cassidy: —in which more than 20 members of my party have petitioned that the annual report of the Minister of Energy for the fiscal year ending last March be referred to the select committee on Hydro affairs for such consideration and report as the committee may determine.

Mr. Kerrio: Put on a night shift, Mike.

Mr. Foulds: Good petition.

[3:15]

REPORTS

RADIOACTIVE WASTE

Hon. B. Stephenson, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Baetz, presented certain documents.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I present a copy of the Hare report on The Management of Canada's Nuclear Wastes; a copy of a brief submitted by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited to the standing committee on national resources and public works entitled, The AECL Program on the Safe Immobilization and Disposal of Radioactive Material from Canadian Nuclear Reactors; a copy of the conceptual drawing of a radioactive waste disposal mine; and a copy of a map which designates the location of 1,500 potential geological formations in Ontario for the safe disposal of waste.

Mr. MacDonald: Where is the Wyatt report?

Mr. Cassidy: Where is the Uffen report?

Mr. Warner: Table your resignation.

Mr. Cassidy: You are using every means possible to delay, aren't you?

Hon. B. Stephenson: No, I'm not.

Mr. Cassidy: It means you won't act before the summer.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

House in committee of supply.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS

(concluded)

On vote 903, regional priorities and development program; item 5, rail and ferry services:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I would like to point out that there is one hour and 24 minutes left in the committee of supply for this item.

We're dealing with vote 903, item 5. The member for Rainy River.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Oh—does the minister have a statement?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes. I have a bit of information which the members might be interested in.

You will recall, last winter we indicated to the CNR that we had to make certain changes in the Northlander's service to North Bay because of the excessive costs both in regard to the subsidy and the mileage charge placed on it by the CNR. We indicated in that statement to the Legislature that we were prepared to negotiate with the CNR for the use of our excellent European Northlander equipment on their weekend services. They wanted to replace their conventional equipment with our Northlander equipment and we said we would be only too pleased to sit down and negotiate some reasonable terms with them. Those negotiations have been proceeding and I think I can report to the members that at this point in time they are encouraging; however, they're not totally finalized.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Can the minister give me a breakdown on the costs of operating the Northlander, the revenues and expenditures, and the extent of the subsidy in operating it?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I think I mentioned the Polar Bear Express, as an example, in the discussions we had last Friday. Our revenues were $296,000. Our expenditures were $400,000 and we had an operating loss of $104,000.

The main line service revenues were $1,174,000 and expenditures were $3,914,000. To the 100 per cent operating subsidy there was a further revision of 9.5 per cent, $552,000, so the total subsidy was $3,292,000.

On the Moosonee branch revenues were $1,385,000; expenditures were $3,921,000; and the operating loss, $2,536,000. With adjustments of $889,000 the total Moosonee branch subsidy was $3,529,000.

For the Northlander, which I believe the honourable member was inquiring about, the revenues—this is one train—were $1,177,500 and the expenditures were $4,235,300, for an operating loss of $3,057,800; the dining car service had a loss of $245,200, for a total Northlander subsidy of $3,303,000. The total rail service subsidy amounts to $10,124,000, less the Tobermory ferry profit of $104,000.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Can the minister give me an indication of whether these figures are up or down substantially from the past years? Are these subsidies growing ever larger every year?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The honourable member will recall that supplementary estimates were introduced in the Legislature about a year ago covering the extra cost of the Northlander service. We had hoped that we would have worked out an improved subsidy and rail charge rate from the CNR; this did not materialize. I believe our additional request in the supplementary estimates last year was about $2.5 million; so the extra service we are putting on is obviously putting on extra costs and has to be subsidized at a little higher rate.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister could indicate to us whether or not he feels the reason that the Northlander was so expensive and perhaps the cost benefit was not what it should have been, as well as the lack of use, might have been related to the fact that there wasn't enough co-ordination between the Northlander service between Timmins and Toronto and the mainline service between Timmins and North Bay?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, I think the public acceptance of the Northlander operation is nothing less than phenomenal. I can't recall one adverse criticism of the service or the quality of the equipment we are using on that Northlander. It's exciting, it's pleasant, it's comfortable—it has all the things you would want in rail travel; so that is not a problem. If there is any criticism, it has to be about the startup of getting a new service into place. There should have been more publicity here in southern Ontario. I think the honourable member would agree that there is sufficient publicity, maybe an oversaturation, in northeastern Ontario with regard to the Northlander. We are turning that around so that there is more publicity here in the populated areas such as Metropolitan Toronto.

I think there always will be and will always have to be a subsidy to train service. There are many other modes of travel that the train service has to compete against. In fact, we have a very intensive study going on now with the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission and the action group, which as the member knows is made up of all the mayors and reeves of the northeastern Ontario corridor. They are looking at all modes of transportation in their corridor—rail service, air service and bus service—to see if some rationalization can take place. Maybe there's an oversupply of one type of service vis-à-vis another. Maybe some changes in scheduling, as the member correctly points out, could be done to improve the services in the northeastern Ontario corridor. It's going on right now, and I think that report is scheduled to be down early this summer.

Mr. Wildman: That's good. I have had some correspondence and reaction from people in the Timmins-Cochrane area, indicating they felt one of the problems might have been that there just wasn't enough co-ordination between the two schedules and that there might have been more use of the service there had been more co-ordination. If the minister has any details on that, I would appreciate it if he could give them to us.

Also, I wonder if the minister can tell us if, in conjunction with the Ministry of Industry and Tourism and the private sector as well, is the ministry intending to or is it about to embark upon a package travel tour of the northeast involving the Polar Bear Express, plus perhaps the CN, CP, and the ACR; that is, a tour that would be a sort of round trip of northeastern Ontario? I don't know how long such a trip would take, but I know this has been rumoured and talked about in the northeast, and I wonder what the ministry is doing on it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: If I may go back just a moment and indicate to the member for Rainy River that our discussions are going on now with the federal government in our desire to gain a cost-sharing on the Northlander operation. While the negotiations are encouraging, they are not finalized as yet. However, we would expect a reduction in that subsidy of anywhere from $1 million to $1½ million if we are successful, and we are putting as much pressure on as we can.

In answer to the member for Algoma yes, the co-operation between Industry and Tourism and ONTC in our own ministry has been going on for several months. We are getting ready to kick off momentarily, really. The first emphasis will be on the Polar Bear Express. We are using the expertise within the Ministry of Industry and Tourism for the promotion aspect of it. The actual copy and material will be vetted closely by the ONTC. We have that advertising package in place.

Improvements will occur to the Polar Bear Express itself. I think I indicated earlier in my discussions here that the actual services on the train itself will be improved with a number of guides who will be fully trained and made cognizant of the historic items in the Moosonee and James Bay area to give the Polar Bear Express customers a real thrill in going into the sub-arctic areas. That's well along the road, as are the plans to improve certain facilities at the Moosonee end. We are going to see a decided improvement on that end of the service.

In connection with a circle tour, you are quite right; those rumours are accurate. The program has been under discussion for several months with three railways. The package should get under way late this summer or early this fall. The trip will take five or seven days, and the package will use the services of the CNR, the ONR right up to Timmins and to Hearst; then from Hearst right across, and the ACR down to Sault Ste. Marie, and then by CPR to Sudbury.

It is a very exciting package. The plans have been finalized to the extent that already we have bookings from Germany for 300 people on one of the package tours that is going to be pulled together. It is, as I have said, exciting, and one that I think will have a tremendous amount of appeal. It lends itself, with my colleagues' efforts, to bringing more people into northern Ontario and, first and foremost, to keep them here in Ontario.

Mr. Wildman: That's good to hear. I wonder if, since we have the Polar Bear Express, this might be called "the black fly junket."

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, no; we'll get a more appropriate name than that.

Mr. Wildman: I wonder if the ministry in conjunction with Industry and Tourism and the ACR has looked at the necessity for upgrading and improving tourist facilities in Hearst. It would seem to me that this could be a real boon for Hearst if this package does well. It certainly might lead to attracting a number of people from southern Ontario and from the United States as well as other parts of the world into a lumbering town, a French-Canadian town, which many of them, especially from the United States, might not have experienced before. If we could improve some of the facilities in Hearst that might even add to that proposal.

[3:30]

Also, one other question on that: Can the minister indicate, if we're going to be using the ONR or the CN, ACR and CP track, if it's going to be all ONR equipment? If it is, will it be manned by ONR crews? If that's the case, have there been any difficulties in regard to union situations and so on?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The equipment will all be ONR equipment. We have been dealing with the railways and with the unions. The actual train, as I understand it, will be operated by the ONR staff, but each union will have personnel in the proper places when it's going over their section of the whole network. All unions have been contacted and we're working very closely with them. They're co-operating 100 per cent.

Mr. Wildman: Maybe the minister is still in the process of finalizing this, but could he indicate if he's going to be leasing track, or is he going to be paying so much to each of CN, AC and CP for the use of their track?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We won't be leasing it. What we do is pay a service charge which is worked out between all levels of the railway system. It's all added in as part and parcel of the whole cost of the package tour.

Mr. Wildman: I've one other question in relation to ferry service: Is the ministry involved at all with the negotiations with the state of Michigan in regard to the proposal for a ferry from Manitoulin to the UP?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: While we're not directly involved, we've been monitoring very closely those discussions and the progress being made by the American firm that's anxious to put on the ferry service. If that were to be finalized and come to fruition it would mean that additional funds would have had to be provided for the road access—is it to Meldrum Bay?

Mr. Wildman: It would have to be federal funds.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, there was some responsibility with the feds for the wharfing facilities which had to be built. Our latest ferry itself has broken down and the service will not be in place for this year.

We will be doing a minimal amount of day labour work on that road—it's an ongoing effort—in the hope that they will be successful and we can see that service installed in the not-too-distant future.

Item 5 agreed to.

On item 6, air services:

Mr. T. P. Reid: There's a couple of things in this regard. I think the norOntair service is one of the better programs the Ontario government has ever got into. I remember recommending it about 10 years ago. But I do have a complaint. I spoke to somebody from Ontario Northland about it last week when we were doing these estimates. It's a parochial complaint about the changes in scheduling that took place at the end of April.

The people in my area were quite happy with the afternoon flight. They could catch the Air Canada flight out of Toronto at 4:50 p.m. and be home in Fort Frances, Atikokan, or Kenora for dinner. Now, for some reason, that schedule is changed, which means that you have to leave Toronto at 1:50 in the afternoon. The complaint, strangely enough, comes mostly from civil servants who wish to come to Toronto and do their work and put in a full day's work here and then return home that evening.

My real complaint is that the schedules seem to be changed at the whim of somebody either who's running norOntair or at the whim of Transair, I'm not sure which. I want to register a protest with the minister about that.

The other thing I'd like to ask is that in looking at the money expended and the subsidy of $1.13 million—that's down considerably from last year when the estimate was $1.82 million. Something that also intrigues me is that in 1976-77 your actual expenditures were almost triple what your estimate was. Can the minister explain, first, why the estimate is down this year by something in the neighbourhood of $700,000—where you're saving that money or why you don't need it this year? Second, can you explain how things got so out of hand in 1976-77 that you were about $2.5 million out on your budget?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, with regard to the scheduling, it's quite difficult trying to tie in with the main carriers like Transair and Air Canada, with their constant changes, and with the limited number of aircraft we have and the large number of communities we're trying to service. To have those aircraft at the right spot at the right time and to cover the distance is sometimes a little difficult.

The difference back in 1976 was a capital cost allowance, the purchase of aircraft. I'm sure the member will recall that vividly. This is not reflected in this year's estimates, in that no new aircraft have been purchased or will be purchased in this coming year. We will be taking delivery of an aircraft, the seventh aircraft for the northwest region, to replace one that was burned some time ago in Sault Ste. Marie. I think acceptance of that aircraft is planned for the next week or two.

The increase in the growth in the revenues is what is offsetting it. In fact, this year we expect our revenues to go up to about $2.5 million from $2.35 million in 1977. Our actual expenditures are forecast to decline slightly from about $3.7 million to about $3.6 million. Our net loss will be reduced.

I might say as a matter of interest in 1972 the subsidy per passenger was about $25.78, and in 1977 that was reduced to $9.29 per passenger. Growth in passenger traffic is allowing us to reduce the losses. I might say that with the norOntair service, in my opinion and I know in the opinions of a lot of people—and I'm sure the member for Rainy River agrees with me—we get the biggest bang for our buck from this particular service. It's an excellent service. The quality of the equipment is excellent. The reliability of flights is, I guess, one of the highest for a small airline across Canada. In fact, we've had a number of other provinces and people from other countries come to look at the norOntair operation and the service it's providing for those far-flung communities, 17 communities in total, across northern Ontario. It's one service that we're indeed proud of. It's doing a great job.

Of course, I would like to see it expanded further. We hope to add a number of communities to the program in the near future.

Mr. Haggerty: Like the Niagara Peninsula, Leo.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I'm sorry, there are areas in northern Ontario that have to be looked after yet. I'm thinking of Hornepayne, Terrace Bay and Geraldton.

Mr. Haggerty: Just give us some of that service down in that area, in St. Catharines too.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We have enjoyed the excellent service and our distances are much greater than yours down here in southern Ontario.

Mr. Haggerty: Gore Bay down to Owen Sound, Douglas Point and the Niagara Peninsula.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: As northerners we're indeed grateful for the excellent service it's providing. I may say to the member for Rainy River I'm sure he's aware that we've added Red Lake recently to the norOntair service—one community that several years ago told us to pack our bag and not even come near them. That attitude has changed, I am most pleased to report. They are now enjoying the excellent service of norOntair.

We have gone another step further, as I am sure the member for Rainy River will appreciate, in that we now have a member on the ONTC from northwestern Ontario. He is a gentleman who hails from Dryden, Peter Burns, who is very knowledgeable in the aviation field, having been very much involved with the PWA-Transair deal. I don't know if you would call it a fiasco or what you would call it. The decision hasn't come down yet; so it must be something along those lines. Nevertheless, he will represent northwestern Ontario. I have personally asked him to take a real interest in the norOntair facilities. If something does come up, I would encourage the honourable member to get in touch with Mr. Burns who will take his complaint directly to the board. I think he will be a real asset to those of us who live in northwestern Ontario.

Mr. Wildman: I would like to know if the minister has passenger figures available. If he does, can he specifically give me some information regarding the increase in passengers between Sault Ste. Marie and Elliot Lake and Sudbury and Elliot Lake this year over last?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I don't have specific figures on each leg of the operation. We can get that and put it in correspondence to you. I do have the growth of passenger travel in which I am sure you will be interested. I would like to put it in the record.

In 1972, we had 10,472 passengers and in 1973 there was a real increase to 14,725. In 1974, we saw that pretty nearly double to 27,401. Then we took a really big jump in 1975 to 62,808 passengers. In 1976, there was an increase to 20,000, which brought it up to 82,072 for that year. There was a further increase in 1977 to 90,161. In 1978, we have forecast a total traffic service of 96,000 passengers. We think that in that short period of six years to grow from 10,000 to 96,000 is a success story indeed. There is no question about it.

Mr. Wildman: I certainly wouldn't disagree with that. The reason I asked that specific question was in view of the tremendous growth in Elliot Lake and the expansion there and the number of people, a lot of them business and union and government people, travelling into Elliot Lake. My interest was whether or not most of those people who are coming from southern Ontario tend to be coming through Sudbury or through the Sault.

I know the total passengers on that route to Elliot Lake has increased substantially. I wondered whether or not it might mean some changes in the schedule or not in terms of a second flight into Elliot Lake from either the Sault or Sudbury to serve the needs of those passengers. If the minister has some response, I have one other question.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I have some figures just for the month of November 1977. On the leg between Sault Ste. Marie and Elliot Lake, we averaged six passenger per flight. On the leg from Sudbury to Elliot Lake, we averaged 10 passengers per flight in the month of November. I might say further to this that we are monitoring the needs of Elliot Lake very closely because of the tremendous mining potential that exists there and the boom we know is going to occur.

When you think that in the mid-1980s the population of Elliot Lake could soar to 35,000, it is obvious to us that air traffic and air service will have to be upgraded considerably. I don't think it is any secret that we have looked at and are looking at those traffic patterns. At the present time, Kapuskasing is our heaviest load out of the northeast. We would like to tie Elliot Lake in with Sudbury and the Sault. There is a desire for the mining public to have some direct connection between Elliot Lake and Toronto. We have looked at all those configurations and possibilities and our examinations will continue.

I think it is fair to say we would like at some time, if the service warrants it and we can support a larger aircraft—or increased Twin Otter flights may be the answer—but it may be somewhere well down the road that we could put a Dash 7 on. That aircraft is made in Ontario by Ontario workmen, and if at all possible, somewhere down the road, I think the province would like to have a Dash 7 in the northern part of Ontario if there are the passengers and the support for that size of aircraft, because it holds something like 50 passengers, and the Twin Otter holds only 19. So we are monitoring it very closely.

Mr. Wildman: As the minister is aware, the federal government is doing some expansion work at the airport in Elliot Lake so it will be able to take larger aircraft. It would probably be useful some time in the future for more direct flights from southern Ontario into that area.

For the benefit of the member for Erie, if we are looking at direct flights, and since the minister indicated that Hornepayne is on the list, I am sure the people of Hornepayne would like to have direct flights into the Niagara Peninsula if that is possible.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, on that point: Hornepayne is an interesting one. The member might be able to enlighten me as to where the traffic pattern would go out of Hornepayne. Does he think the pattern would be oriented to Kapuskasing, to Sault Ste. Marie, or to Thunder Bay? I am just wondering what his opinion is on that.

Mr. Wildman: Certainly the highway traffic pattern is more oriented towards Kapuskasing than the other way. Obviously I haven't done any studies on it, but it would seem to me that people who are travelling by air do tend to head towards Timmins. However, if there were a link between Hornepayne and Wawa, I suppose they could go through the Sault. I really don't have any more information than that. It is certainly true that Hornepayne is oriented more towards Kapuskasing and, the other way, to Thunder Bay than it is to Sault Ste. Marie, but I think that has to do with the fact that there wasn't a highway link until the last few years with the southern part of Algoma.

I have one question relating to a matter I raised in the Ministry of Transportation and Communications estimates last year, I believe; it has to do with safety and how it relates to the air services in the north.

One of the officials in charge of the air service for ONTC had made a statement in the press which I quoted at that time. He was saying that he was very unhappy about the fact that there were more modern radar facilities available than we now have which would make it possible to land and take off in worse weather conditions if they were installed at more airports in the north. He wasn't just relating to provincial and municipal airports and so on.

I raised it at that time in the standing committee considering the Ministry of Transportation and Communications estimates, and that ONTC official did respond. He did say yes, he had said that and he hoped that those kinds of facilities would be installed in the near future at some of the airports that have heavier traffic than others and eventually at all airports in northern Ontario.

Mr. Haggerty: They're not that expensive, Leo—about $60,000.

Mr. Wildman: Yes, about $60,000. Unfortunately, at that time the Minister of Transportation and Communications indicated that they did not have plans to go ahead with that at that time or in the foreseeable future because of restraints. When you consider the fact that it isn't an overwhelming cost we are talking about, I wonder what plans there are now for the installation of this kind of equipment in the northwest and the northeast; and if there are any plans, what specific airports is the ministry looking at?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, if I might respond to the member's earlier questions concerning traffic on the Sault-Elliot Lake run: in 1976 our passengers numbered about 1,050; in 1977 the number went up to 4,400. So the volume has increased fourfold; it is very encouraging.

I am personally very much involved and concerned with the question of air safety. And that relates to the days when I did a little bush flying across northern Ontario. Quite frankly, I guess at that time we were flying by the seat of our pants. In many instances, they are still doing that.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Some would say that's how you operate this ministry. I wouldn't, but some would.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I know you wouldn't say that. No, I'm sure of that.

Nevertheless, we managed to do the job we were supposed to do and that's the most important thing.

The question of safety causes those of us living in northern Ontario a lot of concern. Following the Fraserdale disaster, a terrible aircraft accident which involved a number of civil servants and other people—something like 12 deaths—I called for a public inquiry and personally contacted the federal minister, as did my colleague the Minister of Transportation and Communications.

There was a response which I believe has assisted some of the operators. And let's not be too quick to condemn the operators, there are a lot of good operators in northern Ontario. I think inspection and surveillance of services by the federal government was indeed weak, and they recognized this. They have since beefed up their inspection system right across the north, at both the local and regional levels, and that is having an impact now.

From recent press comments I also understand the federal government is thinking about setting up a public body to examine aircraft accidents across Canada. I think this may satisfy some of our needs.

The cost and efficiency of navigational aids is something the Minister of Transportation and Communications is very much interested in because of the minister's flair for flying. As you know, he is quite a pilot himself and he has been pressing the federal government to get on with the job of improving the navigational aids across northern Ontario. In most places directional beacons and this type of thing are a federal responsibility, because they operate the airways.

The installation of microwave landing systems is relatively expensive, I have to say to you.

Mr. Haggerty: Not that expensive for the safety it provides.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Well, $250,000 for a microwave landing system. Maybe what you're referring to are directional beacons, which are around $50,000 or $60,000. But they don't have the range you would need.

The microwave landing system is a sophisticated ILS system, which is the latest thing. In fact, they're using them in many parts of western Canada now. They're the most sophisticated landing system available to date.

But you're quite correct; the directional beacons are relatively cheap. MTC and MNA are co-operating in putting those directional beacons in the remote airstrips of northern Ontario, like Sandy Lake and Big Trout Lake, the ones that the province is totally responsible for. I don't have a list of those specific ones, but we are making sure they are being installed.

Mr. Haggerty: In our crossfire of interjections this afternoon, I did mention extending the services to the southern part of Ontario. The ministry is doing an excellent job in northern Ontario with the air services there. If I can recall, there was a study done a couple of years ago related to STOL aircraft by Bradley Air Services, that was to include areas around Elliot Lake to Gore Bay to Owen Sound and down to Toronto, and which covered the Niagara Peninsula.

The Ministry of Natural Resources has indicated it is going to open up the north by selling cottage lots. I would suggest to the minister that many of the highways heading to the north country will not handle the traffic. I would suggest if it is to be a successful program of selling these lots to people, perhaps many of them to purchasers in southern Ontario, a quick way to get to northern Ontario and to the cottage area would be by aircraft.

I would suggest to the minister that he should be looking at that study report which was done here about four years ago by Bradley Air Services, because I believe that it would encourage people from southern Ontario to buy lots further north. I'm talking of the Cochrane area and throughout that area, which is quite a drive from southern Ontario. It may eventually open up northern Ontario for the people of southern Ontario.

They would then perhaps have a better understanding of the climate and the atmosphere in northwestern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I have the information now for the member for Algoma with regard to directional beacons. They are to be installed at Fort Hope, Lansdowne House, Kashechewan, Webequie, Bearskin, Sachigo, Deer Lake, Kasabonika, Kingfisher and Wunnumin Lake. We're moving ahead on that program quite rapidly.

In response to the member for Erie, I appreciate his interest and his comments with regard to our services in northern Ontario and his desire to have them spread into southern Ontario. I think it's unusual that somebody from southern Ontario would envy something that is going on in northern Ontario.

Mr. Wildman: Northern Affairs handles everything north of Bloor.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I recognize his desire to use our pilot program and extend it to the south and also, to make use of the cottage lot program. That's something that we on this side of the House are encouraging. We like your thrust.

Mr. Haggerty: Even the tourists.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Certainly the idea is a good one. We'll dust it off and look at it. I would just remind the honourable member that we have something like 250,000 natural landing strips in northern Ontario. Those who will fit their aircraft with a good set of pontoons will have the use of one of those at very little cost and they'll enjoy the wilderness aspect that those of us in northern Ontario cherish so much. There isn't that urgent need to build airstrips all over and to get that air service. If they have an aircraft, one that will carry a good set of floats, then 90 per cent of the province of Ontario is at their command.

Mr. Haggerty: Like a Dash 7?

Item 6 agreed to.

Vote 903 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: This concludes the estimates of the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Bernier, the committee of supply reported progress.

STANDING MEMBERS' SERVICES COMMITTEE

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion for the adoption of the May 4 report of the standing members' services committee.

Mr. Speaker: Does any member wish to address himself to this report?

Mr. Warner: I understand also that the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell) wishes to make some comments.

The members' services committee has met several times to deal with the matter. Some people weren't anticipating this coming up. I don't know if there is any indication that the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Henderson) will be present this afternoon or not, because it does affect him.

[4:00]

We have been trying, as you know, to have some co-operation among all the members. The members' services committee has tried to deal with the jurisdiction of the building for one thing and the movement of the secretariats out of the building for another. The assembly office is another matter.

We have been trying to deal with it in as good a working relationship as one could imagine. We have tried to deal with this in what I think is a very reasonable way as members of the assembly, in part removed from the political arena—if you can ever do that in this setting, which I don't think you can do entirely—but we have tried to deal with it in a very amiable fashion. We have tried to be reasonable about it.

What we discovered first was that there was a commitment that the secretariats would move out and therefore the space would become available. We assumed it would become available under the direction of the Speaker for the use of the members and whatever services they require, but that move would take place.

We then were informed that it was going to be a bit longer than we had anticipated. Then the Minister of Government Services informed us that because of the new budget restrictions resulting from the OHIP decision his budget would be cut by $2 million. Therefore he could not guarantee that the secretariats would move out, because there were moneys involved in the moving.

Mr. Deans: It's hard to believe that he's really a lightweight in cabinet.

Mr. Warner: It is difficult to believe that that particular minister doesn't have any influence in the cabinet, nor that he wouldn't understand the recommendation of the members' services committee or why it was made so strongly, about the movement of the secretariats—that it must be effected as quickly as possible. We assumed it would be done during the summer.

One thing posed to the minister was, "You tell us that you are short $2 million now because of the new budget, but you have indicated that if the members were willing to move into the Whitney Block, you would put in a supplementary estimate." Mr. Henderson agreed. Yes, he would be willing to do that.

I thought it was rather strange that if the members agreed to move into the Whitney Block, he could find money to do that by supplementary estimate. However, if we insisted on the secretariats moving out of the building he couldn't guarantee the money—there wouldn't be any way of finding the money.

It seemed to be inconsistent to me, so we pressed on a bit further and I got the distinct impression that the minister was very reluctant to have the space freed up—perhaps not so much because of the space being freed up but because it might then automatically come under Mr. Speaker and be removed—

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order if I may, the importance of this debate to all of the members is self evident. I would not want to have the debate proceed at this time given that there doesn't appear to be a quorum since I am sure the reason for that is the members may not be fully aware of the fact that the debate is currently under way. I wonder if you would check, sir, to see if there is in fact a quorum.

Mr. Speaker called for the quorum bells.

On resumption:

Mr. Warner: I fully realize that members were not aware that this was going to take place right now; we were operating under the assumption that the estimates for Northern Affairs would continue for a bit longer. That is the reason why some of us weren't here, including the Minister of Government Services, who has had an interest in this matter.

Someone commented to me, "What more can you say about the matter? We have dealt with it 50 million times." If it has to be 50 million plus one, then it has to be said. The environs of this place are surely for the members as they try to go about their duties as legislators. That first consideration means that, in the view of the members' services committee, the secretariats should move out of the building and free up the space.

It seems to me pretty straightforward that there are two or three things involved. Firstly, the government should clearly state its intention to adhere to the principle that this building is for the members and their services first and foremost, and that the building will be put to that use. That's the first thing.

Secondly, the government should tell us when that's going to happen. When is it that it is going to move the secretariats out? I think those are pretty clear items.

Thirdly, which follows pretty directly, in order for us to carry on in an orderly fashion from there on, all of the building should come under Mr. Speaker. That just follows reasonably and rationally.

Perhaps if we're able to accomplish that, then we will know that each member of the assembly is going to get equal treatment with respect to the allotment of space and the kinds of services that are available so that each member of the assembly can try to carry out his or her duties in as straightforward and precise a manner as is possible. That's not going to happen until we get a statement of principle from the government that the secretariats will move out; further, that the building will come under Mr. Speaker, and that that's going to happen pretty quickly.

Now that the minister is here, perhaps he would care to comment on what seems to be a contradiction on his part when he said earlier that he could find the money by way of supplementary estimates if the members were willing to move into the Whitney Block but, because the Treasurer has cut $2 million out of his budget, it might be a problem for him to accomplish the move of the secretariats out of this building by a specific date. It might happen some time in the future, but he couldn't make a commitment because the Treasurer has taken $2 million off his budget. That contradiction, I think, needs some explanation from the Minister of Government Services.

Perhaps today, in this debate on our committee recommendation, we could have an indication from the government as to precisely when those secretariats and the assembly office will move out of the building so we can then begin the task of being able to allocate space to members through Mr. Speaker, since the actual allocation of space to members belongs with the Speaker of the assembly. We can also then carry on with our work to make sure that all of the building comes under Mr. Speaker and that we don't have any further difficulties.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, we spent some time trying to figure out how to get some permanent committee rooms so that when important committee work is going on we don't have to scrounge around for a room. Our caucus has donated its caucus room on the last two or three occasions for one of the committees. The committee has come down, Hansard has set up its equipment and so on. That's fine; we're quite willing to do that. But it's not exactly the most suitable location. It does make it difficult for people trying to find the committee, for example. It certainly makes it difficult for the government staff who have to transport the equipment around and set it up, and for the Hansard people. There are a lot of important matters that have to be discussed.

[4:15]

Quite frankly, I don't think that the members' services committee can do much more useful work until we have solved this particular problem about the secretariats moving out, and secondly the principle of the building coming under Mr. Speaker. Until we have resolved those matters, it really doesn't make much sense for the committee to continue to sit. That's why you've got a report in front of you. That's why the members' services committee reported back to the assembly, because we're anxious to have this matter resolved. Unless it's resolved, there isn't much point in our getting together every Thursday morning. It just frustrates our work, quite frankly.

I'm not sure exactly what other members are going to have to say on this subject, but I do know that some members, the member for St. George in particular and the member for Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Bounsall), have been quite concerned and have put forward reasonable arguments to try to convince the government. I think we've spent a fair bit of time trying to put forward reasonable arguments.

Maybe we've reached a stone wall. I don't know, but if we have, today is the opportunity for the government to break down the stone wall and explain whether or not they are willing to accept the principle, and secondly, when they're going to actually make it happen.

I await comments from the Minister of Government Services and any other government members who wish to be involved, as well as the comments from my legislative colleague from St. George and any other members.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I must first apologize. I had thought that the estimates would continue longer than they did, and I ought certainly to have been in the House when this matter was called. From time to time I have felt that I really was going to have to couch my concerns on a matter of privilege, because we have a committee which has been set up by this assembly and it has been frustrated for I would say two years or more in trying to get on with its work.

As my friend from Scarborough-Ellesmere has said, it is useless for this committee to continue to sit when everything we suggest seems to be a matter of concern to somebody else. As you know, we have tried very patiently to get on with this very small segment of our responsibility, which we view as a first step in trying to come to grips with this building.

We understand that the secretariats, by the commitment of the previous Minister of Government Services, would commence leaving this building in February of this year. What the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere said about the attitude of the present Minister of Government Services certainly filled us with a great deal of concern, because the minister seemed to indicate that he was not able to find the money, or might not be able to find the money, to honour the commitment of his predecessor.

I have been informed via the grapevine that perhaps he is going to move these secretariats, but we need to have it now in a stated position in Hansard so we know how to address ourselves to other problems.

There is no question that we need more committee rooms. Mr. Speaker has sat in this House longer than I have, but I would say that since 1973 the momentum of committee work has stepped up considerably and yet we really don't have any more committee-room space than we had then. It is wrong that we should be trying to bumble along to get space for us to meet. Certainly one of the small committees could use the space of the offices of the Legislative Assembly. Surely the moving of that function cannot be a matter of significant cost to the ministry.

The question of the secretariats and the question of the offices of the Legislative Assembly are really only the tip of the iceberg of the problems of this building. May I say that coming to you and to the minister will be some recommendations with reference to the use of the east door and the north door. Our committee sat and wondered if we should send out a circular "to whom it may concern," to try to find who has the jurisdiction.

One of the government members on the committee was concerned about the lack of lighting at the east door, which is, of course, the door which most members have to use if they are sitting in committee after the dinner hour and the House is not sitting. We have been concerned about the fact that the north door is not available to us on Wednesday nights when we have been sitting, and sitting until late hours. We recognize that this may be a matter of concern from the point of view of establishing security and we are prepared to have an answer to that; but at the moment, it is pretty ridiculous to sit in that committee and try to determine to whom we should address our requests.

As Mr. Speaker knows, we have had a concern about the matters of the dining room. That seems to be before the Board of Internal Economy. We have made suggestions, but it is not satisfying to discuss topics and yet feel that we are not a part of the ongoing consideration of these matters, since they do come within our purview. I don't know what has to be done to make the work of this committee more useful to this House. We come to the point where we have people writing expressing their concerns that some people have been asked to move from the building. I would like to be corrected on this if I am wrong, but as I see it if this is the legislative building, in our view it should come within the purview and the prerogative of Mr. Speaker.

It is disturbing that Government Services is going ahead planning the rest of this building and acting in a vacuum as far as our committee is concerned. We feel this is something we ought to have a share in, since we were established to have input into the matter of members' services, as the name of the committee implies. It seems to me a little ludicrous that we have to proceed with the point by point reports out of this committee. We start now with the secretariats and the office of the Legislative Assembly. If, as and when that problem is resolved, I suppose then there will have to be a debate and a committee report with reference to room 228, for example. I really do not think it is useful for a committee to have to go piecemeal, a room at a time almost, to bring matters before this assembly.

It seems to me that the principle should somehow be established so that then there may be some orderly progress to enable us to provide the facilities that we see as important. Certainly we cannot do anything about the setting up of permanent committee rooms really until we have the committee rooms; otherwise we are going to find that there will be no committees able to sit. We have to carry on with this very awkward arrangement of committee rooms where there are microphones that fall over and are not permanently fixed. We have to wonder from day to day where we are going to sit.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, this is a most inefficient way in my view to run a peanut stand. Yet this is the way we are running the assembly in the legislative building in the capital of this province of Ontario. I would have thought that we might have had a little more pride in ensuring that we have committee rooms which are capable of having public debates. As you know, we have had to use the NDP caucus room for some of our landlord and tenant meetings. It is estimated we had 300 people attend in one night, and there was standing room only. This is not the way we should be functioning.

I too want to hear from the Minister of Government Services. I would like to have an answer to our question as to when the secretariats will vacate this building and when the offices of the Legislative Assembly will vacate so that at least we can add one more permanent committee room. Maybe I am wrong and maybe we always did have so many committees, but I don't think so. It must be an awful lot of work for the Clerk to try to shuffle this deck to find the room and the space for these committees to sit. I am sure he has more important things to do than that with his time.

I too am anxious to hear from the Minister of Government Services and trust that he will at this time be precise in his answers at least to the specifics of this report.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Could I ask the last honourable member, as I heard her say in her last few words the office of the Legislative Assembly, what was she referring to there? That is the way I took her remarks.

Mrs. Campbell: I guess I should have said administration office, but I thought the minister, having sat in, knew what I was talking about, I'm sorry.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I just wanted to clear that up.

First, may I make it quite clear to the House that as previously announced the three policy field secretariats are planning to move in August. That is our plan.

[4:30]

Mrs. Campbell: What date?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I won't give you a date. I'm saying the month of August.

Mr. Worton: In 1978 or 1979?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: August 1978. That is the present plan if nothing gets in the way. The move is scheduled to be completed at the end of August and work on the Whitney Block is proceeding on schedule. Money has been provided in the Ministry of Government Services budget for this work and we estimate that it will be completed within the budget. Almost the entire ground floor of the Whitney Block will be occupied by the three policy field secretariats. Some space is being retained by the Ministry of Natural Resources for their map and publication services and some space has been provided for the committee of the Legislature chaired by Mr. Breaugh.

There are three or four rooms which are now in reserve and which can be used if there is an urgent need, although it might be appropriate to keep them for some future expansion of a policy field secretariat. Let me clear that up. If there is an urgent need, like we ran into with Mr. Breaugh—he needed a room for his committee and we put them over there.

With the exception of the policy field secretariats, all of the functions presently contained in the building are closely connected with the operation of government. These include the office of the Premier, the cabinet office, the offices of the Speaker and the Clerk of the House, the office of the Legislative Assembly, the Hansard office, the press gallery, the legislative counsel and the Ministry of Government Services legislative services office.

The space vacated by the policy field secretariats will be made available for the members of the Legislature. When these areas are added to the area presently occupied by the members, it will be possible to provide each member with more space than he presently occupies.

The Ministry of Government Services designers are working on an appropriate way of utilizing space allocated to the members in the best possible way. It is hoped that the proposed changes will be approved by all parties so that work can commence when the various areas are vacated by the policy field secretariats.

A major reallocation of space during the time the building continues to be occupied creates a problem of timing. When certain changes have to be made prior to other changes, the work tends to become drawn out. No funds have been allocated or budgeted for these major alterations in the legislative building. No estimate of cost has been prepared since the design work has not advanced to a point where it can be used for the estimating purpose.

The question of the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere was whether it was possible to have all the responsibility for the building under the Speaker. He also asked when the policy secretariats were moving out. Both he and the member for St. George asked that.

Have I answered that clearly? The present plans call for the policy secretariats to move out in August of this year and over to the first floor of the Whitney Block.

The next point concerned the Wednesday night meetings of the committee. How many Wednesday nights does the committee meet? One, two, three a year? I'm sure that special arrangements can be worked out if that's a problem. But I don't think any member of this House would request that the north door be left open every Wednesday night of the year because of the two or three nights a year a committee is going to sit. I don't think we would want to be that extravagant with the money of the people of Ontario. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that when there is a committee meeting on Wednesday nights your office or the office of whoever is accountable for it at that time could certainly make arrangements to see that the north door is open, if that's a must.

Both members made some comments with respect to the complete building coming under the Speaker. At this time, I would reject that proposal. The Minister of Government Services is looking at office space for 125 members. The Minister of Government Services is convinced that all members elected to this Legislature are entitled to an office in this building. As I brought to the attention of the members' services committee a few weeks ago—it's too bad the chairman of the committee was not there that morning; we did have a very good debate.

Mrs. Campbell: I've read it.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I regret she was not there because we did. I brought out the point about the problems we are faced with in this building. I did have the opportunity to view a map that was presented to the committee a week or two previous to that. That map did not leave sufficient space for the operation of the assembly.

As I mentioned, I am convinced that the press, Hansard, and the legislative counsel are part of the operation of this assembly. I repeat that I want all members to be accommodated in this building. As it stands now, there are not 125 offices available in this building to give the members the size of an office that was recommended or that I believe members are entitled to.

I suggest that the government doesn't plan on turning over the complete building to the Speaker. The government doesn't plan on turning over any of the offices held by the government or the government staff. We are certainly ready to continue with shared accommodation, with the Speaker taking care of the necessary staff for the operation of this assembly and being in charge of the offices of the opposition members. At this point, that is as far as I'm ready to commit the government.

I don't believe it's completely in order in debating a report like this, but I would be glad to answer one or two questions with the Speaker's consent. Before I do that, I have a report here on all of the other provinces in Canada. I find there are two of them in which Mr. Speaker has control of the legislative buildings. There are others where Mr. Speaker has control of the legislature and the corridors leading to it. But, all in all of the 10 provinces, there are two where Mr. Speaker has complete control.

Mr. Warner: What about the federal government in Ottawa?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, with those few remarks at this time, we as the government don't plan on turning over the offices that we or our staff have, to you.

Mr. Young: Could I ask a question for clarification?

The minister mentioned that he wants space in this building for the 125 members, but it doesn't seem to me that space is needed for the 125 members. We're not expecting to move the cabinet ministers of this province out of their luxurious apartments. They're there and they're established. They have quarters which are adequate for them and would be adequate for three or four other ordinary members. We don't need 125 accommodations here but just for the members who are not in the cabinet. That cuts down the requirement quite considerably.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I don't want to cause a dialogue but with your consent I would answer the question. I'm sure the honourable member has been around exactly the same length of time as I have been. Over those years, I am sure that he has met with—

Mr. Deans: He has worn so much better.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes, I would have to admit to that. He has worn very well.

Mr. Deans: So much better.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: He has worn very well, in fact, excellently. The political party with which he has been associated really hasn't damaged his looks one particle. In fact, they've improved with age, the same as the minister's. We would be in agreement with that.

Mr. Deans: That's true. You carry the weight of the world on your shoulders. I'm surprised you do not have more weight in the cabinet.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I'm not too concerned about that. That really isn't a concern of the minister.

Mr. Deans: You should concern yourself with it.

Mr. Warner: He's got the honour.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Didn't you hear the Minister of Northern Affairs and his comments?

Mr. Warner: He's got power.

Mr. Deans: He's got a heck of a lot more weight than you've got.

Mr. Warner: Anybody that can drive fire engines around from one place to another—

Hon. Mr. Henderson: There's a bit of a challenge there, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The member for Scarborough-Ellesmere is so small I can't even see him.

Mr. Deans: He's just the right size to get the minister off the track.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Is he there?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Deans: Address yourself to the Speaker, please.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I have been trying to do that, but some of the other members are not addressing themselves to you. I have been watching all the time.

Mr. Speaker: I am responding to the member for Yorkview.

Mr. Deans: Why are you delaying your answer so long? Why don't you get on with it?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I am trying to respond to the complete assembly. We are in the Ontario Legislature, and there are other members—

Mr. Deans: I know what you are doing. You are waiting for someone to write the answer for you.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member for Wentworth doesn't have the floor.

Mr. Deans: I don't even want it.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We, as the government, once again believe that all members are entitled to an office in this building; it's as simple as that.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, does that mean then that the minister is thinking in terms of cutting down office space as far as the cabinet ministers are concerned? I can't see how they can transfer the space they now occupy into this building and still leave space for others. I agree it might be desirable, and if the minister would give a cabinet minister a space such as I occupy, Godspeed to him, that would be wonderful, but I hardly think that would suit the dignity of a cabinet minister. This minister should give them a bit more space, because one of these days we are going to be in that cabinet and we will want a bit more space than I am talking about now.

An hon. member: Don't hold your breath for that.

Mr. Young: For a Tory member, perhaps it's enough; but New Democratic cabinet ministers of the future are going to need more space than I occupy now at least. Perhaps the minister could tell us something of the plans in this regard. Does this mean he is going to squeeze down the square footage which present cabinet ministers occupy in order to get them into this building and still leave space for the rest of us?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, in response to the honourable member's question, there is no intention of cutting down the size of the office for the private members.

Mr. Warner: We didn't ask you that.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I know, but I want to go on to that. The ministers may have to take a smaller office to have an office here in this building. They may have to. My staff have not got far enough. I don't mind telling you, Mr. Speaker, and the member for St. George, that I did arrange this morning with Mr. Callfas, the clerk of the committee, to be available at 10 o'clock on Thursday morning, June 22.

Mrs. Campbell: That's the day before we wind up.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: At that time I would hope to be able to present a proposal that my staff have put together. I have got certain information from the leaders of the opposition parties as to the needs and more information is coming. At that time I hope to have plans to present to the legislative committee.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that I have a letter from you requesting certain information. As I told you, I am preparing a personal reply to you; it's not a reply from the staff. The Speaker is as interested in this building as any of the rest of the members opposite. He has certainly contacted my predecessor and he has contacted me by letter. I haven't responded, but I have told Mr. Speaker that I will be responding to him.

It is not easy to find out what we need—

Mrs. Campbell: Oh, yes! To find out what the government needs.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, there are slightly more than 100 offices in this building for 125 members. There are not 125 offices. Mr. Speaker is aware of that and anybody who wants to look at the plans will be well aware of it.

My concern is that the private members should have the appropriate accommodation. [4:45]

Mr. Speaker: We are getting away off track here. There is a motion for the adoption of a report of the standing members' services committee. Normally, any member who wishes to speak will have an opportunity to do so and the minister can wind up. We have given a little more latitude in this instance. I think if any member still wishes to speak who has not already spoken, I will recognize him.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, before proceeding, if I might say one more word: I have no objection to the resolution before us. It is right down the line with what we are planning. You suggest moving out the three policy secretariats, I have made it clear today that it is our plan to do that during the month of August.

Mrs. Campbell: On a point of order, I don't understand your position. If I may have clarification—the minister has raised in his response a series of questions—at least in my mind—and I would suspect in the minds of other members of the committee. Is Mr. Speaker not going to permit us to address ourselves to the questions which the minister raised in his own statement? Otherwise, we are just spinning our wheels again.

Mr. Speaker: This isn't really a committee. We are sitting here in the House, where the motion before the House is for the adoption of a report submitted to the House by a committee, in this case the standing members' services committee. The normal procedure is that you allow every member who wishes to speak to the motion to do so—

Mrs. Campbell: I am not trying to cut it off.

Mr. Speaker:—and if you want to give yourselves unanimous consent to have a free-wheeling debate on this, it may establish a very dangerous precedent.

Mr. Warner: Could I speak to the point of order? I appreciate your remarks.

The report from the committee has been brought in, it has been dealt with and the minister has stated his position rather clearly on both positions. When the committee sits again as a committee it can deal with the remarks made by the minister and try to carry on from there.

Perhaps we can deal with the matter of principle that the minister has raised. I think that's why my colleague from St. George rose; because the minister raised a matter of principle where there seems to be a division between this side and the other side of the House. Perhaps when the members' services committee sits again we can deal with that matter of principle and attempt to resolve the basic problem of the building coming under Mr. Speaker.

I would be quite happy to have that happen on Thursday of this week.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Before you decide, on Thursday of this week I will be 300 miles from here.

Mr. Warner: That's not far enough.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister has already spoken.

Mr. Martel: I just arrived from yet another committee and I want to rap a little bit with the minister and with the Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: You are not going to rap with the minister, the minister has risen twice now.

Mr. Martel: Well I said and with the Speaker, I hope I will be allowed to discuss this motion that is before the House.

Mr. Speaker: Feel free to do so.

Mr. Martel: I said I was going to rap with the minister and with you about this building for a few moments.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I'd like to rap you a couple.

Mr. Martel: And the Minister of Industry and Tourism as well. Is it tourism and information now, or has it changed again?

Mr. Speaker: Are you going to talk about the report that is before us?

Mr. Martel: I sure hope so, I have been speaking on it for about three years now. I well recall a debate which occurred in this Legislature not more than five or six weeks ago when we were discussing this very matter, and the member for London South (Mr. Walker) said on that occasion that a private member's bill dealing with the control of the Legislature and who would have adequate space was being presented too soon. He said it was premature for such a private member's bill dealing with the Legislature to come here.

I challenged the member for London South at that time to surrender his palatial suite to other members of the Legislature, and, of course the member chose not to respond. After he had his say about it being premature, he disappeared.

I'm not sure, but I think on that day I recall that the member for Humber (Mr. MacBeth) also spoke. He said with such a bill and a motion as we have before us—I think he said we had been served well. I guess from the lofty heights of—where is it, Grosvenor Street?—which he occupied for some time, and his palatial suite up on the fourth floor, one can well make those comments.

It's one of the reasons we on this side of the House have had to take the type of position we've taken in the last six to eight months about the whole of this Legislature. The point is that until the Speaker is in firm control the opposition members always get short shrift.

I agree the present minister might try to alter things, but with the conditions we're faced with today—and I say this to my friend, the minister—the situation wouldn't be so disastrous if things had been different. If the fairness he speaks about had applied over the years, the situation wouldn't be so obviously distorted as is presently the case. For that reason, we, in the last six to eight months, have started to try to pressure the government into a sense of fairness.

This will never occur until Mr. Speaker is in charge of the building. With the greatest respect to my friend, the minister who occupies that ministry now, that ministry is like musical chairs. We go through ministers there almost a dime a dozen.

He wants to hang on to that—

Hon. Mr. Henderson: There's not that many.

Mr. Martel: Not that many—but close.

Mr. Warner: That's an inflated price.

Mr. Martel: Some of the decisions out of that ministry which apply to the rest of us have not been very fair at all. In fact, they just don't take into consideration the opposition parties. As one of your officials said, "We always look after our own members first." That's a true civil servant, mind you.

I suggest to you that unless the Speaker gets control of the building, nothing will change. This minister might try to influence change but, by golly, one's not sure that come August he might not have moved off to another portfolio and the government might put the the member for London South in.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Not over there.

Mr. Martel: You might put Gordon Walker in.

Mr. Warner: Can you imagine?

Mr. Martel: But Gordon Walker says it's premature. Could you imagine what would happen to the plan of the present minister if someone like the member for London South were ever to occupy the Ministry of Government Services?

Mr. Warner: Can you imagine?

Mr. Martel: My God.

Mr. Warner: What a disaster.

Mr. Martel: He'd put us in the basement—because anything else is premature.

Mr. MacBeth: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martel: My friend who's just spoken had his day and he didn't alter it for us either. I wish you had, John. You had some clout in those days.

But fairness just isn't here, and my friend, the Speaker, knows that. I believe on the last vote, he declined from voting. In fact, he was going to oppose the bill that was presented because he didn't rise in his place as the rest of them did on being summoned to rise. Five or six of the Conservative members did rise on that occasion—to their credit.

We're lucky this afternoon. We have three cabinet ministers here. If they were to use some influence we might get out of this problem. We might see something called fairness develop. I presume with the present minister that could occur, but I suspect with some pressure they might want to oust him because he's going to make it somewhat better.

Removing the three ministries and, talking about the other section of the motion, the administration office, will really not completely resolve the situation or get us out of the problems in this building.

Mrs. Campbell: Especially when he says he won't get money to relocate people within the building when the secretariats move out.

Mr. Martel: We will still be at loggerheads. Maybe the Tories would like to change caucus rooms with us?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: You will never have our caucus room.

Mr. Martel: Not for that reason, but we're tired of the pillars because we can't see around them. Maybe you Tories can see around corners.

Mr. M. Davidson: They can see through them.

Mr. Martel: Getting rid of those three offices and getting rid of the people who work under the Legislative Assembly Act and the offices they hold now will really not resolve the problems confronting this Legislature.

Mrs. Campbell: But they will be a start.

Mr. Martel: It's just the beginning. If my friend, the minister, had been around a week and a half ago, the afternoon we had one Mr. Jackson with his famous report in committee, he would have seen that members were standing. They couldn't find room. There was insufficient room for the members of the Legislature to get in to the committee. There was insufficient room for the press. There was insufficient room for any of the citizens of Ontario who wanted to come in to watch that.

The same applied during the Health debate. There was simply no room. We have more room up here. There was no room during the Health mess that went on for members of the press and for members of the Legislature to get in. There was insufficient room for the members of the Legislature to sit down there.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Bring them up here.

Mr. Martel: We might have, but this place was also occupied. It's a case of having the funding to renovate the committee rooms as well so that we can have adequate committee rooms which to this date we don't have. Can you imagine in 1978 in Ontario, Mr. Speaker, having committees of this Legislature, who, when witnesses come before them have insufficient room for the witnesses and the members of the Legislature to go to the committee room? What's that saying about the goings on in the state of Denmark? It's just totally ludicrous.

As I say, while my friends, the member for Humber or the member for London South might agree that this grand old building has served us, she's not serving us well now. If he was at one of those exchanges within the past three or four weeks, I say to my friend from Humber he would know that what I said in the last debate on this was that the existing committee rooms are not large enough. They don't meet the needs.

They're crazy from the point of view if he were also there—and there were great numbers there—that the microphones continued to fall on the floor. As somebody kicked a wire that was taped to the floor, a mike would fall off. People had their books on the floor beside them as they tried to look at material pertaining to what was going on in those discussions. There was no place for witnesses or members of the civil service to have their material before them. Some of it was on the floor.

We should have put the minister on the floor maybe for openers. That wouldn't last very long. I suspect if my friend, the minister, had on occasion to sit on the floor with his books beside him and put a mike down there with him, then we would see the committee rooms improved.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I will be on the floor.

Mr. Martel: Yes, but you're not on the floor yet.

Mr. Gregory: He was up on the scaffolding a minute ago.

[5:00]

Mr. Martel: I could tell you about the scaffolding last week too. I thought they'd have the Minister of Labour in here because of the way that thing was erected. Be that as it may, until the jurisdiction for committee rooms comes under the Speaker, we will have that intolerable situation, which surely isn't just demeaning to members of the opposition parties. It must also be demeaning to the government to have committee rooms that are not large enough, to have microphones falling over, to have people standing around or sitting on the floor or trying to follow debates with material on their knees. It is a disgrace that this can prevail.

The same can be said with respect to caucus rooms. My friend the minister says we will never get to that caucus room. I don't want that particular caucus room, but I think we are entitled to a caucus room that is adequate to meet our needs as is obviously being satisfied by the space that has been allocated to the Tory party.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: You won't need nearly as much space after the next election.

Mr. Martel: Why doesn't the government call it? Then we'll find out. Either that or the minister is moving after the next election.

It has been downhill. The minister will recall that when I came in here there were only seven of us. That was in the days when the Tories had 78 and 80 members. Oh, for the good old days. But they ain't there.

Mr. Worton: They're praying like hell that they'll come back.

Mr. Martel: They're going to have to pray a lot harder.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We will return.

Mr. Martel: MacArthur said he was going to return after he was ousted from his great—

Mr. Nixon: The Tories had more in 1943 than they have now.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Great days!

Mr. Martel: Seriously, Mr. Speaker, I say to my Tory friends, why is it that their caucus should—that is where the unfairness comes in. If the Tories had their way, and they were short of caucus space now, this minister would find it. He sure as hell would—and in a hurry.

Mr. Nixon: Aren't you in that beautiful big air-conditioned caucus room downstairs? The one we had for a while?

Mr. Martel: Yes, the one the Liberals had for a while. The one with all the pillars in it.

Mr. Nixon: Well, we'll remove them sometime.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: You can't see through them?

Mr. Martel: Could we remove the pillars?

Mr. Nixon: I used to find those pillars were handy when we were down there.

Mr. Martel: For sleeping?

Mr. Nixon: We could sit behind them.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Martel: One could have a little snooze. They might be handy for that purpose or the morning after the night before—

Mr. Nixon: I wouldn't know about that.

Mr. Martel: —but when we have a delegation in, or if only the caucus and the staff are all there, there is simply insufficient room. If the Tories want to change, the minister might say, "We've had it for a long time, and we're always fair-minded." But, as the member for London South says "we are premature in wanting an adequate facility. The committee rooms are lousy, the caucus rooms are lousy, and there was a provisional order which said the minister would make an announcement and indicate what the government is going to do with respect to the Speaker having charge of the building. The minister hasn't done that yet.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Oh yes, I did. You are behind the times, Elie.

Mr. Worton: Where is your caucus room, Lorne?

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order. Only the member for Sudbury East has the floor. He may continue.

Mr. Martel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: We're just trying to improve the quality of the debate.

Mr. Martel: If that were the case, I would suggest that my friend refrain.

Mr. Nixon: Tell us about your office.

Mr. Martel: I don't want to talk about my office; it's a palatial suite.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Do you have an office up in your riding?

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Martel: Yes, the office in my riding is a little bigger than the one I have here. It doesn't compare to the minister's, mind you. But I want to talk about the office space that I am told—in fact, we saw it; the member for St. George will recall that we were down in the Premier's end. It's crazy; he had people working in an old vault. That says something, doesn't it? People working in an old vault.

Mr. Nixon: They have Kelly in there.

Mr. Martel: Kelly? He's counting the money. I exclude Kelly; he is only in there when the new supply comes in. He tabulates it carefully and then he leaves. It is the secretaries who have to have work there that I'm thinking about. Imagine having to work under those conditions. It says something again about the government, and even about the Premier, that he would allow people to work under those conditions. The member for Mississauga East was with us on that great tour when we went to see him. On both sides, we saw people working in vaults.

They had brightened it up and painted it a nice yellow. But can you imagine people working without proper lighting and without proper air conditioning, day in and day out under those conditions? That says something about this government and the people who work for the members of this Legislature that we would even tolerate such conditions.

One has to go back to the Camp report which said that although the government continues to cry poor mouth, it nonetheless was able to find money for Ontario Place and for the Hydro building; yet for the building housing the members of the Legislature it was able to find nothing.

Mr. Worton: Put the Lieutenant Governor down in the Hydro building.

Mr. Martel: Yes, we could send govie down there. We could hearken back to the old days. Who was it sold the Lieutenant Governor's residence?

Mr. Nixon: Harry Walker.

Mr. Worton: Chorley Park.

Mr. Nixon: A very wise move it was. They sold all the limousines at the same time.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Martel: We had a facility for the Lieutenant Governor but the Liberals were found wanting once more and sold it.

Mr. Nixon: I am sure you would have supported it, being a well-known royalist.

Mr. Martel: Yes. Don't insult me. There is another space—7,000 square feet. That is 4,000 square feet less than either the Liberals or the New Democrats have that she has. It houses the Lieutenant Governor once in a while.

Mr. Nixon: Very proper.

Mr. Martel: There must be close to 80 members and assistants and what not in the Liberal caucus. If you take the total ball-park figures, there are roughly the same in ours. We have 4,000 square feet less than the Lieutenant Governor has.

It says something that moneys can be found for everything else except to fix up this building to make it adequate for members, not only, as I say, in respect to caucus rooms, but particularly in view of the members' offices. Can you imagine a secretary or an assistant or a researcher sitting in the middle, back in the north wing where we have had to purchase lamps because the testing done in this Legislature by people who are in the know indicates that the lighting is harmful to the eyes, particularly of the assistants and research people who work back there constantly?

Mr. Worton: Back in and back out.

Mr. Martel: There is something wrong. We can joke about it, but there is something wrong when we have to do that sort of thing. Yet we are being forced to do it because the conditions are so deplorable. Nothing ever changes.

The thing that is strange is that it never happens to those people in the civil service. I have found in my 10 years plus here that the members of the Legislature take a back seat to everything, except cabinet ministers who come first. I am not even sure about that. Maybe it is the deputy ministers who come first, then the cabinet ministers, then all the civil servants and, finally, the back-benchers.

I guess the reason the Conservative back-benchers don't say anything is that they always have hope they will have the laying-on-of-hands ceremony by the Premier. Therefore, they don't want to rock the boat for fear that they might jeopardize their position.

Mr. Gregory: You will never have that worry.

Mr. Martel: I said before you came that I recall the days when there were seven of us around here. I think you should count them now.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: You were not here then.

Mr. Martel: I came in after that election. We changed things.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: You were not here.

Mr. Martel: I well recall that there were seven. That is vastly different. I remember 1971 too when you had 78 members.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Great days.

Mr. Martel: That's right. You long for them.

Mr. Samis: You'll never see them again, Lorne.

Mr. Warner: Those days are gone.

Mr. Martel: The Tory back-benchers really don't complain as much as we do because, although substandard compared to the minister—

Mr. Warner: They get a little better treatment.

Mrs. Campbell: They get pretty good-sized offices.

Mr. Martel:—they're a great deal better off than the opposition members, of course. That's why, when we come to vote on this, I suppose that as they did four or five weeks ago when they opposed the private member's bill—I'm not sure, they might vote against this as well. It's premature to expect all members to be treated equally around this place. It depends on how you measure it.

Mr. Gregory: Some are more equal than others.

Mr. Martel: There are some members who are more equal than others, Bud.

Mr. Gregory: Correct.

Mr. Martel: And they all sit on that side of the House. That's why we have to take that piece of legislation and we've got to put the whole of the Legislature under the Speaker. I suspect that's the only time we're going to see any equality around here. That's why the Tories resist it. I don't think the Speaker has any intention of reducing the services the Tories have. He might just bring everyone else up to that standard. If the Tories are opposed to that, they should tell us.

Mr. Grande: The Tories are philosophically opposed to that.

Mr. Warner: The minister is opposed.

Mr. Martel: I don't think the situation can go on and I don't really think it will change—I say this in all seriousness—until there's an order in council which comes from the Premier which says that the entire building will come under the jurisdiction of the Speaker.

How do we handle the services? Certainly there should be no duplication of staff. We just hire those people who are presently doing it to look after the buildings, to make sure it stands up, to make sure it's clean, to make sure all of what goes on in maintenance is done without duplication. The Speaker would become responsible for the improvements that are necessary in (a) office allocation, (b) the quality of the committee rooms themselves, and (c) this Legislature.

Something that has bothered me for some time is those television cameras. It was my understanding, having sat on that committee which brought in the first bill, the cameras up there were just supposed to be a temporary arrangement—we were supposed to put in something more permanent and of better quality. All we're doing is adding to the cameras. We started with four; I think we now have seven. I'm sure it's really of no value to most of us that they're there. It's a problem.

This room itself needs improvement—that's one of the first areas—with different lighting that will not be as harmful to everyone's eyes. I don't know if it's harmful, but certainly when they're on for the one hour all of us find the glare a bit offensive. If the Speaker had the total control and the budget to do the type of job he would do, probably with assistance from the members' services committee—and maybe the wisdom of the Board of Internal Economy could be sought in these matters—we could have a Legislature which would serve the needs in 1978.

As long as it remains under Government Services, that will not occur. That's no reflection on this minister because I believe he wants the changes. The building has reached this point because Government Services has not given it the priority it needs.

I hearken back again to Camp who wrote his initial report in 1971 or 1972. He made the point then that although people will scream about money, in those years they were in fact building Hydro, they were building Ontario Place, they were renovating Osgoode Hall and the St. Lawrence Market area.

Funds could be found by the civil service for all of that, but never have there been funds found for this building. They were insufficient then—that was the excuse given to Camp. From then to now we're still short of funds. It will always be short. The place that gets short shrift all the time is this building, and that's what is nuts about it. This is supposed to be the centre of the government of Ontario and it's supposed to be for the members who serve in this Legislature. Why it is that the government can find money for everything else except improvements for this building is beyond me. These aren't the days of Leslie Frost when the House used to sit for 10 weeks and that was it.

[5:15]

Mr. Nixon: He spent a million dollars digging out the cellar.

Mr. Martel: When Leslie Frost was here.

Mr. Nixon: No, no.

An hon. member: To build a restaurant.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Martel: Oh, yes, sure. We had to have a restaurant that was big enough to serve us. They've expanded and now we need some catering in it; some decent service. A little decent food would help.

But the minister found money for everything else so, surely, he's got to find money for this. There are decent rooms across the way for committee hearings. Why aren't there decent facilities in here which are adequate for committee hearings?

As I was saying, this isn't a 10-week operation any more. Members work in this building almost year-round now. We already have four select committees coming before us this summer. I understand there could well be three standing committees sitting too. It's just nuts that we would provide adequate facilities somewhere else but in this, the building for the government of Ontario, it should be allowed to go this route.

I say to you that the time has come, Mr. Speaker, when you get control of the building.

Mr. Worton: It has been a long time.

Mr. Martel: It's been a long time coming and I guess it will take another couple of private member's bills because the government still doesn't want to say, although it's in rule 43, I believe, of the provisional orders, where it indicated over a year ago it would announce its intentions with respect to this building. I say with the greatest of respect to my friend the minister, that he should be encouraging the Premier.

Mr. Warner: He's not. He's against it.

Mr. Martel: I realize that and I can't understand why. He should be encouraging the Premier to turn this building over to the Speaker and get out from underneath. He shouldn't have to worry about this building. He's got enough to worry about.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I am worrying about your room.

Mr. Martel: It has been the people before the minister who have kept us there.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No, they didn't keep you there.

Mr. Martel: And I say to the minister that the chances of that occurring under the Speaker or his assistants would change rather dramatically because they are fair men and they would change it to make it equal.

So I say to the minister he should be saying: "I don't need the hassle of this building. I've got enough to look after in the rest of the province and I want this building to be turned over to Mr. Speaker. Let him accept the responsibility. Let him provide the space. We'll just move all the civil servants out and we'll turn the building over to the Speaker and we'll provide the services as the Speaker requests them."

Maybe that way then we'd see this building brought up to the standard it should be where we, in fact, have the seat of government.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak to this motion?

Mrs. Campbell has moved the adoption of the report of the standing members' services committee. Shall the motion carry?

All those in favour of the motion will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the "ayes" have it.

Motion agreed to.

Mrs. Campbell: The "ayes" have it?

Mr. Martel: My God, it's so unusual.

Mr. J. Reed: It could not have been that critical.

Mr. Martel: Do you realize what just happened to you, Lorne?

SELECT COMMITTEE ON THE OMBUDSMAN

Consideration of the fourth report of the select committee on the Ombudsman.

Mr. M. N. Davison: The members of the select committee on the Ombudsman worked very hard in putting together this report which we consider to be a rather important document in the course of events.

It was, in my opinion and in the opinion of members of the committee, unfortunate that at the time the Legislature passed the Ombudsman Act, there was no clear and definitive statement or explanation of what role the Ombudsman was to play in the system of government that we have in Ontario. I think that in many ways we can trace back to that point any of the growing pains that the institution has suffered in this province in the past two and a half years.

One of the most important elements arising out of the select committee's report that I would like to underline for this Legislature's attention is the committee's stated intention during its next round of meetings to undertake the formulation of rules for the guidance of the Ombudsman in the performance of his function. The committee intends that these rules will include definitions and interpretations and that they will provide an explanation as to how the Ombudsman's institution should function, fit into and relate to our system of government in the province of Ontario.

The committee, when it enters this process this summer, will be involved in an open process. The rules will be formulated in a very open fashion, Mr. Speaker, and it is the intention of the committee to invite and encourage the participation of members of this Legislature and the Ombudsman in the formulation of those rules, and I would trust that a large number of my colleagues in the Legislature who have some interest in the Ombudsman's institution will come before the committee and help us in formulating those rules.

The only other matter I wanted to refer-ence today is one dealing with one of the two recommendations that the committee has put before the House in this report. The committee's second recommendation is as follows: "It therefore again recommends that its order of reference be amended to provide that it receive and consider the estimates of the Ombudsman and report thereon to the Legislature with such recommendations as the committee deems appropriate."

The words "therefore again" are included in that recommendation because this is the third time the select committee has brought this recommendation to the Legislature. This recommendation will be found in the second, third and fourth reports of the select committee on the Ombudsman, and frankly, I would hope that it will not be found in the fifth report of the select committee on the Ombudsman. It's unfortunate that the government House leader is not in the chamber to respond to this recommendation, as it is a very important recommendation and I would hope that someone on the benches opposite would be in a position to make some comment today on it.

It is to me, as a private member of this Legislature, both an undesirable and to some extent offensive process that the Ombudsman's budget should be determined by a board that is dominated by cabinet ministers behind closed doors. I think it's terribly important for the Ombudsman's institution that that budgetary procedure be done in a public and open format, and I think that therefore this is an extremely important recommendation and we cannot continue to allow the budget of the Ombudsman to be determined in the way it's determined today.

There are a number of reasons other than the one I have just mentioned for holding that position, and those are arguments we have gone through a number of times both in the Legislature and in committees, and I don't intend to take any further time today discussing those because the argument has been well made.

The final thing I would like to say to the government House leader if he were here is that if some effort is not made by the government House leader, by the government or by the Board of Internal Economy, to explain to this committee of the Legislature why it is so terribly inappropriate to accept this recommendation or why it is so terribly necessary to continue ignoring this recommendation, the committee will again have to deal with this matter when it sits during the summer.

Without wanting to predetermine the matter, I would think it might well be the committee's opinion and it would certainly be my opinion that the select committee should then make a special report to this Legislature making reference to no matter other than this particular recommendation; and that at the time of that report, that recommendation will come to a vote in the Legislature. I think it would indeed be unfortunate if the select committee were put in a position where it had to go, as it were, above the head of the government House leader, the government, or the Board of Internal Economy to the Legislature to demand that this situation, which at least I think is incorrect, should be rectified.

Mr. Lawlor: I wanted to say a few words today on this report, which is a pivotal and central report in the ongoing functioning and role of the Ombudsman in this province. I think it will be generally agreed that it is a fairly crucial office which has had to date certain thorny features, so much so that it was requisite that a select committee give a further canvassing of this particular field and seek to gain some particular insights into how it may perhaps more harmoniously function.

I have been very disappointed indeed in the reception by the press of our report. I think it has been just about wholly misconstrued. Sometimes I wonder if those who write can read—I also wonder whether those who read can write. But in any event, the whole tenor of the comments from the press, thus far at least, has been saying almost diametrically opposite what we intended. Surely that is something that cannot be allowed to go by either unnoticed or not cried out against. That is why I am standing here.

As we put in our report, our intention was to seek some kind of intelligent reconciliation, an ongoing understanding between the two offices. Because nowhere else in the world have such rubs and frictions developed, and the problem is how did it come to pass? The first answer was because we didn't know what we were doing initially. We all sprinkled a little baptismal water on the head of the newborn infant, sanctimoniously raised our hands to heaven and said, "Aren't we fine fellows and aren't we all doing excellent things on behalf of the people?" without having a thorough survey of what the whole matter was about. In that way, there was a certain blindness present.

Secondly, out of that has developed a number of alterations, misunderstandings, stupid frictions, as many of these things often are; gratings against one another which neither party I suppose intended, but to which both managed to add their little bit of unction. So the office had come into a condition where a report of this kind appears to be necessary.

We say in the report that on both sides there are faults, blindnesses, inadequacies, unwillingness to respond, a lack of the appreciation of the problems of the other guy—all the silly things that can cause great institutions to break down. We said on our side, mea culpa, we have failed; first of all because we didn't give it a proper surveyance to start with and, secondly, because we carry over into our relationships with this transcendent authority the very sort of antagonism that we either really or artificially from time to time engender in this body.

[5:30]

Parliaments are bodies based upon adversarial relationships where a pretended or real hostility actually exists with respect to the ongoing debate. This is generated, this is affirmed, this is recognized and this is sanctioned. But that's not the position of the Ombudsman. It can't be if it's to function at all. Some of us get a certain amount of gratification out of the sheer aggression that constantly ensues. It relieves nerves and tensions. You can go out and talk to your family in an almost half-human fashion. Otherwise, all this repressed violence wouldn't possibly be good. But there's no role for repressed violence vis-à-vis the Ombudsman's office.

There's this habitual state of mind that we have in terms of antagonisms and stirring up difficulties and we carry that over. This is particularly vehement and particularly harmful in terms of cabinet ministers who, in jealousy of their own prerogatives and office, take an offensive, a defensive, a contestation stance over against any criticism from any quarter, including this fairly neutral body of gentlemen and surrounding individuals vis-à-vis his office. That has been exacerbated to the point where it has become almost childish. It has to cease.

This report says our department, our attitude, our appreciation and that of cabinet ministers have to alter because they don't recognize the tenor, direction and meaning of this particular office. On the other side of the fence, so too should the Ombudsman. The Ombudsman follows the general capitalistic ethos of the Globe and Mail editorial I saw recently, where everything under the world is a warfare, where knives are out constantly, where we war not only in the night, but in the noontime, where everyone fights everyone else because if we fight one another hard enough and the blood flows in sufficient abundance, somehow truth will emerge at the end of the rivulet.

What bloody nonsense! And I mean bloody. Nothing in this particular context, at least of any benefit to anybody concerned, will emerge out of that particular attitude of adversarial relationship. I haven't got the editorial in front of me today, but the Globe says that if an Ombudsman just happened to do anything to win our affections, he would be inadmissible. He cannot help but be an outsider and at logger-heads with this assembly. That's his function, they say.

I say to them they wholly misunderstand the function. That is not the way the Ombudsman operates in Sweden. Since 1809, that office has developed and it has had a slow, testing evolution. The greatest care and delicacy are exercised on both sides. That is the only way, which they think and which they have tested, that the Ombudsman can adequately function in any jurisdiction, through a circumspection, a conservation and a real care for the various functions performed and the interrelationships of the two offices. No one in authority in Sweden would dream of going out of his way to castigate or to call in question or, simply for the heightened blood pressure, to oppose the Ombudsman's position, as seems to be commonplace in this assembly.

The Ombudsman on his side—and in Denmark and in every other jurisdiction—goes about his job with tact, diplomacy and a sense of the rather thin-skinned, if you will, position of people in elected office. We are highly sensitive and thick-skinned, for all the thickness of our epidermae. Sometimes you don't think you could ever get through it, not with a Bowie knife, but despite all that the sensitivities are a very curious thing. Ought those sensitivities to be respected? I would think so. We are not children of darkness. We'll accept in the case of the Ombudsman an enormous independence. We consider the body autonomous but beholden—and they're not contradictory terms. We have failed in that ongoing relationship on this side of the House in so far as we have not had an ongoing formal or informal, off-the-cuff or ritualized colloquy, an ongoing dialogue in a way that applies to no other office.

Some damn fool sitting on that particular select committee has written in a section here that has been reported and quoted in all the editorials. They talk of perfumed prose. They seem to think that in order to make a point, if the rhetoric is perhaps a little heightened in order to precisely make that point, this is questionable in the otherwise terribly commonplace and unutterably prosaic precincts of this particularly halting and inarticulate assembly.

I'll read this section first: "As possible with no other office, however independent by statute, the relationship between the Ombudsman and Parliament is performe and necessarily trusting. It is a unique and delicate flower in any democratic system and its preservation and growth requires almost infinite and endless care." That's a pretty good paragraph except for the "delicate flower" business. If I had anything to do with it I would have said that it may be the "rank ailanthus in the April dooryard." That's a quotation from T. S. Eliot.

I would simply and without rhetoric let the thing go at that, without pushing the issue. Stereotyped as it may be, delicate flowers are delicate. This particular function we tried to impress upon this assembly—and it is contained in our report—is a unique one, totally different from anything else that we have got. It exercises independence, and yet it must work in very close co-operation with the members of the House who, all of us, perform more or less the same function as the Ombudsman's office.

Incidental to that, my feeling is that we as members don't half often enough refer cases to the Ombudsman. We tend backwardly to retain, to the last squeezing ounce, the case in our own hands, just in case we miraculously might solve it; whereas at an earlier date, the Ombudsman, who has these very wide investigatory powers, who has access to government files and to the government itself in a way, without a Freedom of Information Act which we do not have and we will not have, he might be brought in at an earlier time in a completely open and trusting way. I am sure the Ombudsman on his side of the fence would welcome that more open approach to the thing.

There is a fundamental trust lacking. That may be papered over. That may even be receding. I hope, as a result of our report, it will wholly disappear. We cannot function on that basis with this particular office, whatever one may do with any other government agency that exists. So apportioning the blame on both sides, although I hate to use that word, we say, "All right. Let that be the case. Let the river run. But we will seek to build bridges and we will recognize the necessity therefrom." We would ask the Ombudsman's office to meet us at least halfway, although we are prepared to go further, and set up an ongoing accommodation between the two offices which will not bring about a great expense of public moneys in terms of any number of committees that are still sitting and still debating—the whole thing is in a hazardous condition with respect to the Pickering situation and what not.

I want to go on record as saying that I have no objection whatsoever—as a matter of fact, I go the opposite direction and say, "Bless the Ombudsman with respect to these across-the-board investigations." There is nothing wrong with that. I wouldn't think there would be too many of them. I think he would use the very greatest prudence before he launched on one. The investigation in Correctional Services will bear fruit and has borne fruit. Whether or not, according the Minister of Correctional Services, it has saved the province all the money he says he has, nevertheless Mr. Maloney enjoys a good friend in the minister on that particular point.

Many of us in this House give a basic accord to that particular type of approach, because it eliminates a multitude of evils. It does what other jurisdictions, particularly the Scandinavian jurisdictions, do in terms of not placing the emphasis on the individual case as being central but on the elimination of the injury at the root so that a hundred cases can be solved in a single instance. That, and the kind of preventive medicine operating against the possibilities of any number of cases arising out of similar or the same type of incidents, is all to the good and within the ambit of the Ombudsman's functions.

I don't think we should take issue with that, although I think people around here have been too blatantly taking issue with that and with everything else under the sun. It is not helpful. It is quite detrimental to the operation of this office and again, as this report says, it must cease. Otherwise the office won't function; it will break down. Maybe someone will say hurrah, that this should be the case. I would think that any sensible member would regret that in the extreme.

I think we all have some kind of vague or more or less definite image of what that office should consist of. I think that what I am saying today, and what this report says, would meet the accord of the overwhelming number of members in this body, but the type of goodwill and the type of approach to the office to bring that about has not yet been set afoot.

There are a couple of areas I would like to mention. Again, in parenthesis, I say that if any one thinks that a visitation to Stockholm in the dead of winter is a particularly gratifying experience, I would ask him to do so the next time the weather closes in.

[5:45]

Israel, of course, was much more to the point in the sense at least of some comfort. The Israeli situation is curious. Members who read the report will see that a man by the name of Dr. Nebenzahl performs two functions—a function of a state controller, which means that he has investigatory powers over the whole field of government from defence to garbage cans, the whole thing. He has a staff of about 450 people. Like a controller general or an auditor general in this province, he looks into the spending, looks into the purchasing policies, looks into the legal justification, in all departments.

That was set up many years ago in Israel and of course we have nothing quite like it. Our power here in the auditor is very much delimited over against the range of his power. Out of that function—finding faults with the civil service in overspending, in exercising their powers improperly here and there, with respect to the whole fiscal picture—he gradually evolved into an Ombudsman's office. So that office is directly related to and works in quite close co-ordination with the office of the state controller.

It was suggested during our trip and might have been contained in the report, just might have been, that we would set up a similar institution here. I don't think we make direct remarks about that in the sense of whether or not that would be feasible, but I think the general consensus in the committee was that it would not be, that institutions are endemic to the country or the geographical region in which they are found; they grow out of traditions, out of habits of life that are peculiar to that area and trying to alter them to adopt a foreign mode of procedure to our own requires a great deal of care and the application is not immediately forthcoming.

In this particular regard, to bring those two offices together could possibly be, in all democratic jurisdictions, brought into being in the future. Maybe Israel would give some guidance and some leadership in this respect. On the other hand, for the nonce, for the foreseeable future and I would think pretty far foreseeable too, that would not be feasible as I see it in our jurisdiction.

Again the press comments on the report seem to me, from the quotations and from the tenor and from the misunderstanding, to have involved them reading the first chapter. Maybe it is too much to ask that maybe they read the second one too. It spells out the insights that we gained on these visitations.

Again in parentheses, as to these trips that are taken by committees, sometimes individuals say that if we had stayed at home we could have got just as much information by an invitation to certain key people from abroad. I would argue sincerely that is not possible. Every time we get on a streetcar or take a taxi or go into a restaurant in these places we visit, we tend to ask the waitress or ask the conductor or whoever what they think about their Ombudsman. That is a good source of basic information which gives one a feeling in that population of how this particular office is regarded, what approaches are made to it, what safeguards are necessary and how secure with the office the average citizen on the street would be. That can't be obtained in any other way.

Second to that are the informal conversations. We saw over 60 governmental people in the course of this thing. The cost of having even a large portion of those people come to our jurisdiction would exceed anything that could be spent the other way. How are we going to learn about these things unless under the conditions that we observed in the course of garnering the basic information and the impressions which are the most important thing? The facts are okay. We can get them in books. The sensibility of the thing can only be gained on the spot, such as through our select committee.

Each of these Parliaments has something very similar to what we have with respect to delegated authority from the Legislature to the committee in its relationships with the Ombudsman's office. Sometimes the sole approach that can be made to the Parliament is through the committee. The sole way that the Parliament can get to the Ombudsman or have conversation with him or deal with his function at all is through their committees, whatever they may be called, and the sense of those committees and the respect that each of these committees have for that office.

In these various jurisdictions, almost invariably the Ombudsman's functions end at the end of a Parliament. He's either reappointed or a new man comes in. Secondly, invariably if it were felt that the confidence of the House or the Legislature or the Parliament involved was in question with respect to the office, workings and department of the Ombudsman, then such are the niceties of the situation as they exist abroad that the Ombudsman would resign. He would quit.

The Ombudsman's office is such an office that it cannot withstand criticism. Not only would he not put up with it on one side of the fence, he can't afford to. To retain the general sense of respect—and I'll even go this far—and say even of reverence, blast it, that we ran into abroad with respect to this office would involve his saying: "If you don't trust me, if you think I've offended in some serious way, then there's nothing for me to do but withdraw." That was the tenor. That's what we heard over and over again. I think we have to bear this in mind.

If that is the case and if it is as delicate as that, then we have to be terribly careful what criticisms we level so as not to infringe upon or call him into question unnecessarily. As a matter of fact, both parties bend over backwards in this particular office in order to keep a working relation and accommodation going. That is the tenor we find abroad.

These things are not presently being said in the press or in the public, and it's a shame, because otherwise I suspect the office will disintegrate. The sooner we come to a basic understanding, as this report gives us the basis for doing, or what this thing is all about, then the sooner the good ongoing relationship and the fullest possibilities of the working of that office will be given an opportunity to develop. Otherwise we'll continue to blunder and snarl and no one will be either the happier or the wiser.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I don't know whether it's profitable for me to start at this point. I am in your hands. If you wish me to proceed I will, but it may be a very disjointed statement with about five minutes to go. I wonder if it would not, therefore, be appropriate for me at this time to move the adjournment of the debate so that we can have a more lucid presentation later.

On motion by Mrs. Campbell, the debate was adjourned.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Henderson, the House adjourned at 5:56 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, JUNE 6, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAM

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The continued success of manufacturing industries is vital to Ontario's economic well-being. Many of our industries have suffered critical shortages of skilled trades people and I would like to advise the House of action by my ministry to alleviate these shortages.

Precision metal machining is one of the key groups of trades in manufacturing where skill shortages are often cited. This includes the trades of tool and die maker, mould maker, and general machinist. We hope to see a threefold increase in the number of apprentices working in these three trade areas. This increase should result, in part, from a recent agreement by management and labour representatives regarding training standards. Such an agreement has been sought for many years. I am extremely pleased to announce today that it has been concluded.

Regulations, which have subsequently been approved by cabinet will enable an apprentice to work towards his certificate of qualification under the Apprenticeship and Tradesmen's Qualification Act. As the members know, certification has been successfully implemented in the construction trades for many years and needs no expansion at this time. However, to further develop training programs in the manufacturing sector the ministry is mounting an intensive information campaign to promote the merits of apprenticeship to employers in the manufacturing industry.

Our goal is to visit up to 5,000 manufacturing companies not currently engaged in apprenticeship training and to discuss with them the advantages they might enjoy if they mounted training programs. This campaign will build forcefully on the promotional programs aimed at employers which was recently undertaken by my ministry. Currently apprenticeship counsellors throughout Ontario are vigorously following up with the more than 1,000 employers who expressed an interest in apprenticeship as a result of our advertising, direct mail, and other promotional activities.

Another action to expand apprenticeship in Ontario is the decision by the Ministries of Colleges and Universities and Education to build better continuity between technical training in secondary schools and apprenticeship training. A link has been established between senior secondary school courses and the basic college portion of apprenticeship programs for the trades of baker, cook, hairdresser, and motor vehicle mechanic. In other trades we are developing similar linkages in order to reduce the amount of time spent in the classroom where formal apprenticeship training begins.

In addition, the Windsor school board, with the encouragement of both ministries, is realigning its skilled training programs in the metal cutting trades. This realignment will give high school graduates the choice of entering an apprenticeship program in local industry to complete their training on the job, or entering St. Clair College in the second year of the toolmaking technician or plastic mould making technician programs.

This scheme should become a model for other locations and trades. It will enable an apprentice to become a qualified journeyman at a younger age and will reduce employers' training costs by "freeing up" expensive equipment and supervisory personnel that would otherwise be needed for basic training.

Finally, I would like to refer to a new initiative in industrial training called employer-sponsored training. This scheme has been developed in consultation with labour, private industry, trade associations, community colleges, and other interested groups. It is supported by the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission which under a contract recently signed with my ministry will provide up to $8 million in the current fiscal year for employer-sponsored training projects.

A key characteristic of this new mode of training is that it will respond to locally defined community needs. Community industrial training committees will be established in interested communities and economic regions of the province. These agencies will represent employers, labour, local government, the local office of the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission, local educators, and other training interests in the community. They will determine the type and the amount of training required by the community.

Employers, of course, are vital to this training program. Most training will occur in the workplace and employers will be reimbursed for their approved training costs. This plan will allow employers to help develop a pool of skilled workers without running the risk of losing their investment in training if the trainee leaves to work elsewhere. We believe this program will enable many small employers who have not formerly provided training to get involved in training activities for the very first time.

Employer-sponsored training will recognize that there are different levels of proficiency within trades and will enable trainees to apply the skills they have learned while they work in an orderly way to acquire new skills. Training will be self-paced so that the students with greater aptitude can complete it more quickly.

Discussions are currently under way with several communities to establish employer-sponsored training projects. By this fall we will begin to announce these projects locally as arrangements are completed. Within the next year we expect to see several thousand people go to work across Ontario in employer-sponsored training activity.

In conclusion, I would like to emphasize that this new initiative of employer-sponsored training will not take place at the expense of traditional apprenticeship training in Ontario. The year 1978 is the 50th anniversary of regulated apprenticeship programs in the province. We currently have about 30,000 registered apprentices and one of Canada's most advanced apprenticeship systems which we will continue to develop.

I have emphasized trades in manufacturing industries in my statement today. Further developmental activity may be directed to other trade areas such as the hotel and restaurant industry. The actions outlined today have been undertaken with the co-operation and support of management, labour, the industrial training council, government organizations, community colleges and other interested groups. With their continued support and assistance, we believe we can make a significant addition to Ontario's record of accomplishment in the field of industrial training.

YOUTH EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table today, for the information of the members, a paper entitled, Youth Employment and the Ontario Economy, which has been prepared by my staff and which outlines some of the dimensions of the serious job problems of our youth. It has been sent, as well, to participants of the Skills for Jobs conference, which will be convened by the government this Thursday.

While this paper does not deal with all the social and economic consequences of youth joblessness, it does, I think, point out key areas for concern and concerted action. In particular, it focuses on the tens of thousands of Ontario youth who face extended unemployment because of the inability of our economic and social institutions to adapt to changing needs and changing circumstances.

This situation is most serious and without action from governments at all levels, from our learning institutions, from private business and our skilled trade unions, it promises to remain so. At a time when this country is facing competitive challenges and opportunities on all fronts, when the need for innovation and technological advancement is critical, the squandering of the energy and the skills of our youth is a betrayal of the confidence that has been placed in all of us.

We are well aware of the phenomenal surge of young people into our job markets over the past decade. The coinciding of this accelerated growth with our economic difficulties associated with slow growth and high levels of inflation have exacerbated the challenge of youth employment. Nevertheless, our young people have faced an unemployment problem of far more significant dimension than others, and in large part their difficulties have been caused by structural rigidities in our economy.

This staff paper indicates that fundamental changes in institutional policies and priorities are essential. In this respect I believe the success of the Ontario Youth Employment Program is encouraging. Nevertheless, it is evident that significant reforms in the unemployment insurance program and in manpower planning and funding will be necessary.

It confirms that the task before all of us is immense. I anticipate this study will make a contribution to the important work before us.

FISHING BAN

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, during the past few days there has been some considerable confusion surrounding the recent federal government ban on US commercial fishing.

At the outset I would like to state that the closing of Canadian waters to US commercial fishing simply does not apply to those American visitors who come to Ontario for sports fishing.

When the Canadian waters were closed to commercial fishing by the Canadian federal government, the US government reacted in kind by closing US coastal waters to Canadian commercial fishing. However, I understand that US law does not distinguish between recreational and commercial fishing and this has led to some confusion among American sports fishermen as to whether or not they would be banned from fishing in Canadian waters.

During the past few days I have been in contact with the federal government and have been reassured that American fishermen will still be welcome in Canadian waters. My ministry has already sent Telex messages to all our travel and information centres around the province to inform Americans inquiring about the fishing ban that they are welcome to fish in the Great Lakes bordering Ontario, as well as in all our 400,000 inland lakes and streams. The only provision is, of course, that they obtain and have a valid non-resident fishing licence.

My ministry is also in the process of informing all of Ontario's fishing resort operators, through the various tourism associations, that they can reassure their guests that the commercial fishing ban does not apply to sports or recreational fishing. As well, we have been in touch with all of the major media in the northern states of the US, informing them that Canadian law does distinguish between commercial and sports fishing and that sports fishermen are still welcome in Ontario.

I am quite certain that neither side in the commercial fishing dispute has any desire to obstruct the tourism business. Figures I have obtained from the Ministry of Natural Resources indicate that more than 627,000 non-resident angling licences were issued in Ontario, representing, I am assured, more than $110 million a year to the province.

[2:15]

I would like to conclude by repeating that the anglers are welcome to fish Ontario waters. There is no ban on sports fishing by Americans on the Great Lakes or on our inland waters. They are as always most welcome.

ONTARIO ROAD MAP

Mr. Mancini: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege. Recently all the members of the assembly received road maps, and I assume the government has also sent out these official road maps across the province as the official map of the province. After I had time to study this map, I was able to find out two of the most popular tourist resort areas in the riding of Essex South have been omitted.

First of all Fort Malden museum, which has visitors in the thousands, has not been placed near the Amherstburg area, and also Bob-lo Island Amusement Park, which has visitors in the hundreds of thousands, has not been placed on the map. I would wish to bring this to the attention of the Legislature so that in next year's official road map we can continue to encourage tourism in the area of Essex county.

Mr. Warner: Did it include your restaurant?

Mr. Lewis: Do you think it was deliberate?

Mr. Conway: How about the Frank Drea Parkway?

Hon. Mr. Davis: That's an idea.

ORAL QUESTIONS

HEAVY WATER PRODUCTION

Mr. S. Smith: I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy who had originally told the House he would have a statement to make on the state of the heavy water plants under construction at Bruce and the situation regarding the surplus of heavy water, but I notice that no such statement has been forthcoming.

Will the minister answer a very simple question? Will he tell us whether there has ever been, to his knowledge, commissioned after the year 1974 an independent review of heavy water supplies and requirements by an agency external to Hydro?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: As I indicated last week to this House, I promised to make a full statement on heavy water this week. It was either going to be today or on Thursday. I will be making that statement on Thursday.

Mr. Riddell: Why did you choose Thursday?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I will not answer questions on this subject until that time.

Interjections.

Mr. J. Reed: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I will do so on Thursday.

Mr. S. Smith: Can the minister explain, by way of supplementary, why he is trying to duck what would seem to be a fairly straightforward question, which hardly requires an entire prepared statement by his staff and which simply asks whether, as recommended by the report to the minister by the Ontario

Energy Board in August 1974, there has ever been commissioned an independent review of heavy water supplies and requirements by an agency external to Hydro? It requires a simple yes or no, or maybe the minister doesn't know. It doesn't require putting this off for a major statement on Thursday. This is a billion-dollar enterprise. The minister ought to know some of the basics about it and be able to tell us about it.

Mr. Yakabuski: Why doesn't the Leader of the Opposition do his grandstanding on Thursday?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I would like to assure the Leader of the Opposition and all members of this House, that this is not a simple subject, it is a very complex subject.

Mr. J. Reed: Just say no.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I will not answer until Thursday. I am making a statement on Thursday.

Mr. S. Smith: An answer to the question would be enough.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: When the minister makes his statement on Thursday, would he be kind enough to inform the House why Ontario Hydro has been blocked out of export markets for heavy water produced in this province, and why Ontario Hydro's own reports are now talking about the possibilities of deferral of projects? Have those decisions been already taken or will they be announced on Thursday?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: That is one aspect of the subject that will be contained in the statement.

Mr. S. Smith: I will try one final supplementary, although I can't for the life of me see why the minister is afraid to answer such simple and direct questions.

Interjections.

An hon. member: He doesn't know.

Mr. Havrot: Simple-minded questions.

Mr. S. Smith: Can the minister simply tell this House the first date upon which he personally was made aware of the potential surplus of heavy water in the province of Ontario? What is the first date on which he began to be aware of this?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: That is a very good question. I will answer on Thursday.

Mr. S. Smith: Really, you almost wish for the member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. J. A. Taylor) back here again.

Hon. Mr. Davis: How about the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon)?

Mr. Breithaupt: Where is the former minister when we need him?

CONVENTION FACILITIES

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism: Is the minister aware that there are at least 71 large associations that have indicated, in one way or another, that they cannot hold their conventions in Metropolitan Toronto because of the lack of adequate facilities in Metro Toronto, namely a convention centre. Is he aware that these 71 associations collectively could represent an attendance of about half a million people and possibly a market potential of $153 million? Are those figures available to the minister?

An hon. member: Paul Godfrey was here.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I am aware that there has been some difficulty in getting a number of large conventions to this community due to the lack of those appropriate facilities. I have had discussions with the Metropolitan Toronto representatives, the Metropolitan Toronto convention bureau, and at the present time there is a study going on as to the possible site for such a convention centre. There is some work being done as to the designing of a model of the type of building that would be required. But I completely agree with the Leader of the Opposition that one of the real failings in this area is an adequate convention centre and trade centre. There's no question about that.

Mr. Lewis: Bring it right into Riverdale.

An hon. member: Scarborough would be nice.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Given the provincial tourism deficit somewhere, I guess, between half a billion and a billion dollars—I'm not sure how it is being calculated at the moment—what precisely is this government prepared to offer and prepared to do to bring about the building of a convention centre in Metro Toronto, as soon as is conceivably possible, and to get on with something constructive in the way of not only creating jobs but reversing this very severe drain on our dollar?

Interjection.

Mr. Martel: You were the ones who wanted to cut the budget.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: The important thing, and I believe the honourable member would agree, would be first of all, to determine the best site for such a convention centre. That would be determined by the local people, of course. Secondly, it would be to design or at least have a model of the type of building and facility required.

Then I think it would be most prudent of us to determine what the overall cost of that facility would be. From there we can get into discussions as to how that particular facility would be financed. But we are working on that with the levels of government locally that would be involved.

Mr. Deans: Supplementary: In making your determinations and evaluating both the need and the appropriateness of building a convention centre in Toronto, will you take into account that you are presently involved in one way or another in the development of such a facility in Hamilton, and the problem that may well flow from having two large trade and convention centres located within 50 miles of each other?

Mr. McClellan: We don't need two.

Mr. S. Smith: They are different.

Mr. Deans: And whether or not we might be able to do something to bring the two together—

Mr. McClellan: One is enough.

Mr. Deans:—in order to create some kind of development that will be satisfactory and appropriate for the entire area?

Hon. Mr. Davis: We will build it in Bronte. We will build it in the Bronte park.

Mr. Martel: You announced that a number of years ago.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That was not a convention centre.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I am not going to quarrel with the honourable member that perhaps there is a need for some kind of convention centre in the city of Hamilton. However, I would suggest—

Mr. Deans: It is being done. It is now being done.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I am not quarrelling with the fact that it's required.

Mr. Nixon: I thought the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Henderson) had promised this.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: But I think it is fair to say, if you look at the total scene, that the most logical place for a major convention and trade fair centre is Toronto.

Mr. Foulds: Why not Minaki Lodge?

Mr. Deans: "The most logical place for everything is Toronto"—that is nonsense.

Mr. Lewis: What about Burlington? Half way.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Kingston has a cleaner harbour than Hamilton.

Mr. Nixon: Give it to Sault Ste. Marie or Sudbury.

Mr. Foulds: Float it on the water there.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Foulds: Gogama. Can you move Minaki to Burlington?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: The necessary facilities such as support motels and other very necessary facilities, to properly host a large convention of the type that we are talking about are obviously here in Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. Deans: Just keep building in Toronto—everything. That is a good idea.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I think that is the area we have to work on. To have a convention centre in Hamilton would be a good idea and I would point out to the honourable member—

Mr. Lewis: Diversify around the province for heaven's sake. Leave Toronto alone.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes:—that some of the unions have indicated to us this is where we should be putting it.

Mr. Martel: I thought you wanted to put it in Minaki, John.

Mr. Eakins: Supplementary: Is the minister aware that approximately 10 per cent of the membership of these international associations' conventions is made up of Canadians, and is he aware of the incentive which already exists to assist him in bringing these conventions to Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker, I don't think I understand the question. Am I aware of incentives to bring conventions to this area? I didn't understand the question.

Mr. Eakins: Mr. Speaker, 10 per cent of many of these international associations are made up of Canadian membership. I was just wondering whether the minister is aware of the incentive to assist him to bring them here to the province of Ontario?

Mr. S. Smith: That in itself is an incentive.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: There's no question that there are all sorts of incentives for the people who are involved in these associations and they are working very hard to bring these conventions to Ontario. There is no question at all that we want to work with them and to co-operate to the best of our ability. I think the member will agree that there has been a long discussion about the need for a large convention centre here in this area. Everyone agrees that there is a need for it and now we're in the first stages of getting everyone together.

There is a committee, under the chairmanship of Alderman Smith from Toronto, which is working very hard on developing the necessary design and the criteria for what sort of facility will be needed. I think we're making some progress. It's been a long time coming but it looks like everybody has got his act together.

APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAM

Mr. Cassidy: I want to ask a question of the Minister of Colleges and Universities regarding the piecemeal expansion of apprenticeship and training programs which he announced in the House today.

In view of the fact that more than 200,000 young people will be entering the labour force during 1978, can the minister say how many additional apprentice training places will be made available as a result of the programs that have been announced in piecemeal fashion today? What is the amount of the additional provincial contribution, if any, which will be made in this area?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: There are many questions in that one, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the number of positions that we will have will depend to a very marked degree on the type of programs that the community committees will establish. We have $8 million and, as I said in my statement, these are indeed funds from the federal government that will be applied to this program. I think it matters nought where those dollars come from, it's the kind of commitment that we've been able to negotiate with the federal government to go into that program. I think it's a very substantial commitment for a first-year program.

Given that fact, I am very hopeful that it's literally in the thousands. I can't say the precise number, but I also draw the honourable member's attention, not only is it important how many we train, but as the training exercises come to their fulfilment, it will be the spinoff that's so important in those production jobs that are entirely dependent, in my mind, upon having the expertise to compete in the international markets. With this kind of training program, I think we'll be in a far more competitive position to compete in the market and, therefore, many thousands of production jobs will result because of it.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary: If I can try and pin the minister down to some more specific figures, can the minister say how many apprenticeship places the ministry hopes to see created in private industry through the program of encouragement of voluntary provision of training places which his offices are now undertaking? How many apprenticeship places does he hope will be created in industry by that particular means and will there be any provincial contribution in that area?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Certainly there will be commitments. As I indicated in the statement, it is the responsibility of our ministry, as on ongoing project, to see that 5,000 employers that we intend to interview in the foreseeable future. How many of those 5,000 will then become involved in the apprenticeship training program is extremely difficult to say. The very fact that we're going out and promoting on a very direct basis to 5,000 employers, many of whom have never been involved before, should result in many thousands of training positions; but I remind the honourable member that it will depend entirely upon the co-operation of the trade union movement, of management, and of the educational people within the community. Therefore we are establishing the climate and I think a sufficient commitment to make that climate so favourable that literally thousands of jobs will result—thousands of positions, I should say, will result.

Mr. Sweeney: Given that the minister's description of the employer sponsored training part of this program highlights the locally defined community needs, how is he going to assure himself and the students who engage in this program their training will not be so narrow they will in fact have no mobility within the profession or within the trade?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: In the concept we have put forward today to ensure there is portability, the training costs for which we will provide aid to the employer will be based on the portability of the skills that the students will learn; not on skills they learn that are relevant to the employer only but on the portability of those skills. So we are not going to subsidize an industry; it is not on the basis of a subsidy to an industry, no; we are going to assist financially with the training that will go on in the industry, provided the skills which the employee, the trainee, has acquired are portable. Therefore, we think we can assist the employer in those costs and ensure at the same time that the trainee is not locked in and of benefit only to that one company.

We will maintain the normal standards of certification; that is taken as granted, I guess, because the trainee at the end of his or her program will be required to pass all of the normal tests. We have not only built in portability of training but we are building in some of the other concepts of modular training, and so on, that will advance the training program but not lose any of the qualities we already have in the system.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary to the minister: I would like to ask him with respect to one sentence on page five of his statement where he says: "Future developmental activity may be directed to other trade areas such as the hotel and restaurant industry." I am wondering if the minister has now changed his position, since he stated in estimates that he felt this type of training should remain in the community college system. Is he now supporting the Ministry of Industry and Tourism's position that a separate institute should be developed? Could he clarify that for us please?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I really can't believe that the member could read those kind of inferences into that statement. I don't think there's any doubt that officials of the Ministry of Industry and Tourism and myself speak with a united voice on the need for training in this area. I believe it can be done in the systems by all colleges and universities, and in the apprenticeship program; there's no doubt about that. I believe that the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Rhodes) will accept the basic fact that we need more emphasis on those trades related to the hotel industry. We don't really care who does it as long as the job gets done.

Mr. B. Newman: A supplementary of the minister, Mr. Speaker: Will the minister provide financial assistance to those corporations and companies which out of the goodness of their own hearts have implemented apprenticeship programs and now see him giving financial aid to new programs, whereas they have been carrying on programs for quite some time at their own expense?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Yes. I would want to say to the member, however, that it depends entirely upon the portability of those skills; that's a very important factor. Secondly, it will depend upon the local committee we are establishing in various areas to ascertain those costs and to approve those firms. We want it to be based locally, but if a firm has been active in the apprenticeship program, we want to encourage them to do more.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, given the fact that judging by this announcement only a few thousand apprenticeship positions may be created from the ministry with this program, given that there is no clear indication of any provincial commitment in terms of funding to this program, and given the fact that Ontario now has a $5 billion trade deficit in our manufactured trade with other parts of the world; does the minister feel this is an adequate response to the shortage of skills in Ontario's industry?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I can't for the life of me understand why the leader of the third party doesn't accept that an $8 million commitment is a sizeable commitment in the first year of any program.

Mr. Cassidy: Those are federal funds.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think it matters not to the taxpayers of this province whether those funds are supplied by the federal government, the provincial government or the local government. They are tax dollars that are going into a program.

Mr. Breough: I think they might have a comment or two.

Mr. Laughren: Where is your commitment?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Our commitment is in the personnel who will administer this program, and that has taken a good deal of time and effort. I have never said, ever, that there wasn't a very large financial dollar going into this program from the federal government. Indeed, that's fair enough, because there aren't many federal dollars going into our university and college systems. Why are we hung up on where the money comes from? It's the commitment. In reply to the member's direct question—do I think this initiative will prove successful in the long run?—yes. We have started down a road today that will lead to a very successful program in apprenticeship training.

We haven't got all of the pieces in place today, nor should we. We are asking the local communities to get behind this concept when there are funds available and to make it a success in those communities. I am convinced they will.

FEDERAL HOUSING PROPOSALS

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Minister of Housing. Can the minister indicate whether the government has signed, or is about to sign, a master agreement with the federal government on the new federal housing program package? If he has, will he table a copy of the agreement; and if not, will the minister be pressing for changes in the proposed program when the Housing ministers meet on June 14?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: We have not signed a master agreement with the federal government at this point. As I have said to the House on two or three occasion, we have some very great differences of opinion with the federal government on the proposals they have put forward at this time. As the Minister of Housing for the province of Ontario I invited my colleagues from the other nine provinces, including the federal minister, to meet with us here next Monday and Tuesday to discuss the housing problems the federal minister has brought forward, and also the community service package he has proposed. I would hope that by next Tuesday or Wednesday we shall have some conclusive positions, federally and provincially, in regard to the overall program proposed by the federal government.

Mr. Wildman: Where did you get that tie?

Mr. Mackenzie: You didn't buy that in Canada.

Mr. Warner: Does that thing glow in the dark?

Mr. Bounsell: He's killing our tourism with that tie.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Have you bought a new jacket, Claude?

Mr. Foulds: The Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) needs one like that.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Let me tell members it's made in Canada; that's better than most of them do. I wanted to be half-way between the Liberals and the rest of the members, with a little bit of polka dot now and again.

Mr. Cassidy: Given the lack of consultation over the new federal program, and given the considerable opposition which has emerged from co-operative and non-profit housing and from the financial institutions, and most recently from the Municipal Liaison Committee here in Ontario, will the minister undertake to push for a delay in implementation of the new federal housing package at least until the end of the year in order that these very serious objections can be both discussed and responded to?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Since they announced these new programs February 1, our position to the federal government, put very clearly, has been that they should not be implemented in this particular calendar year, that there should be a period of time for the provincial governments and the local governments, to find out exactly what it happens to relate to.

As far as deferment of the program is concerned, I understand from Mr. Ouellet that there will be a period of time before he brings on the new programs.

I am aware of the fact that financial institutions across Canada have had some very strong words in relation to the federal government's proposals. Indeed, at the mayors' and reeves' conference in Edmonton this week, there were some resolutions yesterday afternoon which strongly indicated to the ministers of housing and the ministers of municipal affairs in the 10 provinces that we should not proceed at this time to accept any of the proposals of the federal government until we have a program and a policy that will help the non-profits, the co-ops and the other housing developments in the various provinces.

That is the position that Ontario has taken since last January when the proposals first became known to us. We put that position very strongly on February 1 when the federal minister was present with us. I can tell members of this House that we continue to take that position. We are not prepared to accept what the federal government has proposed at this time because we do not think it's in the general best interests of the taxpayers of Canada, and more specifically the taxpayers of Ontario.

We do not think it's going to afford us the opportunity of putting up portable housing in position in this province. Obviously, if the program is not designed and retailored to meet the conditions of this province, indeed the conditions of the other nine provinces, it is really not going to satisfy what we believe are two important needs: housing and employment.

Mr. Duksza: Is the minister aware of the fact that if the current program ends on July 1, as planned, 811 housing units, valued at $33.6 million will not be built in Toronto alone? If, in spite of all the government efforts, the federal government persists in its intention to terminate existing programs in July 1, is the minister prepared to introduce an Ontario program to replace the old federal program so that the federal Liberal government can be prevented from destroying co-operative and non-profit housing in the province?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: As I've already said to the leader of the third party, it's been our intention to try to get the period of time extended to allow us to implement some of the newly designed programs with the federal government programs, that meet our requirements over a longer period of time.

As to the second part of the question; no, it is not my intention to suggest that Ontario pick up the slack created by the federal government. The federal government does an excellent job—

Mr. Warner: You'll do nothing.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: The federal government does an excellent job of implementing programs and sticking with them for a year or two and then dropping them and saying it's now the province's responsibility. Let me assure this House that we do not intend to take up the slack, for the simple reason that we do not have the financial capacity with which to do it.

Mr. Foulds: So you won't create affordable housing.

Mr. Warner: You just turn it over to the municipalities.

Mr. Cassidy: That's the real Claude Bennett speaking.

Mrs. Campbell: What are you doing now?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: A lot more than your federal colleagues

WELFARE RECIPIENTS

Hon. Mr. Norton: I have a response to the question raised on May 29 by the member for Bellwoods (Mr. McClellan), concerning the numbers of recipients of family benefits and general welfare assistance who are also injured workers in receipt of partial pensions from the Workmen's Compensation Board.

I'd like to answer by saying that there are about 1,307 family benefits recipients who are also in receipt of partial pensions from the Workmen's Compensation Board. Of those, about 614 are categorized as GAINS-D recipients. The amount of the allowance payments per month is approximately $289,482, based on our most recently available information.

Mr. Laughren: That's a disgrace, do you know that? You should resign.

Hon. Mr. Norton: As far as general welfare assistance is concerned, there are approximately 530 cases where recipients are also in receipt of payment from the Workmen's Compensation Board. The allowance for these cases is approximately $78,906 per month.

Mr. Martel: Why doesn't industry pick up its bill?

Mr. McClellan: Aside from the, I must say surprising and shocking extent of the number of—

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. McClellan: —injured workers on workmen's compensation, does the minister not agree that the amount of money that is being paid through your social assistance programs to injured workers who are in receipt of permanent partial disability represents a subsidy out of the general revenue of this province to employers in order to repress the level of their industrial assessment? Does he not agree that subsidy is inappropriate and that the way to pay for injured workers' pensions ought to be through adequate pensions financed out of adequate industrial assessments through the Workmen's Compensation Board and not through general revenue?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I would like to say, no. I do wish the honourable member opposite would learn not to ask me those questions which he prefaces with "don't you agree?" He should anticipate the answer. What I do not know from the data I have available—

Mr. di Santo: The Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson) is responsible.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —is the specific nature of the injury the individual had received—

Mr. Mackenzie: Why should that matter?

Mr. Laughren: Why don't you stand up to the Minister of Labour sometimes?

[2:45]

Hon. Mr. Norton: —that had caused him to be in receipt of some payment from the Workmen's Compensation Board. I do not know the individual degrees of disability, I do not know to what extent the injury received in the work place—

Mr. McClellan: It's assessed by the board.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —was or was not a contributing factor to the fact that the individual is now in receipt of benefits under legislation administered by my ministry.

Mr. McClellan: Will the minister find out?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Yes, I could, but I want to explain to the member what would be necessary. In order to try to obtain that information, I have been advised would require 12 monthly printouts on the computer at a cost of $250 per printout; and that to acquire the more detailed information—and that would only apply to our family benefits legislation not general welfare assistance—would cost an additional $3,000. If the member wished me to pursue that I shall, but I would still not have all of the information he requests.

Mr. McClellan: You are paying $350,000 a month in social assistance.

Hon. Mr. Norton: In order to get the information with respect to general welfare assistance, since the data we receive on general welfare assistance comes from the municipalities, I'm advised it would take approximately two months for us to be able to get that information.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON CONFEDERATION

Mr. Conway: My question is to the Premier. Following upon what some of us considered to be a very significant debate in this House last Thursday on Bill 89, and considering the Premier's statesman-like intervention in that debate, can he guarantee at this point or give us a commitment on behalf of the government that the first report of the Advisory Committee on Confederation will be brought before this Legislature before the adjournment, which is expected later in June, for a full legislative debate, such as was discussed and generally supported by him in this House on May 12, since many of the issues that are raised in that report are of rather immediate and widespread public interest?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think I indicated when I suggested there should be some discussion here that there was also merit in having this discussion when the second part of the report which deals with distribution of powers is available. I am hopeful that that part of the report will be available some time during the summer.

The honourable member really might be a little more direct and suggest that there is a recommendation in that report which perhaps he would like to see debated again in this House. I have no objection to that: I would only suggest, with respect again, that the bulk of the advisory committee's report does relate to the question of constitutional reform or constitutional change. While an initial discussion on that could be helpful, I think when it gets down to it, a lot of what is recommended in the report will of necessity, in terms of both its acceptability or otherwise by other provinces and whatever interest there may be on the part of the government of Canada, and certainly I would think in terms of the interests of the people with federalist leanings in the province of Quebec, involve the question of distribution of powers, which is very fundamental.

While I'm not reluctant to have a discussion, I'm just trying to be as constructive as I can and suggest that the second part of the report is necessary for a really meaningful discussion on constitutional change, which is one of the basic considerations in that report.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary: Since the report has been circulated, as he indicated earlier in May to other Premiers—in fact I think his statement indicated to all Premiers—for the Regina meeting in August, and since it's going to be referred to the special committee meeting at Glendon College, I believe in late June, would the Premier not agree that it perhaps would be useful to take that first report and have it discussed in this Legislature? Would he not agree that perhaps sometime in the very near future it is important for the Premier of this province to state, in this Legislature, the position of his government on these matters of vital public interest and concern? Would he not at this point in time—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. Conway:—assure the Legislature that he's prepared to do this before the House adjourns in late June?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I have already stated in this House my position in terms of general principle. That position has been and continues to be that on the "third option" that most people are talking about in terms of the basic issue facing this country, Ontario has taken the position and will continue to take it that we are prepared to see some change in our constitution, some greater measure of flexibility, some recognition of diversity of this country; although I restate, so that there is no misunderstanding in the minds of any members in the House, that we believe there is a very real role for a strong federal government in some of the very crucial areas. I don't want anything I say to ever detract from that philosophy.

I would also point out that once again we could debate in this House the concept of the House of the Provinces, we can discuss the question of appointments to the Supreme Court, and many of those other things. If the member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Kerrio) is looking for an appointment to the House of the Provinces, I think that we could do worse.

Mr. Deans: Not much.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We might also do better.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That has nothing to do with the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am just saying that while a lot of those issues are important I think most people discussing the issues facing Canada really want to see the suggestions on distribution. I say that having dealt in this area for so many years; I think that is really quite crucial to the discussion, particularly as it relates to the federalists in the province of Quebec where distribution has been, and I think continues to be, a matter of some concern.

I am only suggesting that I am not reluctant to have a debate but I would like to see that aspect of the report available to us. I think it is going to be difficult to discuss some of the other issues without knowing what the recommendations are on distribution.

Mr. MacDonald: Supplementary: With reference to the Premier's suggestion that we might postpone the debate until we have the second report from the Ontario Confederation committee on the redistribution of power, how does the Premier reconcile that with the statement on the redistribution of powers that was made to Premier Levesque some weeks ago by Joe Clark, on behalf of all existing Conservative provincial Premiers? Could we not at least have the benefit of that interim position that Joe Clark presented on their behalf with regard to the redistribution of powers?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think I could get that position for the honourable member if he would like it. My recollection of that position is that it really was stated very clearly after a meeting of the Premiers with our national leader in the great city of Kingston and formed part of that communique. I am only going by memory, but it stated in general terms the need for much closer co-operation and consultation as between the federal government and the governments of the provinces. I don't think it got into, as I recall it, specific suggestions as to distribution, but I will dig up that communique and give it to the honourable member so that he will be familiar with what I know of it at least, which I think formed the basis of whatever conversation Mr. Clark had with Mr. Levesque.

Mr. Foulds: You are not only a skater, Bill, you are a master of blimpery.

INCO SAFETY COMPLAINT

Mr. Martel: I have a question for the Minister of Labour which is really a follow-up on the question I put to her yesterday.

Despite the statement by Mr. Susil of her department, pertaining to the case involving Mrs. Duhaime, which says that charges against D. Brickett are being considered, did, in fact, Susil recommend to the ministry that charges not be laid against this official of Inco for a violation of the Employees' Health and Safety Act? If so, what bearing on this decision not to have charges laid against Inco is due to the fact that Susil was a former member of the International Nickel Company staff?

Hon. B. Stephenson: As I suggested to the member for Sudbury East yesterday, I would be very pleased to amass all of the information related to this specific incident and I shall present it to the House as soon as it is available to me. The staff is already working on gathering all of the information which is available. I shall be pleased to do so.

Mr. McClellan: In November? December?

Mr. Martel: Supplementary: Is the same Mr. Brickett of International Nickel Company now involved in a second violation against the health and safety act as it was passed by this Legislature some 18 months ago?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, that will be ascertained and will be a part of the report.

TORONTO ZOO AND CENTRAL REFERENCE LIBRARY

Mr. Kerrio: I have a question of the Minister of Culture and Recreation. He is here, Mr. Speaker; he just has to get to his place.

Mr. Conway: He only answers to Deputy Premier, the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough) notwithstanding.

Mr. Speaker: He doesn't have to hear from his own seat, just answer from it.

Mr. Kerrio: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now that a Metro committee has recommended that the provincial government take over the Toronto zoo and the central public reference library—

Hon. Mr. Davis: And a convention centre. What else is on the list?

Mr. Kerrio:—and excluding the possibility that the zoo might be included in the Speaker's responsibility, what is the likelihood of such a takeover?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Not very.

Mr. Kerrio: Supplementary: The first part of my question was, is the minister aware of the fact that a Metro committee has recommended the provincial government take over these two quite large responsibilities?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes.

PROVINCIAL ECONOMY

Mr. Wildman: In the absence of the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) I would like to place a question to the Premier. Is the Premier aware of a review conducted by the Royal Bank of Canada of the performance of provincial economies in Canada since 1970? If he is aware of that study, could he comment on its finding that Ontario has had the lowest growth in gross provincial product per capita in this country—lower than any other province?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I don't read all of the material from any of the banks. I am intrigued that the honourable member is reading that much material from the bank.

Mr. Makarchuk: Do it all the time.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Perhaps it is a hopeful sign that at least he is listening to others more than traditionally is the case.

Mr. Samis: Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would be delighted to get some further information for the honourable member as it relates to the growth of the provincial product on a per capita basis. I think it is fair to state, and the Treasurer has pointed this out, that we have had slower growth in the past two or three years than we would have liked, but then, of course, we have started from a somewhat different base than some of our sister provinces.

While I haven't read that particular article from the Royal Bank, nor would I debate it here in the House until I have read it, I can only state once again what the Treasurer said, that our own anticipated growth this year is somewhat higher than the national average. I think the figures indicate that the economy is improving; I won't say it is because of the enlightened programs of this government, but nonetheless the government has—

Mr. Martel: There aren't any programs.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The members opposite don't agree with that?

Mr. Warner: No.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say to the member for Sudbury East—

Mr. Speaker: You don't have to.

Mr. Foulds: Just answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —he is wearing two hats again.

I would say to the honourable member that I will get some material, or alert the Treasurer and discuss that particular Royal Bank article with him here in the House. As I say, I am encouraged that at least he is reading some other sides of the coin on occasion.

Mr. Wildman: Supplementary: Since the Premier is encouraged by what he calls the enlightened programs of this government, is he also aware that Ontario stood sixth in growth in expenditures on new machinery and equipment, only ahead of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland in this country since 1970?

Mr. Breaugh: We're struggling for parity with Newfoundland again!

Hon. Mr. Davis: Once again I will not comment on the particulars of the Royal Bank—

Mr. Makarchuk: Obviously the Tories don't know how to run the province.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I understand that the members opposite would have that point of view. The fact remains that in almost every respect, with the possible exception of Alberta, the economy of this province is relatively healthy.

Mr. Wildman: Saskatchewan is first, by the way.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is amazing that of the numbers of new people still coming to this country, the majority decide that Ontario is the place they would like to live and do business—

Mr. Warner: Yes, they haven't heard about you.

Mr. Swart: A number are moving west.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —and that is true of most investment that comes into this country at the moment, with the exception of Alberta, which has a certain natural resource that we haven't available to us here, unfortunately.

[3:00]

Mr. Peterson: To the Premier: As his previous answer pointed out, the growth of gross provincial product has been below the national average, but is he aware that our compounded annual accumulation of debt has been higher, in fact, than in the growth of gross provincial product? In fact, we are going into debt at a far higher rate than we are generating wealth? Is the Premier aware of that and what is his reaction to that?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think it is on a comparative basis once again, and I think the member will find that is not factually correct compared to other jurisdictions. I think in terms of the debt of the province, that is one reason the Treasurer has embarked upon a policy of restraint, which the members opposite support when it suits them and object to when it doesn't, which is politics, which we all totally understand.

Mr. Nixon: The Premier has never changed his thoughts on restraint, has he?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, I haven't changed my thoughts on restraint, I am just saying—

Mr. Nixon: How did we get the deficits we have?

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —you people support restraint one day; but if there is going to be a new Hydro plant—

An hon. member: Sensible restraint.

Mr. Breithaupt: That's a billion and a half dollars.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —in your riding you support it the next day. I understand the politics of that, but I would say to the member that while he may be negative about the economic prospects of this province, I am not, I have total confidence in our ability to deal with these issues.

Mr. S. Smith: You take credit for what is good, eh?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would only say that my confidence is shared by his father-in-law, who feels the same way.

Mr. Peterson: You know, Mr. Speaker, he is always dragging in my recalcitrant father-in-law—a Tory—and I am embarrassed about it—

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member should never be embarrassed by his father-in-law.

PROPERTY TAXATION

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Premier. He has been up so much today, I thought I might as well ask him another question. This has to do with property tax reform.

In view of the fact there has been a lot of discussion on property tax reform and market value assessment in the last 10 or 12 years, and fairly intensively the last few months; and given the fact that there are a lot of citizens in the province who are concerned with this matter, and that the cabinet has discussed it on at least two occasions the last month, will the Premier share with this House his thoughts with regard to whether this legislation will be introduced this session; and if so when?

Hon. Mr. Davis: To say that it has been discussed by cabinet on two occasions recently, while not disclosing what goes on in cabinet, is perhaps an understatement. Since I have been in cabinet it has been discussed with some degree of regularity, and I must say to the members that it is still a rather complex issue. I would only say to the member that we are grappling with this difficult issue and when there is a statement of policy to be made we will share it with the member and other members of the House.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary: When the property tax reform is brought before this House will there also be reform in the property tax credit and in the grant program, so that those citizens, some of whom are inevitably going to have an increase in their taxes, will get a greater credit that will mitigate the blow to them?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think that I really answered that question for the member for Waterloo North (Mr. Epp) when I said that when we have something to say on this particular complicated matter, I or the Treasurer would share it with all members of the House.

Mr. Laughren: In the fullness of time; we know.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Windsor-Riverside, with a new question.

Mr. Cooke: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: A new question. The member for Sarnia.

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question of the Premier, regarding the matter raised by my colleague from Waterloo North. As the Premier knows, the municipalities of Ontario would like to know as quickly as possible, because in the fall they will have to start preparing as far as the assessment department, the tax department and so forth are concerned if they are to be able to take any advantage of these things—

Mr. Speaker: Is that a question?

Mr. Blundy: Is the Premier going to let us know in time to take advantage of any reforms for the taxation year 1979?

Mr. Cooke: That is a supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Premier had already indicated that he had nothing further to add.

A new question from the member for Port Arthur.

THUNDER BAY POLICE REPORT

Mr. Foulds: I have a question of the Solicitor General. Can the Solicitor General indicate to me why he and his ministry support the board of police commissioners of the city of Thunder Bay in its decision not to release publicly the study of the Thunder Bay police department, when the minister had said in his letter to me, dated April 10: "Let me assure you that there is no suggestion in the report of any wrongdoing or corruption by any member of the force. However, certain changes in procedures are recommended which, if released to the public, could lead to the false impression that certain members were not able to perform their duties properly. Because of this possible position, the ministry supports the local board's decision not to release the document"?

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. Foulds: Could the minister not simply release the document pointing out and clarifying that position?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: This was in the hands of the local police commission. We have no reason to overrule or dictate to the police commission in the handling of that report.

Basically, it's an internal report. It wasn't the result of any particular allegation or claim or anything of that nature. It was an internal report for the use of the board and of the force. The board has its particular reasons as to why it doesn't want to make the report public, and I have no reason to disagree with that.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: Would the minister not agree that in general principle it is better to release such reports publicly, because keeping them secret simply breeds suspicion amongst the local populace? Would it not be better for the morale of the force, if what the minister said in his letter to me is true, to release it publicly? Would he not encourage the local board of police commissioners to do that?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I can follow that up with the local board. What I don't want to do is discourage inquiries of that nature. When there are any problems, whether of morale or otherwise, within a force, it is better to have this type of inquiry and this type of conclusion and report. Then the commission has an opportunity to implement certain recommendations of the report. However, I don't mind following up again with the chairman of that police commission to see what particular areas of the report he feels are sensitive.

MILK SUPPLIES

Mr. Riddell: I have a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Would the minister comment on the meeting he had with his federal counterpart yesterday regarding a possible solution to the rather serious problem being faced by the cheese factories in Ontario?

Hon. W. Newman: Yes, I'm sorry we were unable to take the member down but we had a full plane.

An hon. member: Get a bigger plane.

Mr. Warner: Listen to that Tory mismanagement.

Hon. W. Newman: I would like to point out that under the national supply management system in Canada so many million hundredweights of milk are allowed to the province of Ontario.

We went down to Ottawa to meet Mr. Whelan and the Canadian Dairy Commission to point out that we were encouraged for the last number of years to produce more specialty cheese in this province so that we could replace the imports that are coming into this country. We have fulfilled our obligation and that responsibility. We have increased the amount of milk used for specialty cheese by some 60 per cent over the last five years. As a result, it has left the industrial milk market for Canadian Cheddar cheese short by approximately 28 per cent of the quota allocations they need.

Yesterday we went down to present to Mr. Whelan and his counterparts suggestions as to how he could give us additional quotas here in the province of Ontario in order that we can fulfil our obligations to produce the cheese and keep a total dairy industry in this province. We had several suggestions for him. We made a suggestion that we should get a credit for interprovincial export of MSQ or industrial milk from the province of Ontario to other provinces. That would amount to about 39 million pounds of milk.

We also suggested we should have a credit of about 228 million pounds of milk that is exported as dairy products from the province of Ontario outside of Canada, which would not hurt the national supply management program.

We made several other suggestions. One very important one was that we were prepared to discuss with Ottawa its surplus removal program for powder and for butter. We were prepared to say to him, "we will take care of our own surplus here in the province of Ontario if you reduce the in-quota levy, which will not upset the national supply management situation across Canada, in return for adequate milk to produce the cheese we need." We had several other requests for MSQ, especially for specialty cheese, in order that we could do the necessary research, and we have export markets for that cheese if we can get the MSQ.

I conveyed to the minister in Ottawa that we were at a very critical point in the province of Ontario and this had to be rectified immediately. He has asked me to send him more details. I think he is now aware of the problem and the critical nature of the situation here in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Riddell: Supplementary: What was Mr. Whelan's reaction to the suggestions the minister made; and furthermore, what are the minister's reactions to Mr. Whelan's suggestion that we take some of the milk going into the butter industry and put it into the cheese industry here in Ontario?

Hon. W. Newman: It's very obvious that in the province of Ontario right now, any powder and butter that's tendered to the Canadian Dairy Commission as surplus in the course of the year is bought back from the Canadian Dairy Commission; thus we in the province of Ontario do not contribute to the surplus of powder and butter in the province of Ontario. We need that powder and we need that butter in the province of Ontario.

The increase in butter production in the province of Ontario in the last quarter has been about six per cent. In one of the other provinces, it's as high as 56 per cent, so maybe the Canadian Dairy Commission has some responsibility to tell the appropriate provinces they should be making more cheese instead of selling powder and butter.

ASBESTOS WORKERS

Mr. Mackenzie: I have a question of the Minister of Labour. As a result of the lethal effects of asbestos on workers and the overwhelming evidence that after 15 to 35 years the effects start to show, the Health, Education and Welfare Secretary in the United States, Joseph Califano, had the US Surgeon General send a letter to all of the nation's 400,000 doctors—

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. Mackenzie: —alerting them to the asbestos poisoning in their patients. Has the minister or the health and safety division of the ministry sent a similar letter to the doctors of the province of Ontario, or asked the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) to do so; and have we also, as they have done, formulated a public information campaign directed at asbestos workers in this province?

Hon. B. Stephenson: We have most certainly developed an information campaign directed towards workers in industry in which asbestos is used. The information facts sheets are published and are updated with regularity and submitted to the trade unions and employers involved for publication or posting for workers in those areas.

In addition, the vehicle that is being used to inform the physicians of Ontario of the potential hazards in occupationally related health problems is the Ontario Medical Review. The medical director of the Workmen's Compensation Board has been responsible for writing monthly articles in that review to inform the physicians of Ontario precisely of some of the problems they are facing and to stimulate them to consider the potential occupational relationship of certain of the illnesses they see in patients.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary: Given that now is the time many of the workers that were involved in the defence industry would be showing the effects, does the minister not think a direct letter to all of the doctors, as was decided in the United States, would be better than just monthly reports in the Medical Review here?

Hon. B. Stephenson: They are not monthly reports. Indeed they are specific articles related to the problems which physicians see.

There has also been a great deal of publication within the Canadian Medical Association journal, which is read by 85 per cent of all the physicians in the province of Ontario. Indeed we are using all of the methods that are reasonable in terms of bringing the physicians up to date with the problems which their patients may potentially be facing. If there's any possibility of using any other technique we will most seriously consider it.

We have also made available, or will be making available shortly to all physicians in Ontario, a booklet published by the occupational health and safety division which will alert physicians not only to the problems of asbestos but to all other kinds of occupationally related medical problems about which we are knowledgeable at the moment.

SPECIAL EDUCATION

Mr. Van Horne: A question of the Minister of Education: In the light of application forms for ministry special education summer programs arriving late at many schools, certainly in the London district—either late or right on the deadline date for submission—can the minister tell us what selection criteria were used for accepting applicants; and on top of that how many applicants were turned down?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I will be happy to get that information for my friend.

Mr. Van Horne: Supplementary: The numbers that I heard on the weekend were very high and distressing to me. In light of the ministry's stated priority for special education, I am wondering if any plans are being made right now to accommodate these many people who apparently will not be able to get on the summer program.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I will be happy to look into it and give the honourable member some information on it; then perhaps I can tell him whether or not any special accommodation is indicated or needs to be made.

Mr. Conway: Does the minister want to check with the Premier?

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

EDUCATION AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved first reading of Bill 110, An Act to amend the Education Act, 1974.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Wells: This bill basically contains a number of housekeeping amendments that are necessary because of the Municipal Elections Act, 1977. It needs to be passed before this House adjourns for the summer recess in order that the elections for school trustees can be conducted under that new act next November.

MUNICIPALITY OF METROPOLITAN TORONTO AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved first reading of Bill 111, An Act to amend the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Amendment Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Likewise, this bill contains several housekeeping amendments in order to bring this bill into conformity with the Municipal Elections Act, and also several other minor housekeeping amendments.

ANSWER TO QUESTION ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Before the orders of the day, I wish to table the answer to question 62 standing on the notice paper. (See appendix, page 3194.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

House in committee of the whole.

CORONERS AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 86, An Act to amend the Coroners Act, 1972.

On section 1:

Mr. Foulds: I'd like the minister to explain what the substantial difference is between the previous subsection 3 and the present subsection 3. There has been a change in that with regard to notification, I guess it is, to the chief coroner. Can the minister indicate to me why he felt it necessary to bring in this particular change?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Is the honourable member talking about subsection 3 of section 1 of the bill?

Mr. Foulds: That's right.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It's just a matter of the chief coroner being notified by the College of Physicians and Surgeons where the licence of a coroner for the practice of medicine is revoked, suspended or cancelled. This, then would affect the—you're not just trying to delay this thing a little bit, are you?

Mr. Foulds: No.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: That would have some bearing on whether or not the man would continue as a coroner.

Mr. Foulds: What I want to know, if I can, from the Solicitor General, is has it occurred in the past? How many times has it occurred in the past where a coroner has had his licence suspended and has continued to act as a coroner because the chief coroner had not been notified? Were there any instances of that, or is it simply a matter of cleaning up the act? What brought this to your attention that this particular change was necessary?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I think that would tie in with the amendment to section 1(1)(b) dealing with the revocation, suspension, or cancellation of his licence for the practice of medicine. What we are doing here is enlarging this clause; this is new. The coroner would cease to hold office upon the suspension of his licence for the practice of medicine. Before, we only suspended. Now, he would no longer serve as a coroner upon the revocation, suspension, or cancellation of his licence under the Health Disciplines Act. We're going a little further in dealing with his licence and we're also adding the provision as to notice.

Mr. Foulds: If I understand you correctly, you are now irrevocably withholding his privilege to serve as a coroner even if he has only had a temporary suspension of his licence. In fact, you're toughening up and making more stringent the standards for a medical practitioner to be a practising coroner. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: That's right. You must remember when a professional man is suspended, whether he's a lawyer or a doctor, the suspension comes after a very lengthy hearing by his peers, by a discipline committee—for example, the Law Society of Upper Canada. This is what happens in professions that discipline themselves. Therefore, if he is not fit to practise medicine or law we feel he should not carry on as a coroner.

Mr. Foulds: Do you have handy the figures of how many coroners have been suspended in the past as a result of the suspension of their medical licence?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I do not. That's something you can ask me in estimates.

Mr. Foulds: Is that vote still open in your estimates? Fine. Thank you very much.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. Foulds: I have a question for the Solicitor General. Has it been the practice of the coroner not to get assistance from the Ontario Provincial Police in carrying out an investigation under the Coroners Act inasmuch as it is not under the usual definition of the term "a criminal proceeding"? In other words, does this expand through an amendment to the Coroners Act the responsibilities of the Ontario Provincial Police?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: As the marginal or explanatory note points out, at the present time the provision is that the "police force having jurisdiction in a municipality shall make available to the coroner the assistance of such police officers as are necessary . . ." What this does is just extend this to assistance from the Ontario Provincial Police as well.

Mr. Foulds: Does this mean the Ontario Provincial Police may be called in as well as the local police where there is a municipal or regional police force? Is there envisaged a sequential order of calling in the assistance or is it envisaged that the two police forces may be acting together concurrently in assisting the coroner with an investigation?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I would think so. I don't see any reason why both police forces couldn't be involved. This isn't a revised section. This is a new subsection, and for example, as the honourable member knows, the Ontario Provincial Police assist the municipal police from time to time in joint force operations, such as criminal investigations, anti-racket squads and things of that nature. In a municipality that has its own force, and the chief coroner wants some assistance from the OPP, the new subsection would enable it to take place.

Mr. Foulds: I'd just like to bring to the Solicitor General's attention that through one act where we wouldn't normally look we have expanded the responsibilities and the duties of the Ontario Provincial Police. Presumably, their duties and responsibilities would normally be under the act governing that police force. Is there some way that a notation in that act can be made drawing attention to the clause in this act? It is one of those things that legislators and people interested in criminal matters might not be aware of. The Coroners Act isn't normally considered in investigating criminal matters.

Obviously, it's a valid use and a very commendable use of the provincial police. It would also, I think, lend credence and stature to the investigation the coroner's office is carrying out. It's just that it does seem to be an expansion of the responsibilities and it would be handy to have that notation in the act governing the police force and its responsibilities.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I'm not quite sure what the honourable member is driving at. As I say, what we're doing here is formalizing the existing practice. Any police force in a municipality shall assist the coroner in carrying out his duties. However, because of the extraordinary facilities of the OPP in the criminal investigation area, we felt it was important to have this set out in the statute; that in the event the OPP is required, either in place of or in conjunction with the local force, that revision should be included in the act.

[3:30]

It is my understanding that actually the coroner has been requesting the assistance of the criminal investigation branch in complex cases. It is really just a matter of placing that in the statutes and making it known to everybody.

Mr. Foulds: This would include the use of their laboratory facilities as well, I would imagine, which would be very useful in terms of the Coroners Act.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes.

Mr. Foulds: Thank you very much.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 2 stand as part of the bill?

Section 2 agreed to.

On section 3:

Mr. Stong: I have an amendment to section 3(3). If there are any amendments prior to that, perhaps they could be brought forward, but I am prepared to proceed with this.

In its effort to make the Coroners Act and its legislation more understandable, the ministry has to be commended in bringing within the Coroners Act those situations where a coroner's inquest would be mandatory. There is an effort to transfer from the Mining Act, I understand, a mandatory inquest in the event of an accident and a death arising from that accident which occurs during the course of employment in a mine.

The legislation as introduced by the ministry indicates a compulsory inquest will be held in the event of an accident resulting in death during the course of a person's employment at a mine, not including a pit or quarry. The minister has to be commended for this move. However, I have one concern. This is the only occasion in the act where an inquest is mandatory during the course of one's employment. Accidents resulting in death in pits or quarries should also be included. If we are going to concern ourselves with mandatory or compulsory inquests as a result of a person's death during the course of his employment, we must not only include a mine, but also such other sites as excavations and construction sites.

I am offering an amendment to this section, Mr. Chairman. I drafted this amendment keeping in mind the concerns expressed on second reading by my colleague from St. George (Mrs. Campbell) about death in excavation sites; subway construction, for instance.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Stong moves that subsection 3 of section 3 of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

(3) The said section 9 is amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

(4a) Where a worker dies as a result of an accident occurring in the course of his employment at or in a construction project or mine, including a pit or quarry, the person in charge of such project or mine shall immediately give notice of the death to a coroner and the coroner shall issue his warrant to hold an inquest upon the body.

Mr. Stong: Very briefly, this section encompasses all construction sites, including mines, pits and quarries. It does not include every place of employment but is limited to those areas where new and advanced techniques for carrying out construction work and construction safety is involved. Because of the advanced techniques in the construction industry, it would seem to me that we would benefit most as citizens of Ontario from an inquest that would be held and from any recommendations that would result therefrom in the event of a death in such a situation.

I would seek by my amendment to make such an inquest compulsory where there is a death arising out of the course of one's employment in the construction industry, which would include a mine, a pit and a quarry.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: We would support that amendment.

Mr. Germa: The minister said he would support the amendment. I would like to go to one specific word in the amendment and in the legislation, that is, the word "mine." There is no definition section in the Coroners Act. I presume that passage of this amendment to the Coroners Act would remove that section from the Mining Act which presently covers the situation.

Section 612 of chapter 274, RSO 1970, is the section which presently covers fatalities in mines. I would ask the minister to refer to the definition of what a mine means. I am afraid that the amendment is weak in that it doesn't cover those other parts of a mining operation as defined. I would like to bring to the minister's attention and the members of the House what the word "mine" means in the definition section of the Mining Act.

It says: "The noun 'mine,' except as defined in part IX, includes any opening or excavation in, or working of the ground for the purposes of winning, opening up or proving any mineral or mineral-bearing substance, and any ore body, mineral deposit, stratum, rock, earth, clay, sand or gravel, or place where mining is or may be carried on, and all ways, works, machinery, plant, buildings and premises below or above ground belonging to or used in connection with the mine, and also any quarry, excavation or opening of the ground made for the purpose of searching for or removal of mineral rock, stratum, earth, clay, sand or gravel and any roasting or smelting furnace, concentrator, mill, work or place used for or in connection with washing, crushing, sifting, reducing, leaching, roasting, smelting, refining, treating or research on any such substances."

I am concerned that the word "mine" in the minister's mind and in the Coroners Act is too narrow a definition when he says, "Where a worker dies as a result of an accident occurring in the course of his employment at or in a mine." The "at or in a mine" is a very narrow definition of the whole mining complex. In fact, probably only 10 per cent of the work force in a mining complex is on the site of the mine as defined by the minister. The hole in the ground is a very narrow interpretation of a mine.

When I include, as the Mining Act does now, roasting, smelting, furnace, concentrator, mill for washing, crushing, sifting, reducing, leaching and all of those other activities that go on removed from the mine site, I think what we have to demand of the minister is that he adopt in the Coroners Act the present definition of "mine" as enunciated in the Mining Act. There is another definition in the Mining Act, and I am quoting: "The verb 'mine' and the word 'mining,' except as defined in part IX, include any mode or method of working whereby the earth or any rock, stratum, stone or mineral bearing substance may be disturbed, removed, washed, sifted, leached, roasted, smelted, refined, crushed or dealt with for the purpose of obtaining any mineral therefrom, whether it has been previously disturbed or not."

I think the definition of "mine" is very important in this amendment, so that we do not lose those people who are presently covered under the Mining Act. I don't want to charge the government with trying to dupe us, but I don't see the definition of that word in the new act, and if we do remove it from the Mining Act then we have taken away from 90 per cent of the work force in the mining complex the protection they now have under the Mining Act.

Maybe if the minister can assure me that the definition of "mine" as enunciated in the Mining Act is what he terms it to be, then the amendment, in my mind, would be acceptable.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, the honourable member knows we mentioned in second reading that this provision is, in fact, being transposed from the Mining Act so that there would be a mandatory inquest in the event of an accidental death in a mine. It is my understanding that the coroner, in performing inquests, has been using the definition that is at present set out in part IX of the Mining Act in acting on these mandatory inquests.

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Chairman, I would like to extend my apologies for being late while the bill was debated. I want to express the position of my party in relation to that particular section which deals with mines. I don't think the position which has been taken by the government and the Liberal amendment are going far enough to encompass the whole situation which is taking place in relation to fatalities in the work place.

I move that section 3, subsection 4a be amended by deleting the words "at or in a mine" to "quarry" in lines two and three, after the word "employment" and before the word "manager" in line three, and the following substituted therefor: "in any work place including a mine, pit or quarry"; and at line four, the word "mine" be deleted and the words "work place" substituted therefor.

Mr. Chairman: I would remind the member that we have an amendment before the committee and I believe the amendment you are placing actually deals with the section now in the bill. I just don't see this as an amendment to the amendment because of the word change in the previous amendment.

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Chairman, if I can speak to that, I think the amendment introduced by the Liberal Party is not incorporating any work place besides the mine. My particular amendment is going further than that.

Mr. Stong: We say construction site, including mine, pit and quarry.

Hon. B. Stephenson: All you have to say is "in construction sites, mines, pits and quarries." That's all you really need.

[3:45]

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could enter the debate here. What happened was that the amendment presented by the member of the Liberal Party simply dealt with one very small sector, adding construction as well as pits and quarries; the amendment placed by my colleague from Dovercourt was a much broader amendment dealing with all work places.

Because of the nature of the amendment, and because the Chairman has had those amendments—at least those proposed by the New Democratic Party—for quite some time, looking at the contents of them, it would have been more appropriate to have placed the amendment moved by the member for Dovercourt first, because it dealt with the matter in a much broader way. We certainly would have hoped it would have carried. If it hadn't, then the amendment moved by the Liberal member dealing with construction and pits and quarries would have been appropriate, which are also the ones I had ready to move plus the amendment in two other areas.

Having taken it in the order that you did, I would certainly hope that you would find an appropriate way to continue with an amendment which should be in this act, so that it would be required to have the jury involved in deaths which occur in all work places, which is the effect of the amendment moved by the member for Dovercourt.

Mr. Chairman: I would say to the honourable members of the committee that I recognized the first speaker who was on his feet in regard to section 3 and requested to speak to the section.

I appreciate the content of the member for Dovercourt's amendment. However, we do have an amendment before the committee, and I just don't see how the member for Dovercourt's amendment amends the amendment. It amends the original section.

In the past, of course, we have voted on an amendment and then the committee agreed to go to another amendment. We could handle it that way.

Mr. Warner: That would seem fine. There is no problem.

Mr. Lupusella: That's fine.

Mr. Chairman: In the past, I believe, the committee has handled it in that manner; however, if the member for Dovercourt wishes to review his amendment and change the wording to fit into the amendment already placed before the committee, the committee may be agreeable to that.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Chairman, could I move that we stand down this clause while the members consider this matter and then return to it, say, after we've dealt with subsequent sections of the bill? Is that an agreeable procedure for the Chairman and for the minister and the members involved?

Mr. Chairman: I'm in the hands of the committee. If they so desire, would anyone care to speak to that point?

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that it be stood down until we have completed dealing with all the sections up until section 11, and that before we proceed with section 11, which is the next section, I believe, on which there is an amendment, we come back to this one.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: That shouldn't take long.

Mr. Chairman: Does the committee agree to stand down section 3?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Chairman: All right. Section 3 will be stood down.

Sections 4 to 10, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 11:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Stong moves that section 22 of the act, as set out in section 11 of the bill, be amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

"3. Notwithstanding subsections 1 and 2, where a person is charged with an offence under the Criminal Code of Canada arising out of the death, and the charge or any appeal from a conviction or an acquittal of the offence charged has been finally disposed of, or the time for making an appeal has expired, the coroner may issue his warrant for an inquest and the person charged is a compellable witness at the inquest."

Mr. Stong: Very briefly, Mr. Chairman, this amendment to section 11 is simply an extension of the principle that is already contained in section 11 of the bill. Subsection 1 indicates that where a person is charged with a criminal offence, that person is not a compellable witness at the inquest and this naturally is a protection of such a person charged with a criminal offence, so he will not be in a position of having to incriminate himself or find himself a witness at an inquest, when he is facing charges arising out of the same set of circumstances which are to be heard in a criminal court.

However, my amendment would indicate that in the event that criminal charges have been dealt with through the criminal justice system, that person can then be required to give evidence. In other words, he becomes a compellable witness at any subsequent inquest, and cannot hide under the veil that is provided in the section now, of not being a compellable witness at an inquest.

For instance, I am thinking of the situation where a person may be charged with impaired driving, or in the operation of a Towmotor at a construction site, causing death. That person may have pleaded guilty to that offence before the criminal court, and then by virtue of having not exercised any rights to appeal, the inquest would not have been held yet and he could be a compellable witness at a subsequent inquest, provided that the criminal sanctions have been completed.

As the bill stands now, a person who has faced a charge under the Criminal Code is not a compellable witness. My amendment indicates that the criminal sanctions having been executed and exhausted, he becomes a compellable witness at a subsequent inquest.

Mr. Warner: I have a couple of questions about this because the section as put forward by the member for York Centre appears to be contradictory to subsection 1 above, but more than that—maybe I misunderstood him—it sounded as though he were saying that a person could then in effect end up testifying against himself, and as the member is well aware, and the Solicitor General certainly is aware, in this country it's not very clear as to the rights the individual has in court with respect to testifying against himself. It's clear in the United States where they have the fifth amendment, but here it's not clear and there are circumstances under which a person has—I guess the closest thing you could get to having the protection in terms of not testifying against yourself is in some federal cases.

It just isn't a clear situation, and yet I think it's safe to say it is an issue which quite a few people in our society are concerned about—that individuals should not be compelled to testify against themselves. It's a good safeguard for individuals in a democratic system, in that at some point the laws should be changed to reflect not identically what they have in the United States, but at least something that is similar, something parallel. What I would appreciate, before reaching any decision on this particular matter, is whether or not the member for York North could—York Centre; sorry about that, they shift around from time to time—

Mr. Stong: Oh no, not for a while.

Mr. Warner: Oh, the member for York Centre is here. I wonder if he might clarify for me first of all his intent, and whether or not he sees that it is a difficulty and that it is not desirable to end up having a law whereby a person can testify against himself in a case. And, finally, could he clarify whether or not the subsection 3 which he proposes is in fact contradictory to subsection 1, in which case he might simply want to amend subsection 1?

Those are my questions. If it is in order, Mr. Chairman, perhaps the member for York Centre could respond.

Mr. Stong: Perhaps I could approach it this way. As the previous speaker, the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere, has indicated, there is an anomaly in our law in many respects. It is uncertain, in fact, in Canadian jurisprudence whether a person can be compelled even at a trial of a criminal nature to give evidence. The common law would seem to support that he is not a compellable witness.

In any event the Canada Evidence Act and the Ontario Evidence Act give a person protection by virtue of any evidence that he may give at any of those proceedings from subsequent criminal or civil action. So there is already protection afforded the witness under the Canada Evidence Act and Ontario's Evidence Act that would protect anything a witness might say in a given hearing from any subsequent criminal or civil action.

As the section now reads, a person who finds himself in the midst of an inquest and is subsequently charged or stands charged with a criminal offence is not a compellable witness. But once the criminal charge has been exhausted and his route of appeal has been exhausted, then in the interest of truth and recommendations, and in the interest of the betterment of society that person can plead the protection of Ontario's Evidence Act and the Canada Evidence Act and thereby be protected from anything he says in a subsequent proceeding. But, more important, he can be required, without being fearful of repercussions arising from a criminal trial or a subsequent civil trial, to assist the coroner from his point of view in making those recommendations from which we would all benefit as a result of an inquest.

Basically, any person who is charged with an offence—and it doesn't indicate whether the offence has been completed in court or is still outstanding—so long as that person has been charged pursuant to the bill as it reads, he cannot be a compellable witness. My amendment simply says that after the criminal charge has been disposed of and his rights to appeal have been exhausted, he can then become a compellable witness. He can still plead the protection of those two evidence acts, but we will have the benefit of anything he says for the purpose of making recommendations.

Mr. Warner: What about the contradiction; and why subsection 3 as opposed to amending subsection 1?

Mr. Chairman: Order. The member for Welland-Thorold.

Mr. Swart: There is another dimension to this that I would like to ask the minister about and I may ask it in some ignorance. With regard to section 11, am I to understand that if a person is charged—even though there may be the expectation that they may charge others—he can no longer be a compellable witness at the inquest to give evidence relative to others who may have been involved in the crime or accident, or anything of that nature? If so, then does it not deprive the inquest of a witness who otherwise might be able to provide very valuable information relative to others who might have been involved in the incident, whatever that incident may be?

[4:00]

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I assume the honourable member is talking about subsections 1 and 2 mainly, is that correct? Of the present section 22? Yes.

The provision is in the act at the present time, although we are rewording, for example, subsection 1. Instead of using the words, "where a person is charged with a criminal offence arising out of a death" we're amending that to read "where a person is charged with an offence under the Criminal Code of Canada arising out of a death."

There's really no change in the present law which says that only where there is a charge under the code would an inquest be held only upon the direction of the minister. When held, the act says that person charged is not a compellable witness. He may be a competent witness, but he is not a compellable witness. In other words, at this stage he wouldn't be subject to any type of incrimination. In most cases you'll find that the criminal charges would proceed before the inquest, in any event.

Section 22(2) uses the words "during an inquest" if a person should be charged under the Criminal Code arising out of a death. Then the coroner should discharge the jury and close the inquest. He should then proceed as if it had been determined that the inquest was unnecessary. But again, the minister has the prerogative of reopening the inquest upon the same conditions as provided in subsection 1. If there is a charge, that person, if he gives evidence, is not a compellable witness.

The amendment, as submitted by the member for York Centre, deals with a situation that arises after that—after the criminal charges have been fully dealt with, one way or another. The person then would not necessarily be testifying against himself but he would be giving evidence to the coroner to assist in ascertaining the cause of death and other circumstances that are required to come out of a particular inquest.

The honourable member mentioned the Ontario Evidence Act and the Canada Evidence Act. I also might mention section 34(1) of the Coroners Act where the witness in any event would be provided protection.

Mr. di Santo: I wonder whether the minister can clarify for me a point in relation to section 11(1). I understand the amendment which deals with the situation when the charges have been disposed of one way or another. But section 11(1) says that "an inquest shall be held upon the direction of the minister."

In a recent case, the chief coroner, Dr. Cotnam, recommended—I'll read the recommendation: "At the present, by arrangements between the chief coroner and the Ministry of Labour, an inquest is not called into the death of a construction worker on the job if charges are pending. We recommend that this procedure be discontinued and that, if after two months from the date of death charges have not been formally laid, an inquest should be called."

I wonder whether the minister can explain to us whether by regulation this aspect is taken into account or whether while charges are pending there is an indefinite time that can be considered for calling an inquest?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: All I can say is to repeat what I've said before. When there is a criminal charge directly related to what would be the cause or the main reason for an inquest, that is, arising out of a particular death, it is for the most part the practice of the coroner's office—I may be corrected in this—that the criminal charges go ahead and that they be proceeded with, before an inquest is held. The person who may be charged as a result of that death, if there is an inquest, would not be a compellable witness.

I'm not quite sure if that answers the honourable member's question, but there's really no reason to have two hearings or two tribunals, one quasi-judicial and one an actual trial, going on at the same time. It is better to proceed in many instances with the criminal charges in court, particularly if there is a direct relation with the person who's charged. That person may or may not be a witness at an inquest.

I would suggest that all this, as I've said before, is a matter of re-enactment of a few words of the section to clarify the intent that a criminal offence means in effect an offence under the Criminal Code. That is the real sum and substance of the amendment contained in section 11 of the bill, except for the amendment of the member for York Centre who is adding another subsection.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Are there any further speakers to this amendment?

Mr. di Santo: Probably my question wasn't very clear, but the answer of the minister doesn't clarify my point. My point was that since the chief coroner asks that this procedure be discontinued and that an inquest should be called, as he says, when charges are pending, after two months, I would like to ask the minister, why would the coroner recommend that? In the particular case that happened on September 2, 1975, at the Bell Canada building site, 226 Simcoe Street, apparently the coroner was unable to collect all the information and evidence that he needed.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I am not familiar with the particular case the honourable member is talking about. The honourable member knows that inquests are sometimes held six months or a year after the death which is subject to an inquest. Criminal charges are usually laid within a very short period of time, and the matter is brought at least to a preliminary hearing within a matter of weeks. So that's why these provisions are in the legislation at the present time.

There is no reason for any delay once the criminal charges have been laid and the case has been dealt with. However, as provided in subsection 2, if because of the investigations surrounding the case no charges are laid for some reasonable time, and the coroner's office and all those involved in the investigation of the case have sufficient information to conduct an inquest or to at least start an inquest, and during the course of that inquest a charge is laid against a particular person, then the existing legislation gives the coroner the power to discharge the jury and close the inquest.

I suppose this is because usually the criminal proceedings in the event that criminal charges are laid proceed prior to an inquest.

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Chairman, we are in support of the amendment placed before us by the member for York Centre.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Shall the motion carry?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Stong: I believe credit should be given where credit is due. The minister was very co-operative with this amendment and legislative counsel certainly did help in drafting it. I proposed an amendment that probably wasn't quite as clear as the one legislative counsel came up with. I thank them for their co-operation.

Mr. Foulds: They're very good chaps.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Chairman, you weren't in the chair at the time when the committee had agreed that upon conclusion of section 11, we would revert to section 3(3).

On section 3:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Are you now prepared with a new amendment or new wording?

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Lupusella would—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Fine, then we will revert to section 3.

The member for Dovercourt, if you have an amendment. There is also an amendment by the member for Windsor-Sandwich. Are these to be collapsed into one?

Mr. Lupusella: No, after this one, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Lupusella moves that the words "at or in a construction project or mine including a pit or a quarry," in the amendments before us be deleted and replaced by the words, "in any work place"; that the words "project" or "mine" be deleted and the words "work place" be substituted therefor

That would be an amendment to the motion by Mr. Stong. That will be in order. Is there any further discussion to that amendment?

[4:15]

Mr. Lupusella: I would like to speak to the principle of my particular amendment because it's important that the minister understand its content.

First of all the minister should know that the total number of fatalities from 1935 to 1977—and I think this statistical data is particularly related to mines—was 1,511. And I am sure no inquest has taken place in relation to all the deaths that took place from 1935 to 1977.

Our particular amendment goes further than the amendment placed before us by the member for York Centre. It seems that the minister is going to accept the amendment which was placed in the Legislature by the Liberal Party. I am expressing both my personal opinion, and the position of the New Democratic Party when I say that we are pleased with the content of that amendment.

I hope that with my statement I will convince the minister that this is important and it would be to our detriment if this Legislature did not act responsibly in regard to these deaths which take place in the province. During the estimates of the Solicitor General I had ample opportunity to express the concern of the New Democratic Party in relation to this important item, and how serious we are when we are talking about industrial deaths.

We have been voicing this concern over the years, but it seems that the government will not move far enough to eliminate this problem, which is a big problem for the workers of the province. When the minister suggested a particular amendment to incorporate deaths which occurred in mines, it was a welcome amendment, and I told the minister that during the estimates. I was quite pleased with the content of that particular amendment.

The government, and the Solicitor General in particular, is aware that the idea to incorporate that amendment in the Coroners Act didn't come from the government itself. It was suggested by the Steelworkers union, which through the years really has put a lot of pressure on the government to amend the Coroners Act to require a mandatory inquest.

I want to emphasize that the Steelworkers union is not really pleased because the government suggested to the union that they were going to incorporate pits and quarries as well in the amendment, and when the bill was introduced in the Legislature, there was particular exclusion of those two words. I don't think the amendment which has been introduced by the Solicitor General is fair because it does not incorporate the position of the union which through the years really put on a lot of pressure in order that this particular piece of legislation would encompass the principle suggested by the union.

Therefore, in the name of and on behalf of the union, I would like to place before the minister their regret in relation to this particular betrayal which took place when the minister dropped this particular piece of legislation. I don't think it was fair to take that particular position when the union wanted to incorporate pits and quarries, which was a reasonable position put forward by the union.

Besides that particular comment, I would like to convince the Solicitor General and the Liberal Party that, if my amendment is going to be passed by this Legislature, I don't think the Solicitor General should worry about the bureaucratic process that might take place in the coroner's office. That's not a realistic fear. Last year, when we dealt with the estimates of the Solicitor General, we were made aware that 27,000 inquests took place in Ontario—inquests that were not related to industrial deaths at all.

If we are going to incorporate the principle encompassed by my amendment, Mr. Chairman, let me put before you some statistical data in relation to industrial accidents that are taking place in Ontario; and I am talking strictly to the issue of fatalities. In 1977, we had just 226 deaths in Ontario; in 1976, the previous year, we had 297 deaths. If we are going to make a particular comparison in relation to the number of inquests that have taken place in Ontario and are not related to industrial deaths, we are talking about 27,000 inquests every year which are called to investigate unknown deaths that have taken place in the province.

I do not understand the position of the government. I also hope the member for York Centre is going to express the position of his party as well, when we are dealing with 226 fatalities taking place on industrial sites around the province, as to what kind of an extra bureaucracy is going to be created through the process of those particular inquests.

In the light of these particular statistical data, I hope that at least I am able to convince the Solicitor General that a mandatory inquest should be required in any work place in Ontario so that this particular problem will be thoroughly investigated to find out the causes of those industrial accidents. That is where the principle lies. I think it is important for the government to eliminate the problem at its origin. I think the coroner's inquest is going to play a really important role when an industrial death has taken place in any work place to find out what the unsafe conditions are and so that the government will follow the coroner's recommendations and so that improvements on those industrial sites also will follow.

During consideration of the estimates of the Solicitor General, I expressed this particular position before the minister was going to introduce this particular amendment in the Legislature. In some way he was completely shocked. He said to me: "What the hell are you talking about? How many inquests do you want to call in the province of Ontario?"

Mr. Foulds: He said that? That was a direct quote?

Mr. Lupusella: We have the statistical data which was released by the Workmen's Compensation Board. He knows the figures. He knows he has to deal with 226 fatalities. I think the Solicitor General, in co-operation with the Minister of Labour, has an obligation to investigate those fatalities in any work place in the province of Ontario, and to understand the origin of the problem and the unsafe working conditions which exist throughout Ontario. This way the recommendations which will come out from those investigations can be implemented so no other fatalities take place.

That's the principle which the Solicitor General and this government should understand if this government is really serious about approaching the particular problem of accidents which is becoming a disgrace for this government in relation to the number of people getting injured every year. I think that's the principle the Solicitor General should understand. We want to alleviate the situation which presently exists.

I think it's also a disgrace for this government that the Minister of Labour is not introducing Bill 70 in this Legislature in order that those particular sections incorporated in that bill be implemented as soon as possible in order to reduce the number of accidents in Ontario.

But, Mr. Chairman, I want to show my frustration that this government, when it deals with the accidents on the job in the province is not really serious about them. Otherwise, this government would do something about it.

To correlate this particular principle, Mr. Chairman, and to show the importance that inquests be called in any industrial deaths in the province, let's also talk about another side of the statistical data which is in front of me.

Since 1977, the total payments arising out of industrial accidents—and I mentioned those particular figures to the Solicitor General and to the Minister of Labour when we dealt with the particular item of accidents on the job—and occupational diseases increased from $260 million to $800 million in 1976. That's why you should be concerned about studying the facts which surround those industrial deaths in order that this amount of money may eventually be reduced.

Compensation payments to injured workers have also increased dramatically and have reached $17,000 a year in some provinces. Of course, we are not talking about fatalities in those statistics. We are talking about accidents. The principle which I want to emphasize in relation to that is how costly it is to the employers in the province when those accidents take place and when industrial deaths occur as well. There is no reason in this world to scream about this extra burden of a premium which is raised from year to year to the employers because the cost of accidents is increasing.

I think the main approach which should be used by this government is to study the unsafe conditions of the work place in order that strict recommendations be implemented. Then at least we don't have to see this financial disaster which is taking place in the province of Ontario in relation to fatalities and accidents.

I want to conclude my presentation of the subamendment to the Liberal amendment. I hope that the Liberal Party is going to sympathize with the position which we took on amending its amendment and that the government is going to respond in a positive way to pass this particular amendment because it is really important.

Mr. Stong: I think that I probably do sympathize with the position as held, but when the member for Dovercourt began his remarks he quoted statistics dealing with mines and the mining industry. The bill itself dealt with mines and the amendment that I have offered expands that to the construction industry.

I have one concern with respect to the compulsory nature of inquests in every situation. When inquests are commonly held or placed commonly, they become commonplace and are rendered really insignificant and no one pays attention to their recommendations.

It seems to me that if we are going to speak in the interest of meaningful recommendations, then we should be more careful when inquests should be called. Rather than fetter the coroner's discretion by expanding the list of compulsory inquests, I would prefer to protect the importance and the significance of recommendations arising out of inquests by leaving basically the coroner's discretion unfettered on every occasion.

It seems to me we do not need inquests arising out of death in every work place. The amendments that I offered, expanding it to construction where greater advances and technology and techniques are being employed every day, would satisfy the needs of our community and our society at this time.

Mr. Foulds: I would like to recommend to the House and to both the Liberal and the Conservative parties the importance of the amendment put forward by my colleague from Dovercourt. Let me put it very simply. A death is a death is a death. If that death can be avoided, then we must do everything in our power to avoid it if we can by a coroner's jury. Surely one of the major principles of a coroner's jury is to make recommendations to avoid situations occurring again that caused a certain death. Surely the area in which deaths are most preventable are those that occur in the work place.

I have had some direct personal experience in this matter of deaths that occur in the work place, in the pulp mill and in the bush. Two cases in particular that have come to my attention in the recent past as constituency cases from the widows could have been well served by an immediate and mandatory coroner's inquest. I say to the member for York Centre with great respect and with the utmost pleading to accept the expansion of the compulsory coroner's inquest in every work place death, because they are preventable.

In the two cases that have come to my attention recently, the widows would have been well served by an inquest in order to get their death benefits from the Workmen's Compensation Board. The evidence that would have come out and could have come out would have assisted them with their claims. In both cases, they are now settled. But in one case the young widow is still requesting of me—and I have had to advise her—that she still wants an inquest into her husband's death. She has made that request verbally to the coroner in the area. It is now almost two years since the incident, and for various reasons she has to make a formal request to the coroner for that inquest. I don't think she or her family should have to go through that. I think it should be an automatic process.

If we are talking about remedial action, basically that is the purpose of coroners' inquests: to advise government and whatever bodies are responsible of remedial action. Whether a death occurs in a mine or on a construction site, or whether it occurs, as I say, in the bush or in a pulp mill, that remedial action should be taken.

I want to point out that the figure my colleague from Dovercourt quoted: the 226 deaths were the total number of deaths that took place in the work place in 1977—he has very up-to-date statistics. We are saying to the Solicitor General and to the coroner's office, we believe it is worthwhile to increase your work load by one one-hundredth—that's all we're asking.

We're not asking for a big burgeoning of the bureaucracy. We're increasing the work load by one one-hundredth. We believe that economically that is worthwhile, because we believe the recommendations of the subsequent coroner's jury would avoid enough future deaths so that in crass economic terms—and if the government understands no other argument, surely they understand the argument of economics—the contribution that the survivors would make, the people who would not now die, would be beneficial to the province in economic terms. They would be contributing to the economy. We would not be having to pay the widows compensation benefits. I urge you to do it on those grounds. I also urge you to do it on humanitarian grounds.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I think this is a very important amendment to the legislation. With the absence of Bill 70 we will go some long time before we find in this House legislation that is more important to working people's health and safety. I for one would like to congratulate my colleague from Dovercourt for bringing this amendment forward to the Legislature. I believe that we in all three parties would be well advised to accept this amendment.

This amendment does not address itself to a large number of cases. The point has been well made with 1977 statistics that are quite accurate: we are not even talking about 226 deaths in that year, because 35 of those deaths were in the mines. Thus it is indeed much less than 200 deaths that are in dispute. If we accept this amendment and widen the scope to all or any work places, we shall be talking at the most, I would hope, of perhaps 200 further inquests in the province, and I suspect a good deal less.

The inquest is terribly important for one good reason: we hope that out of that inquest will come some information that will protect somebody else in a similar situation at another point in time. That's the whole purpose of an inquest, in my opinion; that by learning the lesson of a tragedy we can protect another workman at some other time.

Sure, it costs money. No one is going to stand up in this House and say that it doesn't cost money to have an inquest. This is one of those occasions when the members would be asked to put values in terms of dollars on human lives, on workers' lives. I suspect on occasion in this province there seems to be a difference between humans and workers, but that's another matter.

If this government, through its agencies such as the Workmen's Compensation Board, can blow thousands of dollars on those fatuous, self-serving, bizarre commercials directed at the foolish workman on the construction site, they can afford, and we the people of Ontario can afford, to have some money spent on something that will really protect working men and women in this province.

Perhaps there aren't too many of us in the House who came directly from the factories of this province to this Legislature. Before I came here I worked for five years in a factory. I've worked beside these men and women we're talking about today. They're my former workmates, they're my friends and they're my neighbours.

Mr. Mancini: Go back.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Remo, at least they would take me. You wouldn't know a working person if you fell over one.

Mr. Mancini: I think I would.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Those people matter a great deal to me personally. Frankly, I resent the implication involved here that we can't afford to shell out a few dollars to help those people.

I believe, as my colleague from Port Arthur said, that when we're faced with legislation like this that involves the health, safety and perhaps the very lives of working men and women, we have upon us as legislators a very deep moral obligation to support such legislation.

I would like to ask my colleagues in the Liberal Party, especially Mr. Stong, who well understands these matters, and the people across the way, especially the Solicitor General, who on occasion has shown some sensitivity and warmth towards working men and women, that those two parties reconsider their positions. I do believe it is incumbent upon us to do what we can today to help protect the health, safety and lives of working men and women in this province.

Mr. di Santo: I would like just briefly to comment on the amendment presented by my colleague, the member for Dovercourt.

I'd like to say I really don't understand the rationale behind the minister's amendment and also behind the member for York Centre's subamendment. In fact, I don't understand why it is that you want to restrict inquests to mines, pits, quarries and construction sites.

I think my colleagues have put the case quite clearly. The intent of an inquest is to find out why there was an accident and the circumstances of the accident. An inquest also provides the widow or widower with the Workmen's Compensation Board benefits; and what is more important, provides the Ministry of Labour with recommendations which will prevent future accidents. In the case I mentioned before, the chief coroner, Dr. Cotnam, provided the ministry with 19 recommendations, all of them directed to preventing future accidents.

Why is it that you are so worried about the discretion given to the coroner to initiate an inquest in the areas the member for York Centre is suggesting in his subamendment, but not in every work place? As was said before, we had 226 fatalities in 1977. Thirty of them happened in mines. So the number of inquests is not that large.

[4:45]

I don't think we should be worried about the time spent and we shouldn't be worried about the amount of money spent. We know the purpose of an inquest and its values in terms of saving human lives, preventing future accidents and also of saving money for the economy of the province. I really don't understand the worry of the member for York Centre or the minister's rationale in restricting the areas in which he wants inquests to take place.

I would really ask you to reconsider your position. Unless you give us a very strong case against having a coroner's inquest in each fatality in each work place, I think your position is wrong with due respect.

Mr. Bounsall: I rise, of course, to support the amendment to the Liberal amendment placed by my colleague from Dovercourt. Again, I'd like very much at this point to speak to the Liberal critic in the area and to the minister, to convince them to accept this. I guess it's the numbers which make a very convincing case here—27,000 inquests held per year. Those were figures which came out in the estimates.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Investigations, not inquests.

Mr. Bounsall: All right, how many inquests?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: About two hundred and eighty-two.

Mr. Bounsall: Two hundred and eighty-two in total?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: That's for last year.

Mr. Bounsall: Those are—

Mr. T. P. Reid: Not out by much.

Mr. Bounsall: Two hundred and eighty-two, eh? How long is the investigation?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I don't know how long. It depends on the coroner.

Mr. T. P. Reid: He's going to be our new Treasurer.

An hon. member: That makes the case even better. What are you talking about?

Mr. Bounsall: I can't make the case so strongly on the figures, but you then make the case in principle.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Certainly can't.

Mr. Bounsall: I just received some additional information from the Workmen's Compensation Board. In 1977 there were 226 deaths attributable to the work place. The total of all deaths in the work place was 226. Of those 226, only 182 were traumatic. In other words, there were 44 compensated work place deaths attributed to an illness or a disease picked up in the work place. We're proposing to ensure in this legislation that all of those 182 do, in fact, have a coroner's inquest.

I have no idea what proportion of those 182 were investigated and had a coroner's inquest associated with them—I would bet virtually all of them. All right, then I don't know what on earth we're arguing about or why the minister should, from time to time, appear so exercised about one compelling them. I understand—and this is the same document made by the member for York Centre—he would leave discretion to the individual coroner whether or not to proceed. The way one does this is by not requiring him to so do.

I would prefer to have it the other way. He's not required now and he has the discretion to go in and do it. The discretion used last year, according to the minister, was to investigate every one of them. Just to make sure there is no uninvestigated workplace death which should be investigated, take our amendment that they all be investigated and add another line to it, "unless the coroner has good reason to choose or decide not to." That will give him the discretion, and the onus is on the coroner's inquest to take place in a workplace death, or every workplace death, unless the coroner has good reason to choose not to have it.

I would sooner the onus be that way than the reverse as it would now pertain. I would suggest to the minister or to the member for York Centre that we would be quite happy to have added or accepted into our amendment one which says they will all be investigated unless in the opinion of the coroner there are good reasons not to have that inquest. It still gives him the discretion but it is a discretion which he must exercise, unless he has his reasons not to, rather than as at present in the act not requiring him to do so, but leaving it completely to his discretion whether to do so.

His discretion, based on the minister's figures for last year, has been wisely used. The coroners across Ontario investigated each and every one of them, we gather from the minister. In essence, we don't have that much of a problem. It is a case of where we want the onus. In terms of fairness, in terms of a traumatic workplace death or a death resulting from an industrial disease or an industrial illness, because those facts surrounding those deaths are to be reported to the province of Ontario or should be as a result of that inquest or are available to become so known, from recommendations flowing therefrom, surely, the onus should be to have them all investigated unless a coroner in his discretion has good reason not to do so.

That's where the onus should be. We would be quite willing to incorporate into our amendment, if the minister or the member for York Centre would feel it would be useful, to build in the discretion not to do so do that the onus is on the proper place.

We move these amendments with no feeling of mistrust or distrust of the coroners in the province of Ontario. Obviously, last year they investigated every workplace death, according to the minister. Therefore, we feel not at all uneasy about giving him the discretion right here in the bill not to investigate if he has good reason to do so. But clearly up front would be the requirement to do so unless he could state those reasons.

I would be interested to hear from the minister or from the member for York Centre that that additional phrase would make our amendment acceptable to either or both of them.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I suppose I could repeat a lot of things I said when we debated this bill on second reading. I will say again, however, it is important to realize—and we have a tendency not to do that as I noticed I did in reading Hansard—that when we say investigation or we say inquest there is a mandatory requirement on the coroner of this province to investigate all accidental deaths.

If he decides, based on the criteria of the legislation as to finding the cause of death and other circumstances, that there should be an inquest, there will be an inquest. If there is any question about how that person died, the circumstances surrounding the death, when, why, how and things of that kind, then there will be an inquest. Certainly, as has been the case with the chief coroner, when there is any mystery surrounding the death or anything that should be embodied in a
